The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D.C., March 28, 1934.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On January 4, 1934, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission requested this Department to secure a report from the packers showing the salary schedule of the executive officers and directors in response to Senate Resolution 75, Seventy-third Congress, first session. This request by the Federal Trade Commission was made since jurisdiction over packing houses was confided to this Department by the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

SENADO DE PUERTO RICO.

I, Enrique Gonzalez Mena, Secretary of the Senate of Puerto Rico, do hereby certify:

That the following concurrent resolution was unanimously approved by the Senate of Puerto Rico on the 6th day of March 1934 and by the house of representatives on the 15th day of March:

"Concurrent resolution to express to our President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and to the National Congress the gratitude of the people of Puerto Rico for the economic rehabilitation measures extended to the island, and to petition them to apply the rest of the national rehabilitation system to Puerto Rico

"Whereas the public treasury of the Government of Puerto Rico is exhausted and the borrowing capacity of said government is pledged for debts which were contracted by former administrations, and which prevent the present legislature from cooperating efficiently toward insular and municipal rehabilitation;

"Whereas the constitutional borrowing capacity of the insular government is almost exhausted on account of said debts, and that of the municipalities is in many cases overdrawn, which makes it impossible to borrow money for rehabilitation works;

"Whereas by virtue of the efforts and wisdom of our President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Congress made extensive to this island some of the national rehabilitation measures, others are in course of study and application, and it is not yet known if the rest will be applied, this island being an integral part of the Nation and entitled to receive the benefits that may be derived from the national welfare by virtue of such measures;

"Whereas insular agriculture, the fundamental basis of our economic system, is deeply affected by the present crisis, commerce is restricted by coastwise trade laws so that it suffers from the alternate rise and fall of prices on the continent, which is its supply market, our whole economic life depending on the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of Puerto Rico (the house of representatives concurring), To express, as is hereby expressed, the gratitude of the Puerto Rican people to their President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and to the National Congress, for the economic rehabilitation measures that have been put into practice on the island up to the present time, and to demand and petition that there be made extensive to the island all other rehabilitation measures that, according to our mode of life, our agriculture, industry, and commerce may be applicable without detriment to the insular economic structure for the country's rehabilitation, which will result in glory and honor to the national administration and in the profound gratitude of the people of Puerto Rico."

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the seal of the Senate of Puerto Rico on this, the 19th day of March, A.D. 1934.

[SEAL] ENRIQUE GONZALEZ MENA,
Secretary of the Senate of Puerto Rico.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I present a memorial addressed to both Senator HEBERT and myself. The memorial is also signed by 285 employees of investment houses in the State of Rhode Island. In their families are 505 persons dependent for their livelihood upon the salaries paid them. This memorial is presented as a prayer to the Congress to move with the utmost caution in its consideration of the proposed national securities bill now being considered by both Houses. It is the opinion of these people, all of whom have an intimate knowledge of the investment business, that their jobs will be sacrificed and the welfare of their families jeopardized, if this measure shall become law, as now proposed.

The memorial presented by Mr. METCALF and Mr. HEBERT, numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Rhode Island, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 2693, to provide for the registration of national securities exchanges operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails and to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WALCOTT presented a petition and letters in the nature of petitions from the Monroe League of Women Voters, by Edith C. Hammond, president, of Stepney Depot; Eleanor Stevenson, president of the New Milford League of Women Voters, of New Milford; the Ladies' Society of the First Congregational Church, by Eleanor B. Purple, secretary, of East Hampton; and Mrs. Blanche C. Oliver and other members of the Woman's Club of Willimantic, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of the so-called "Copeland pure food and drug bill", being the bill (S. 2800) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics; and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Local Union No. 37, Metal Polishers' International Union, of Waterbury, Conn., favoring the passage of legislation providing for a 30-hour work week, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial signed by Roger E. Case and other citizens of Bristol, Conn., remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 2926) to equalize the bargaining power of employers and employees, to encourage the amicable settlement of disputes between employers and employees, to create a National Labor Board, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of members of the Plymouth Congregational Church, of New Haven, Conn., praying for world peace, and for the placing of embargoes on shipments of materials and on credits to nations moving toward war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the directors of the Stamford Jewish Center, of Stamford, and Norwich Lodge, No. 309, Independent Order of B'rith Abraham, of Norwich, in the State of Connecticut, favoring the adoption of Senate Resolution No. 154, opposing alleged discriminations against Jews in Germany, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Connecticut Federation of Democratic Women's Clubs at New Britain, Conn., favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented letters and a telegram in the nature of petitions from the Committee on International Cooperation of the Roxbury League of Women Voters, of Roxbury; the Watertown League of Women Voters, by Louise Reardon, chairman, of Watertown; the Palm Sunday public congregation of Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, of Unionville; the Meriden League of Women Voters, by Mrs. C. O. Arnold, chairman, of Meriden; and Rev. Oscar Edward Maurer, pastor of the First Church of Christ, and several other officers and members of that church, of New Haven, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Ladies' Aid Society and the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Kensington, and the Woman's Home Missionary Society of New London, in the State of Connecticut, favoring the passage of the so-called "Patman bill", being House bill 6097, providing higher moral standards for films entering interstate and foreign commerce, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the memorial of Rev. T. J. Keena Branch, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Bristol, Conn., remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 1842) to amend sections 211, 245, and 312 of the Criminal Code, as amended (relating to birth control), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CARRIAGE OF AIR MAIL

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent to have read and then referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce a very short letter from the Air Line Pilots' Association with reference to Senate bill 2762, now pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee.

There being no objection, the letter was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

CHICAGO, March 21, 1934.

Senator HUGO L. BLACK,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BLACK: The Pilots Association has received a copy of your bill, S. 2762, and has carefully studied same.

We are of the opinion that this is a very fine move to help clean up air commerce in this country. For instance, if the Post Office officials, the Department of Commerce officials, and, in fact, anyone connected with official Washington can continue to secure free passes on the air lines, they will continue to be obligated to them. Therefore, if your bill is not passed, your efforts to clean up the industry will fall short, because it takes very little imagination and foresight to see that a politically appointed Government official having to do with aviation, the air mail, or any phase of the air lines will be obligated after accepting free passes to visit distant relatives, go on a hunting trip, etc. Consequently, when the occasion arises to make a decision relative to control or regulation of these air lines or any phase of air commerce, the official having accepted the passes will find himself in a position obligated to decide in favor of the companies.

I have asked our executive representative, Mr. Edward G. Hamilton, to call this bill to the attention of other representatives in Washington in the interest of a better industry. I urge that you make every effort to see that this bill becomes law because its significance to your aims is far reaching.

Sincerely yours,

AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION,

REVISION OF AIR-MAIL LAWS—REFERENCE OF A BILL

The bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws was ordered to be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2816) to extend the time for the refunding of certain taxes erroneously collected from certain building-and-loan associations, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 572) thereon.

Mr. OVERTON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2834) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to acquire a site for a lighthouse depot at New Orleans, La., and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 573) thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 2922) to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the circulation of reading matter among the blind", approved April 27, 1904, and acts supplemental thereto, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 575) thereon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 7483) to provide minimum pay for postal substitutes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 576) thereon.

TERRITORIAL EXPANSION MEMORIAL COMMISSION

Mr. BARKLEY. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Joint Resolution 93 and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 93) authorizing the creation of a Federal memorial commission to consider and formulate plans for the construction, on the western bank of the Mississippi River, at or near the site of old St. Louis, Mo., of a permanent memorial to the men who made possible the territorial expansion of the United States, particularly President Thomas Jefferson and his aids, Livingston and Monroe, who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase, and to the great explorers, Lewis and Clark, and the hardy hunters, trappers, frontiersmen, and pioneers and others who contributed to the territorial expansion and development of the United States of America, as follows:

Whereas Thomas Jefferson, as President of the United States, insured, through the Louisiana Purchase and the Lewis and Clark Expedition, the expansion of our national domain to the Pacific Ocean; and

Whereas the early exploration and occupancy of these vast territorial additions of diversified climate and great riches, down the Ohio and up the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers and over the Santa Fe Trail and the Oregon Trail to the Pacific, stirred and broadened the Nation to a vision of our safety against encroachment from without and of our economic independence from within, that would come with a rounding out of the national boundary by the annexation of Texas and the acquisition of California; and

Whereas the national expansion of our country westward from its original confines along the eastern seaboard to include a continental empire stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific is due in large part to the vision and genius of Thomas Jefferson and the other patriotic citizens who worked to the same end; and

Whereas there exists no adequate permanent national memorial to Thomas Jefferson, the Louisiana Purchase, the Lewis and Clark Expedition, or the other important movements and achievements connected therewith in the Mississippi Valley or elsewhere in the United States; and

Whereas the American people feel a deep debt of gratitude to Thomas Jefferson and all those who contributed to the territorial expansion of our Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a commission, to be known as the "United States Territorial Expansion Memorial Commission" (hereinafter designated as the "United States Commission"), for the purpose of considering and formulating plans for designing and constructing a permanent memorial on the Mississippi River, at St. Louis, Mo., said Commission to be composed of 15 commissioners, as follows: 3 persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, 3 Senators by the President of the Senate, 3 Members of the House of Representatives by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and 6 members of the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association to be selected by such association.

SEC. 2. The United States Commission may, in its discretion, accept from any source, public or private, money or property to be used for the purpose of making surveys and investigations, formulating, preparing, and considering plans and estimates for the improvement, construction, or other expenses incurred, or to be incurred.

SEC. 3. The United States shall not be held liable for any obligation or indebtedness incurred by the United States Commission, the State of Missouri, the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association, the city of St. Louis, Mo., or any other agency or officer, employee or agent of them, or any of them, for any purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say that no appropriation is involved; the joint resolution merely provides for the appointment of a commission.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

REVISION OF AIR-MAIL LAWS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report back favorably with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws, and I submit a report (No. 574) thereon.

I ask consent that the reported amendment in the nature of a substitute be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws, and in lieu thereof to insert:

"That the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 259, 260; U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, secs. 464, 465c, 465d, and 465f), and the sections amended thereby are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The term 'person', as used herein, is defined so as to include within its meaning all persons, firms, partnerships, corporations, or associations.

"SEC. 3. The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by airplane between such points as he may designate, and for periods of not exceeding 3 years, to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guaranty for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement at fixed rates per airplane-mile, with a definite weight basis of 1 cubic foot of space being considered as the equivalent of 10 pounds of air mail: Provided, That where the Postmaster General holds that a low bidder is not responsible, such bidder shall have the right to appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission, under rules and regulations to be established by the said Commission, which shall speedily determine the issue, and its decision shall be final: Provided further, That the base rate of pay which may be bid and accepted in awarding such contracts shall in no case exceed 30 cents per airplane-mile for transporting a mail load not exceeding 300 pounds. Payment for transportation shall be at the base rate fixed in the contract for the first 300 pounds of mail or fraction thereof plus one tenth of such base rate for each additional 100 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, computed at the end of each calendar month on the basis of the average mail load carried per mile over the route during such month, except that in no case shall payment exceed 40 cents per airplane-mile: Provided further, That no contract or interest therein shall be sold, assigned, or transferred by the person to whom such contract is given, to any other person without the approval of the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission; and upon any such transfer without such approval, the original contract, as well as such transfer, shall become null and void: Provided further, That if, in the opinion of the Postmaster Gener_l, the public interest requires it, he may grant an extension of any route, for a distance not in excess of 100 miles, and only one such extension shall be granted to any one person, and the rate of pay for such extension shall not be in excess of the contract rate on that route: Provided further, That the Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary and secondary routes and may include at least four transcontinental routes, extending to termini, as nearly as practicable, on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, as primary routes. All other routes shall be secondary routes. The character of the designation of such routes shall be published in the advertisements for bids, which bids may be asked for in whole or in part of such routes.

"SEC. 4. The Postmaster General shall cause advertisements of air-mail routes to be conspicuously posted at each such post office that is a terminus of the route named in such advertisement, for at least 30 days, and a notice thereof shall be published at least once a week for 4 consecutive weeks in some daily newspaper of general circulation published in the cities that are the termini for the route, before the time of the opening of bids.

"SEC. 5. After the bids are opened, the Postmaster General may grant to a successful bidder a period of not more than 6 months from the date of award of the contract to take the steps necessary to qualify for mail services under the terms of this act: Provided, That at the time of the award the successful bidder executes an adequate bond with sufficient surety, guaranteeing and assuring that within such period said bidder will fully qualify under the act faithfully to execute and to carry out the terms of the contract: Provided further, That if there is a failure so to qualify the amount designated in the bond will be forfeited and paid to the United States of America.

"SEC. 6. The Inserstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed to fix and determine, within 6 months prior to the expiration date of any and every contract made under this act, and at all events at a period not later than 4 years from the date of the passage of this act, the public convenience and necessity for all air-transport routes and the fair and reasonable future rates of compensation for the transportation of such mail matter by airplane common carriers and the service connected therewith, but not in excess of the rates herein provided for, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates or compensation, and to publish the same, and orders so made and published shall continue in force until changed by the Commission after due notice and hearing.

"All provisions of section 5 of the act of July 28, 1916 (39 Stat. 412), relating to the procedure and administrative detail for the adjustment of rates for carriage of mail by railroads shall be applicable to the adjustment rates for transportation of mail by airplane under this act so far as consistent with the provisions of this act.

"In fixing and determining the fair and reasonable rates of compensation for such transportation of mail matter by airplane, the Commission shall not include in such rates, or provide in addition thereto, any compensation by way of subsidy or other similar payment.

"SEC. 7. It shall be unlawful for any person, or any officer thereof, holding an air-mail contract, to buy, acquire, control, or own, directly or indirectly, any interest, evidenced by stock ownership or otherwise, in any other person, if such other person is engaged, directly or indirectly, in any phase of the aviation industry.

"It shall be unlawful for any person, or any officer thereof, engaged, directly or indirectly, in any phase of the aviation industry to buy, acquire, control, or own, directly or indirectly, any interest evidenced by stock ownership or otherwise, in any person holding a mail contract.

"No person shall be eligible to bid for or hold an air-mail contract if when operations are begun under the contract, or thereafter, it has an officer, or another, who has theretofore entered into any unlawful combination or conspiracy to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mails by airplane; or which pays an officer, or another, as a salary, including any other compensation, either directly or indirectly, a sum in excess of $17,500 per annum for full-time service.

"'Officer' as used in this section, includes a director, trustee, or whoever may individually, or in connection with others, assist in the management of any person as defined in this act.

"No person who violates any provision of this section shall be eligible to bid on or hold any air-mail contract.

"The prohibitions expressed in this section shall apply to holding companies, air-mail transportation companies, including all such persons or companies as may be engaged in the manufacture or sale of airplanes, parts of airplanes, accessories, or other materials, or articles used in connection with air-mail transportation; and shall also apply to subsidiaries, associates, affiliates, or other persons controlled by interlocking stock ownership or otherwise: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prohibit any persons holding an air-mail contract, buying, leasing, or owning, in whole or in part, a landing field or equipment thereon.

"SEC. 8. Any company alleging to hold a claim against the Government on account of any mail contract that may have heretofore been annulled may prosecute such claim as it may have against the United States for the cancelation of such contract in the Court of Claims of the United States: Provided, That such suit be brought within 1 year from the date of the passage of this act; and any person not ineligible under the terms of this act who qualifies under the other requirements of this act shall be eligible to contract for carrying air mail, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3950 of the Revised Statutes (act of June 8, 1872).

"SEC. 9. Each person desiring to bid on air-mail contracts shall be required to furnish in its bid a list of all the stockholders holding more than 5 percent of its entire capital stock and of its directors, and a statement covering the financial set-up, including a list of assets and liabilities; and in the case of a corporation, the original amount paid to such corporation for its stock, and whether paid in cash, and if not paid in cash a statement for what such stock was issued. Such information and the financial responsibility of such bidder, as well as the bond offered, may be taken into consideration by the Postmaster General in determining the qualifications of the bidder.

"SEC. 10. All persons holding air-mail contracts shall be required to keep their books, records, and accounts under such regulations as may be promulgated by the Postmaster General, and he is hereby authorized to examine and audit the books, records, and accounts of such contractors and to require a full financial report under such regulations as he may prescribe.

"SEC. 11. Before the establishment and maintenance of an air-mail route the Postmaster General shall notify the Secretary of Commerce, who thereupon shall certify to the Postmaster General the character of the equipment to be employed and maintained on each air-mail route. In making this determination the Secretary of Commerce, in his specifications furnished to the Postmaster General, shall determine only the speed, load capacity, and safety features and safety devices on airplanes to be used on the route, which said specifications shall be included in the advertisement for bids.

"SEC. 12. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to prescribe the maximum flying hours of pilots on air-mail lines, and safe operation methods on such lines, and is further authorized to initiate and approve agreements between air-mail operating companies and their pilots for retirement benefits to such pilots and mechanics. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to prescribe all necessary regulations to carry out the provisions of this section and section 10 of this act.

"SEC. 13. It shall be a condition upon the awarding and holding of any air-mail contract that the rate of compensation for all pilots, mechanics, and laborers employed by the holder of such contract shall be not less than the rate of compensation paid by air-mail-line operators during 1933, as modified by decisions of the National Labor Board. This section shall not be construed as restricting the right of collective bargaining on the part of any such employee.

"SEC. 14. In order to improve national defense, promote the art of flying, and secure for air-mail and military and naval pilots the benefits of training in both military and commercial aviation a committee of not more than seven members, consisting of representatives of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the air-mail contractors, and of the air-mail pilots, to be designated in such manner as the Postmaster General may determine, is authorized to provide for an interchange of personnel, so that air-mail pilots who hold commissions as reserve officers in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps may be called into active service with their respective branches, and air pilots who are regular or reserve officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps may be detailed by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, for training in air-mail flying. Such interchange of personnel shall not operate to reduce the pay, emoluments, or privileges of any pilot of an air-mail contractor, except that any air-mail pilot who is a reserve officer when called into active service under such interchange shall not be entitled to pay from the air-mail contractor during such active service.

"SEC. 15. All commissioned officers who are detailed for training in air-mail flying shall receive from the United States the pay, including flying pay and other allowances, now authorized in accordance with their military or naval rank, and, while detailed to such duty, shall also be paid the same rate per diem as is now payable to civilian employees of the United States under the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended. The performance by military or naval personnel of duty under this act shall in no way disturb or change their status under their respective commissions, warrants, or enlistments in their branches of the service, or any right, privilege, benefit, or responsibility growing out of such status.

"SEC. 16. All persons holding air-mail contracts, and who may employ civilian pilots and/or copilots, who now hold, or who may hereafter hold, commissions in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps Reserve, shall, upon request of such pilots and/or copilots, grant them leave of absence but not during vacation, of not to exceed 1 month each year, when such pilots and/or copilots may be called to Government training duty with their respective branches of the service, under their respective commissions, for such period: Provided, That all Reserve officers performing Government duty with their respective branches of the service shall be deemed to be in the Government military service, and, if injured or killed while on such active duty, such officer and/or his dependents and beneficiaries shall be entitled to the same benefits as in the case of officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps and/or their dependents and beneficiaries.

"SEC. 17. The Federal Radio Commission shall give equal facilities in the allocation of radio frequencies to those airplanes carrying mail and/or passengers during the time the contract is in effect.

"SEC. 18. It shall be unlawful for the contractor of any air-mail route to hold any other contract, or for air-mail contractors competing in parallel routes to merge or enter into any agreement, express or implied, which may result in common control or ownership.

"SEC. 19. The Postmaster General may provide service to Canada within 150 miles of the international boundary line, over domestic routes which are now or may hereafter be established and may authorize the carrying of either foreign or domestic mail, or both, to and from any points on such routes and make payment for services over such routes out of the appropriation for the domestic Air Mail Service: Provided, That this section shall not be construed as repealing the authority given by the act of March 2, 1929 (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, sec. 465a).

"SEC. 20. The Postmaster General may cause any contract to be canceled for disregard of or failure by the contractor to comply with the provisions of law herein contained and for any conspiracy or acts designed to defraud the United States with respect to such contracts. This provision is cumulative to other remedies now provided by law.

"SEC. 21. Whoever shall enter into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mail under this act, or shall make any agreement, or give or perform, or promise to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person or concern not to bid for any contract pursuant to this act, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"SEC. 22. Section 3 of the act of February 2, 1925 (43 Stat. 805), as amended (39 U.S.C., sec. 463, supp. VII), is amended so as to read as follows:

"'Air-mail postage rates shall be 6 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof.'

"SEC. 23. If any person shall willfully or knowingly violate any provision of this act, his contract, if one shall have been awarded to him, shall be forfeited, and such person shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or be imprisoned for not more than 5 years."

REPORT OF PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION (S.DOC. NO. 167)

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the letter of the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 190, a report of the business of the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works for the period ended February 15, 1934, reported favorably thereon with the recommendation that it, with the accompanying report, be printed as a document; and

On motion by Mr. HAYDEN, it was

RETIREMENT SYSTEM FOR RAILROAD EMPLOYEES

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, a subcommittee of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee has had under consideration Senate bills nos. 1529 and 817, the former introduced by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the latter by myself.

At a subcommittee meeting this morning it was decided to report back to the full committee a revised bill involving the important principles of the two bills as originally introduced, together with a foreword or explanatory note, in which Senator WAGNER joins with me, and which gives the set-up of the retirement system for railway employees, explaining how the fund is created and maintained, and the payments are to be made by the employer and employee, which, from a retirement-insurance point of view, is more or less based upon the compensation idea, and is constructive, impressive, and convincing as to its merit.

This bill establishes the principle that industries shall provide for human depreciation as they have for years provided for property depreciation. The enactment of this measure will insure workers who have contributed 30 years' service to the success and operation of industries they will be taken care of in their old age without charity.

This bill will permit of the immediate retirement of 100,000 aged workers and the immediate employment of 100,000 unemployed railroad workers.

I ask unanimous consent to offer and introduce the new bill on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and myself and have it referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

I further ask that the bill may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, together with the explanatory note submitted and also that it may be printed for distribution, together with the explanatory note attached to it, for the benefit of those who do not care to make a technical study of all the facts and figures necessary to understand the workings of such pension systems.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 3231) to provide a retirement system for railroad employees, to provide unemployment relief, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to provide a retirement system for railroad employees, to provide unemployment relief, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc.

SECTION 1. As used in this act:

(a) The term "carrier" means any railroad company, express company, and sleeping-car company, or other operator of transportation facilities, whether under private or Government ownership or operation, subject to the Railway Labor Act or the Interstate Commerce Act, and any subsidiary or auxiliary services used by or operated in connection with any such carrier.

(b) The term "employee" means each person who is in the service of any carrier as defined herein, or who on January 1, 1932, or thereafter, was in such service or had or now has the right to reinstatement to such service, and each person who, having had heretofore the status of being in such service, shall have such status at or after the effective date of this act, and includes each officer or representative of employee organizations related to the service who during or following employment by any carrier is engaged in such representative service in behalf of employees.

(c) The term "board" means the Railroad Retirement Board hereby created.

(d) The term "Commission" means the Interstate Commerce Commission.

(e) The term "annuity" means regular payments at the end of each completed month during retirement, ceasing at death or at resumption of compensated service.

(f) The term "service" means the employment relation between an employee and a carrier or an employee organization.

(g) The term "service period" means, as to any employee, the period beginning with his entering the service subsequent to the effective date of this act, or prior thereto for employees at such date, and shall be the sum total of such service for one or more carriers or employee organizations, whether or not continuously performed.

(h) The term "retirement" means the status of cessation of compensated service.

(i) The term "age" means age at the latest attained birthday.

(j) The term "disability" means a condition under which an employee is totally and presumably permanently unable to discharge the duties of his regular occupation by reason of an accident or injury sustained or an occupational disease incurred in the course of his service.

(k) The term "carrier contribution" means the payment to be made by each carrier.

(l) The term "employee contribution" means the payment to be made by each employee during service after the effective date.

(m) The term "effective date" means the first day of the second month after the taking effect of this act.

(n) The term "Railroad Retirement Act" means and may be used in citing his act and subsequent amendments thereto.

SEC. 2. Each retired employee, having a service period of 5 years or more, and having attained the age of 65 years, or having completed a service period of 30 years, shall be paid an annuity, to begin on a date specified in a written application which date shall not be more than 60 days before the making of the application nor less than 6 months after the effective date of this act. Such annuity shall be based upon the service period of the employee and shall be the sum of the amounts determined by multiplying the number of years of service by 2 percent of the monthly compensation. The monthly compensation shall be the average of the monthly compensation received by the employee during any 20 months selected by him out of any 120 months of consecutive service, or if the service shall be less than 10 years, during any 2 months selected from each year of service. No part of any monthly compensation in excess of $400 shall be recognized in determining any annuity or disability payment or any employee contribution. The annuity shall not exceed 60 percent of the monthly compensation, and such 60 percent shall be reduced by 4 percent of such monthly compensation for each year the employee is less than 65 years of age at the time of the first annuity payment. No such reduction shall be made if the carrier has retired the employee because of physical or mental inability to continue in active service.

SEC. 3. Retirement shall be compulsory upon employees who, on the effective date have attained or thereafter shall attain the age of 65 years. The carrier or employee organization and the employee may, by an agreement in writing filed with the board, extend the time for retirement as to such employee, for 1 year and for successive periods of 1 year each, but not beyond the age of 70 years. Until five years from the effective date the compulsory retirement shall not apply to an employee who from and after the effective date occupies an executive position in the service of a carrier or employee organization.

SEC. 4. Any employee suffering disability shall be awarded a monthly disability payment equal to the annuity payable upon retirement at his then age, which disability payment shall not be less than $50 per month. Such employee shall be subject to medical examinations for the determination of disability and of the continuance of disability from time to time, but after 2 years of continuous disability such examination shall not be required oftener than once in each year. In event that disability has ceased or the employee shall fail or refuse to submit to such medical examination, the disability payment shall cease until disability shall again be established upon such medical examination. No disability payment shall be made when the employee shall be entitled at that time to an annuity upon retirement equal to or in excess of the disability payment. Any payment received by an employee from a carrier on account of such disability, to the extent of such payment after deducting all expenses thereon, shall operate to reduce or defer the monthly disability payment herein provided until the sum of the monthly disability payments otherwise payable hereunder shall equal the sum of such payment or payments.

SEC. 5. Every carrier shall pay as an operating expense a carrier contribution in a percentage upon its operating revenue, consisting of (1) the contribution percentage and (2) the carrier additional percentage, and every employee shall pay an employee contribution in a percentage upon the employee compensation, consisting of (1) the contribution percentage and (2) the employee additional percentage. The employee compensation shall be the compensation received for service as such employee, excluding compensation in excess of $400 per month. The contribution percentage shall be the same for all carriers and all employees and shall be determined by the board from time to time, and shall be such as to produce, as nearly as may be, the amount necessary to pay the annuities, the disability payments, and the expenses becoming payable from time to time, excluding the fully paid pro rata part of any annuity provided by a credit to the employee. Until the board shall determine on a different percentage, the contribution percentage shall be 2½ percent. Employee contributions shall be deducted by the carrier or employee organization from the compensation of its employees and shall be paid by the carrier or employee organization, together with the carrier contributions, quarterly into the Treasury of the United States. During the first calendar year, beginning with or following the effective date, the employee additional percentage shall be two tenths percent, and during each calendar year the employee additional percentage shall be increased by two tenths percent on the employee compensation. The carrier additional percentage shall be the percentage of the aggregate operating revenue which will produce an amount equal to the sum of the amounts produced by the employee additional percentage. Each employee additional percentage payment, with an equal amount from the aggregate carrier additional percentage payments, shall be accumulated to the credit of the individual employee. Such credit shall be the sole property of the employee, and the credit shall be applied, on application for an annuity, to provide a fully paid pro rata part of the cost of the annuity, and on death the credit, or the excess, if any, of the credit on entering on the annuity over the sum of the annuity payments, shall be paid to designated beneficiaries, or, in the absence of a designation, to the estate. The board shall determine and credit interest at the net rate earned and shall fix the basis for determining the cost of the annuity. Whenever the board shall determine that continued payments, without further increase in the additional percentage, will provide a credit equal to the maximum cost of the annuity at any time the annuity may be entered upon, the employee shall make future payments without further increase in the additional percentage. Whenever the board shall determine that the credit is equal to or in excess of the maximum cost of the annuity, the employee shall discontinue paying the additional percentage. Upon making application for the annuity the employee may withdraw the excess, if any, over the cost of the annuity, or may apply the excess to providing an increased annuity.

SEC. 6. The board shall have the power to provide by appropriate rules and regulations for substituting the provisions for annuities and other benefits to employees under this act, for any obligation for prior service or for any existing provisions for the voluntary payment of pensions to employees subject to this act by a carrier or by employees subject to this act, so as to relieve such carrier from its obligations under its existing pension systems and to transfer such obligations to the retirement system herein established. If the fulfillment of any such transferred obligation shall require additional contributions or larger payments than would otherwise be required under the provisions of this act, then such additional contributions shall be made by the carrier originally responsible for the creation of such obligation or for the excess amount of such payments over those which would be required under the provisions of this act. In the event that the board is unable to make satisfactory arrangements with any carrier for the substitution of the provisions under this act for its existing pension system, then and in that event the provisions of this act shall be applied to said carrier and its employees without regard to any conflict or duplication in the operation of such an existing pension system and the operation and effect of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums not in excess of the amounts received under the provisions of this act, as may be necessary to pay all annuities and disability payments, together with the expenses of administration of this act. At the request and direction of the board the Treasurer of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to invest such funds as are not immediately required for disbursements in interest-bearing bonds, notes, or other obligations of the United States and to collect the principal and interest of such securities and to sell and dispose of the same as in the judgment of the board shall be in the interest of said funds.

SEC. 8. A railroad retirement board, composed of 2 representatives of the employers and 2 representatives of employees and 1 member who is neither, shall be appointed by the President, with the consent and approval of the Senate, for terms of 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10 years, respectively, as shall be designated in the original appointment. Thereafter appointments shall be for terms of 10 years. Vacancies shall be filled by appointment for the unexpired term. The member of the board whose term shall first expire shall act as chairman. A member of the board may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, malfeasance in office, or ineligibility, but for no other cause. Each of said members shall receive a salary of $10,000 per year, together with necessary traveling expenses and subsistence expenses, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, while away from the principal office of the board on duties required by this act. The members and employees of the board shall be included as employees under this act and, together with employees receiving annuities, shall be furnished free transportation in the same manner as such transportation is furnished to employees. The board shall have and exercise all the duties and powers necessary to administer this act. The board shall receive and, as may be necessary, enforce the payments required under the act, make and certify awards and payments, and account for all moneys and funds necessary thereto. The board may require such advance upon the payments of carriers as necessary to put this act into operation. The board shall establish and promulgate rules and regulations and provide for the adjustment of all controversial matters, with power as a board or through any member or subordinate designated therefor to require and compel the attendance of witnesses, administer oaths, take testimony, and make all necessary investigations in any manner involving such annuities or payments, and shall maintain such offices, provide such equipment, furnishings, supplies, services, and facilities, and employ such persons and provide for their compensation and expenses as may be necessary to the proper discharge of the functions of the board. All rules, regulations, or decisions of the board shall require the approval of at least three members and shall be entered upon the records of the board and shall be a public record. The board shall gather, keep, compile, and publish in convenient form such records and data as may be necessary, and at intervals of not more than 2 years shall cause to be made actuarial surveys and analyses to determine from time to time the percentage to be required upon employee compensation and upon carrier operating revenue to provide for all annuities, disability payments, and expenses, and to assure proper administration and the adequacy and permanency of the retirement system hereby established. The board shall have power to require all employers and employees, and any officer, board, commission, or other agency of the United States, to furnish such information and records as shall be necessary for the administration of this act. The board shall make an annual report to the President of the United States, to be submitted to Congress. Witnesses summoned before the board shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

SEC. 9. This act shall be administered and construed with the intent and to the purpose of providing the greatest practicable amount of relief from unemployment and the greatest possible use of resources available for said purpose and for the payment of annuities for the relief of superannuated employees. Not later than 10 years from the effective date the board, in an annual or special report, shall make specific recommendations for such changes in the retirement system hereby created, including the plan, the benefits, and the contributions, as shall assure the adequacy and permanency of said retirement system on the basis of its experience and all information and experience then available. For this purpose the board shall from year to year make such investigations and actuarial studies as shall provide the fullest information practicable for such report and recommendations.

SEC. 10. The several district courts of the United States and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction to entertain an application and to grant appropriate relief in the following cases which may arise under the provisions of this act.

(a) An application by the board to compel an employee residing within the jurisdiction of said court, or a carrier subject to service of process within said jurisdiction, to comply with any obligations imposed on said employee or carrier under the provisions of this act.

(b) An application by an employee or carrier to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or to district court of any district wherein the board maintains an office or has designated an agent authorized to accept service in its behalf, to compel the board to set aside an action or decision claimed to be in violation of a legally enforceable right of the applicant, or to take an action, or to make a decision necessary for the enforcement of a legal right of the applicant, when the applicant shall establish his right to a judicial review upon the jurisdictional ground that, unless he is granted a judicial review of the action or decision, or failure of the board to act or to decide, of which he complains, he will be deprived of a constitutional right to obtain a judicial determination of his alleged right.

The jurisdiction herein specifically conferred upon the said Federal courts shall not be held exclusive of any jurisdiction otherwise possessed by said courts to entertain actions at law or suits in equity in aid of the enforcement of rights or obligations arising under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. No credit, annuity, disability, or death payment shall be assignable or be subject to any tax or to garnishment, attachment, or other legal process under any circumstances whatsoever.

SEC. 12. On the failure of any carrier to make any payment when due under the provisions of this act, such carrier shall, in addition to the payments so required, unless excused by order of the board, have such payment increased by 1 percent of the amount of such payment for each month such payment is delayed.

SEC. 13. Any employee or other person subject to this act who shall fail or refuse to make any report or furnish any information required by the board in the administration of this act or who shall fail or refuse to make any accounting required under this act, or who shall make any false or fraudulent statement or report required for the purpose of this act, or who shall make or aid in making any false or fraudulent statement or claim for the purpose of receiving any award or payment under this act shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $10,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year.

SEC. 14. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act or application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

The statement in the form of a memorandum submitted by Mr. HATFIELD (on behalf of himself and Mr. WAGNER), was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON PROPOSED CONSOLIDATION S. 817 AND S. 1529 IN A BILL TO PROVIDE A RETIREMENT SYSTEM FOR RAILROAD EMPLOYEES, TO PROVIDE UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

The subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce held hearings on S. 3892 and S. 4646 January 11 to 19, 1933, at which representatives of the employees and the carriers were fully heard. The employees were represented by the Railway Labor Executives Association and by the Railroad Employees National Pension Association, and the carriers by the Association of Railway Executives. Representatives of other transportation organizations and of associations of manufacturers and individual employees were also heard. The adjournment on March 4, 1933, prevented further consideration by the Seventy-second Congress.

The bills with some modifications were reintroduced early in the special session of the Seventy-third Congress as S. 1529 and S. 817. The pending bills incorporate changes which were suggested at the hearings, particularly in adjusting to present economic conditions the amounts of the proposed annuity payments and required contributions. Apart from these changes the bills differ only in detail from the bills heard by the subcommittee. Except as to one member, the present subcommittee is composed of the same members as the subcommittee which sat in the hearings.

Upon a full consideration of the proposals contained in the two bills and the testimony taken at the hearings, and such other data and experience as is available, it has been found practicable to combine the pending bills into one bill, which it is believed accomplishes in a practical way the purposes sought and generally agreed to be desirable, alike in the interests of the railroad industry, its employees, and the public.

STATEMENT OF THE PLAN

The different bills under consideration show a general agreement as to the plan and purpose of the proposed legislation.

It is agreed that all railroads which have been subjected to the jurisdiction of Congress are to be treated together as one employer. All persons in the service of the railroads are to be regarded as employees of the one employer. One common retirement system is to be established for making old-age and disability payments to the employees of all railroads. The old-age pension or annuity is to be based upon the wages and the length of service upon all railroads, with specified maximum limits. The payments are to be provided for from joint contributions by the railroads and the employees.

The Treasury of the United States is made the custodian of the funds. The payments to be made by the Treasury are limited to the amounts provided by the railroads and the employees, and no burden is placed on the Public Treasury.

The administration of the system is to be placed in a board of five, to be appointed by the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

In the consolidated bill the amount of the pension or annuity is to be 2 percent on the basic wage of the employee multiplied by the number of years of service, but is not to exceed 60 percent of the basic wage. The basic wage is to be determined upon average compensation as defined in the bill, but no compensation in excess of $400 per month is to be recognized in determining the basic wage.

Pensions are to be payable from and after age of 65, or before age 65 after 30 years of service. Retirement is to be compulsory at age 65, with a provision for an agreement by the employee and the railroad to extend the employment from year to year, but not beyond age 70. Compulsory retirement at age 65 shall not apply to executives until 5 years after the act takes effect.

If the pension payments are begun before age 65 after 30 years of service, the maximum pension payment is reduced from the 60 percent maximum by 4 percent of the basic wage for each year the employee is less than 65 years of age when the pension payments are begun. Thus, at age 60 the maximum pension is 40 percent and at age 55 it is 20 percent, and no pension at all is payable below age 51. The reduction in the maximum does not apply where the employee is retired by the railroad for mental or physical disability.

Assuming the above average wage of $1,667 the average maximum monthly old-age pension will be $83.33. By reason of reductions on account of shorter periods of service, on the assumptions herein made, the actual average will be $71.03 for pensions to be granted during the first full year of operation. Applied to the compensation received by individual employees the pensions will bear such reasonable relationship to the compensation as will encourage satisfactory retirement for the good of the service.

A payment is provided in the case of disability of an employee by accident or disease. The disability must be total and permanent and must result from the service. This disability payment is equal to the retirement annuity or pension then payable, but is not to be less than $50 per month. Any amount otherwise payable by the railroad on account of the injury or disease is deducted from the disability payment. Payments on account of disability do not, however, affect the payments to be made as an old-age pension or retirement annuity, but no old-age pension will be made while disability payments are being made.

The pension or annuity payments are to be provided by payments in a uniform contribution percentage by the employees upon their wages and by the carriers upon their operating revenues. This results at the outset in a payment of approximately one third by the employees and two thirds by the railroads. The railroads are required to deduct and retain the employee percentages and to pay these with their own payments quarterly into the Treasury of the United States.

The board is to determine from time to time the contribution percentage on the wages and on the operating revenue. This is fixed at 2½ percent until the board determines otherwise. This is designed to provide a small buffer fund at the outset. It is the purpose of the contribution percentage to provide only from time to time approximately the amounts required for the current requirements for old age and disability payments and the expenses of administration.

Assuming that all who could possibly be entitled to retire and take their pensions will do so, including all who are 63 years of age and over, and all who have had 30 years of service and who are 60 years of age and over, estimates based on data submitted at full hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate held during January 1933 show that on an average basic wage of $1,667 the maximum pension payments required during the first full year of operation will not exceed $90,000,000. Of this the employees would pay about $30,000,000, and the railroads about $60,000,000. However, as the total wages are now about $1,500,000,000 and the total operating revenues are about $3,500,000,000, the 2½ percent on the combined $5,000,000,000 will require payments amounting to approximately $125,000,000 during the first full year of operation. While the amount payable in pensions will increase gradually from year to year, it is estimated that the $125,000,000 will be more than enough to meet the maximum yearly pension payments for at least each of the first 5 years. It would be entirely practicable to omit the minimum 2½-percent requirement and collect only the actual amounts required.

In addition to the contribution percentage, the consolidated bill further provides for an additional percentage payment by the employees of two tenths of 1 percent on the basic wage the first calendar year and increasing by two tenths of 1 percent each succeeding calendar year. This payment, with an equal amount paid in an additional percentage by the railroads, is to be accumulated with interest to the credit of each individual employee. This is to be used to provide a fully paid pro rata part of the pension on retirement. In case of death the credit, less the sum of the pension payments, if any, theretofore made from the credit, will be paid to such beneficiaries as the employee may designate. The fully paid parts of the old-age pensions or annuities provided by the credits will reduce the amounts required from the contribution percentages. These reductions will be made at an increasing rate until no further contribution percentages will be required for old-age pensions or annuities. Thereafter the credits will provide separately in full for the old-age pension or annuity of each employee. This end will be substantially reached in 60 years.

It is not practicable, nor is it the intention by this additional percentage, to require any considerable additional payments or to make any considerable provision for the pensions through these additional payments while the system has the very heavy burden of providing principally for pensions on account of service before the adoption of the system when no provision for the payment of such pensions was being made. The consolidated bill aims at this time and during at least 10 years to follow to impose the least possible burden on the railroads and the employees, and to use the available funds to the greatest degree in payment of old-age pensions and equally to provide relief of unemployment.

The bill specifically contemplates relief against unemployment in the immediate retirement of about 100,000 aged employees. This would permit the advancement of all presently in the service and the reemployment of approximately 100,000 from those now on the seniority lists who have been laid off and are unemployed because of the depression.

The present number of railroad employees is approximately 1,000,000, and the number was as high in 1920 as 2,000,000. It is probable that in the shift of employment the number of unemployed entitled to seniority at this time is far less than the difference between the two figures. The immediate reemployment of 100,000 would help materially in relieving the unemployment situation.

It is also certain that the industry would be greatly benefited by taking out of the service a very large proportion of aged employees, who would be replaced by younger employees—largely men with growing families, who are, perhaps, in the greatest need of the employment and the income.

It is believed that the modifications in bills S. 817 and S. 1529 embodied in the proposed consolidated bill meet in the most practical way the present economic situation, both as to the railroads and the employees, in providing immediate and certain relief for aged and disabled employees and in contributing in the greatest degree to the urgent need for relief from unemployment.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2933) granting a pension to Ada B. Nafew, and it was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

AMENDMENTS TO REVENUE BILL

Mr. COPELAND and Mr. HEBERT each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to House bill 7835, the revenue bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REPEAL OF ALASKA PROHIBITION LAW—RESCINDING ACTION OF THE VICE PRESIDENT AND SPEAKER IN SIGNING SENATE BILL 2729

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution, which I ask to have read, and when that shall have been done I shall ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the concurrent resolution (S.Con. Res. 12), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Vice President and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in signing the enrolled bill (S. 2729) entitled "An act to repeal an act of Congress entitled 'An act to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes', approved February 14, 1917, and for other purposes", be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of such bill the last proviso of section 1 reading as follows: "Provided, That the Governor of the Territory of Alaska, from and after the passage and approval of this act, shall have the power and authority to grant pardons to persons theretofore convicted of violations of the aforesaid act of February 14, 1917.", be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I could not consent to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator withhold his objection until I make a brief explanation?

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. TYDINGS. The bill which had passed both Houses and gone to the White House contained a provision that the Governor of Alaska could pardon those who were guilty of crimes under the old Volstead Act. That provision probably made the bill unconstitutional. Therefore all the concurrent resolution seeks to do is to ask that the same bill we have already passed be reengrossed with that provision eliminated. That is all there is to it.

Mr. McNARY. I see no reason why we should make an exception in this case. I think it should go over until tomorrow.

Mr. TYDINGS. Except that in this case the bill has already passed both Houses.

Mr. McNARY. I could not give my consent at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

JOHN A. DONAHUE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, John A. Donahue was nominated for postmaster at Newburgh, N.Y., in the place of A. E. Brundage. On January 23, 1934, the nomination was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and the nomination of Mr. Donahue was confirmed on February 20, 1934. By mistake one of the Senators from New York was not consulted about the matter. The commission has not yet issued.

As in executive session, I ask unanimous consent to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby this nomination was confirmed, and, if consent shall be granted, I will then move to request the President to return the nomination to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Tennessee?

The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now move that the President be requested to return to the Senate the notice of the confirmation of the nomination of John A. Donahue to be postmaster at Newburgh, N.Y.

The motion was agreed to.

PRODUCTION OF PUBLIC ART THROUGH THE C.W.A.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in Holland's Magazine for March 1934, relative to the production of public art through the Civil Works Administration.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Holland's Magazine, March 1934]

THE STATE IN ART

Most of us expected many fresh departures to come out of the myriad structures set up by the hundred days legislation of 1933; but of all the triple- and quadruple-initialed agencies' activities, probably the least anticipated was the Government's entering into production of public art through the Civil Works Administration.

Startling as this would be if we were any longer capable of being startled, it is yet one of the most encouraging and refreshing of all the Federal movements to date. As a people, we have always been too little conscious of the beauties of existence; of painting, sculpture, artistic landscaping—of, to be frank, almost all the arts. We have been too close to our pioneer beginnings, to harshness and barrenness, wherein the first and all-dominating necessity was for bread and shelter; and cherishing these memories, we were in the way of becoming a permanently hard, harsh race. We have only to look at the bleak unbeauty of lines and surfaces in our public buildings to realize the path we were treading.

Now we have taken our first step away from the past's artistic sterility, and we have taken it appropriately on a national scale. Everywhere in the country today artists are at work on the walls of our post offices, city halls, public-school buildings, depicting there in color and graphic design the story of a people's rise toward civilization; the grounds of school buildings are being prepared for landscaping; municipal and regional projects for parks and for beautification of highways and for systematic planning of future urban and rural development are under way.

It is too much to expect that all of this work will be as good as it might be; certainly there will be plenty of criticism, and some of it will be sound. We may, largely, disregard that; the important thing is the evidence therein that a people is awakening to a broader way of living, and that as a result of these first steps we are taking, however stumbling, the future generations of the race will grow up into instinctive acceptance and some appreciation of beauty as a vital part of life and living.

SALARIES OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statistical statement and classification of the basic salaries paid to employees of the Federal Government before the act of March 20, 1933, became effective. It is published by the American Federation of Government Employees based on data obtained from the Bureau of the Budget.

It presents such a clear picture of the salary situation and shows the group distribution of the amount spent for Federal salaries that it is valuable for reference and other purposes.

There being no objection, the statistical statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOVERNMENT SALARIES

The American Federation of Government Employees republishes the civilian part of the Bureau of the Budget statement issued on January 30, 1932, which shows base salaries before the Economy Act went into effect (with its pay reductions and furloughs).

So much misinformation has been spread with respect to salaries that this table has been republished.

It will be noted that in January 1932, before the reductions, there were:

Employees drawing $1,000 or less	124,678
Other employees drawing $1,200 or less	69,040
Other employees drawing $1,800 or less	154,905
Other employees drawing $2,000 or less	68,466
Employees drawing $2,000 or less (altogether)	417,089

These are the people who have been hardest hit of all. They were in a pitiable state before the Act to Maintain the Credit of the United States Government, and since then the conditions have been even worse.

This table includes part-time employees but length of time worked does not constitute a defense of a sub-subsistence salary.

Taking this lower part of the employees of the Government, it will be seen that they received an average of $927.62 a year, or an average of $17.83 a week before the Economy Act with its cuts and slashes.

THE FEAR OF PLENTY—ARTICLE BY WALTER LIPPMANN

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask leave to have published in the RECORD an article by Walter Lippmann, entitled "The Fear of Plenty", appearing in the Today and Tomorrow column of the New York Herald Tribune of the issue of March 29, 1934.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune, Mar. 29, 1934]

TODAY AND TOMORROW—THE FEAR OF PLENTY

By Walter Lippmann

The other day in the House of Representatives a Congressman was explaining why he favored the Bankhead bill, which would make it a criminal offense to produce more than the allotted amount of cotton. He had returned recently, he said, to a farm in central Kansas where he worked as a boy, and there he saw 3 men using machinery to harvest a crop that once would have required 30 men. "This is the picture of mass production by machinery in wheat. The harvest hand is gone. The cotton picker is going. Cows are milked by machinery. Printing is a dying trade. Telephones are self-operative. Accounts are kept by machinery. The machinery is self-created. It digs its own materials out of the ground, transports them to the manufacturing plant, manufactures itself and operates itself. Every day in every way, on the farm, in the factory, in the mine, the need for human labor becomes less and less."

The Congressman has stated a view which is widely held at the present time. It is at the root of the multitudinous efforts being made to limit production and create an artificial scarcity in the midst of what is felt to be an overwhelming abundance. Is there anything wrong with the Congressman's statement; and if so, what is it?

It is not difficult, I think, to show that there is something fundamentally wrong with it. If labor-saving machinery produces unemployment, there ought to be some relation between the amount of unemployment and the amount of labor-saving machinery. Now, a few years ago Mr. T. T. Read made what is supposed to be the best available estimate of the world's output of work based upon the amount of mechanical and human energy used in different countries. The calculation was made in 1926. At that time the United States had a work output per capita which was one and a half times that of Great Britain, two and a half times that of Germany, nearly 40 times that of China, India, and Russia. But at the same time, in 1926, the United States was prosperous. In England and Germany there was serious unemployment, and in Russia, China, and India a desperately low standard of life. If the theory that labor-saving machinery is the cause of unemployment were correct, we should have had in 1926 nearly three times the amount of unemployment there was in Germany. In fact we had much less.

What is more, if the theory were correct, we should have had ever-increasing unemployment for the past hundred years. For there has been a prodigious increase in labor-saving machinery. But the fact is that, except temporarily during depressions, we have employed more and more people at higher real wages throughout that period. The explanation is not difficult to find. Take the Congressman's wheat farm, where 3 men do the work that 30 did when he was a boy. By dint of a little research in the Congressional Directory I find that the Congressman did his farming from 1884 to 1894. In 1894 the country produced 634,000,000 bushels of wheat and in 1929 it produced 813,000,000 bushels, an increase of about 30 percent in a period when the population increased about 70 percent. So, in 1894, the country was producing about 9 bushels per capita and in 1929 a little less than 7. Wheat production was actually declining. But with the aid of labor-saving machinery the individual farmer was producing more wheat. That machinery has to be made out of something. In that same period the production of pig iron multiplied seven times. To make that machinery requires fuel. In that period the production of coal multiplied three and a half times. The machinery requires fuel to operate it. In that period the production of petroleum multiplied 40 times.

That is the answer to the Congressman's argument. The three men on the farm who use machinery were not the only ones working to harvest that crop. Behind them, but out of sight, were the miners who dug the ore and the coal, the men who made the steel and manufactured the machines, the men who produce the fuel to run them, who transported and serviced them. It may not any longer take 30 men to do the work of 3 men, but it takes many more than the 3. When the Congressman exclaimed that "the machine is self-created" he showed what his illusion is. The machine is not self-created. A tractor which displaces 27 men on a Kansas farm does not displace 27 men in the United States. It takes many of those 27 men to produce the tractor and keep it running. A few are displaced, presumably on the average about 1 man in 50 per year, since total production tends to increase about 2½ percent a year. That labor power can either be directed to increased leisure or used to produce more wealth for the country as a whole and in the long run the problem of technological unemployment, so-called, cannot be of a much greater order of magnitude than this.

The idea that labor-saving machinery makes a nation poorer is a most curious but persistent illusion. In the unsettled parts of Africa, according to Mr. H. Foster Bain, a man carries on his back about 60 pounds of food and eats 2 pounds a day. That means that he can go forward 15 days and have enough food to get back alive. Now you can say, if you like, that this means work for everybody. But it really means poverty and the risk of starvation for everybody. In 1902 a man went deep into Africa to study the copper deposits of the Belgian Congo. It required five thousand men on his line of supply to take care of him, and even then he had to hurry to avoid a food shortage. That is what the lack of labor-saving machinery means. The mere task of carrying enough food for him and for the men who were carrying the food required a small army. That is one way to make employment. But it is not the way to raise the standard of life, and yet that is precisely what will be accomplished if those who are haunted by the specter of overproduction are allowed to translate their delusion into public policy.

REGULATION OF STOCK EXCHANGES

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from the Salt Lake Stock Exchange protesting against the pending so-called "Fletcher-Rayburn bill", and also a memorandum prepared by the same organization setting forth some objections to the measure.

There being no objection the telegram and memorandum were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, March 24, 1934.

Senators W. H. KING and ELBERT D. THOMAS, of Utah,
United States Senate:

Our members most emphatically protest the enactment of the modified Fletcher-Rayburn bill. It would destroy the mining industry of the West, in that the raising of capital for new mineral development would be impossible, and it would result in eliminating a free trading place for mining investments. It would drive United States capital into the greater development of the mineral resources of Canada and work severe financial loss on thousands of United States investors. By reason of the nature of mining, no one can place a staple value on mining shares as is done with industrial stocks, so why, to regulate speculators in New York industrials, should the mining industry be destroyed? The sections devoted to corporations are destructive to the growing corporations of the West and will increase depression and unemployment. Unanimously we ask your energetic opposition to this bill.

SALT LAKE STOCK EXCHANGE,
W. D. NEBEKER,
IMER PETT, Sr.,
J. A. BARCLAY,
Legislative Committee.

THE SALT LAKE STOCK EXCHANGE—ITS CAREER—SAFEGUARDS FOR INVESTORS—ITS RELATION TO BILLS INTRODUCED TO REGULATE STOCK EXCHANGES

To obtain a correct view of the operations of the Salt Lake Stock Exchange, it is necessary to to go into some detail as to its history and the conservative policy of the several governing boards.

The birth of mining in Utah happened in 1862—some 15 years after the pioneers took up the residence in what is now the Great Salt Lake Valley—and today Utah stands admittedly and without question America's great mining and smelting center.

It was in 1888 the Salt Lake Stock Exchange came into being, and in 1898 it was reorganized and from that time gained prestige and membership, until its present roster consists of members who are a unit in maintaining the high standing of the institution and in rendering real service to the investing public.

In 1909 the exchange erected and occupied its own building.

At this point it will be of interest to note that the production and dividends paid by Utah mines from 1862 to the present date exceed in value some $2,000,000,000.

The exchange is controlled by the annual election of a board of governors who have sole charge of its operations, devise the necessary safeguards for investors, and it is noteworthy that in some instances the service of the members of the board of governors have been continued for quite a number of years. In all these years trading has never been suspended for a regular day.

The rules of the exchange provide that only the outstanding stocks of companies are given a listing on the exchange; that there are no "wash" sales; that we have no specialists; trading is done in open market from one broker to another; that deliveries and settlements are made daily; that margins are a minor part of its business, as penny stocks are not suitable for this class of business, but where margins are required on the higher priced stocks it varies from 40 to 60 percent, and it is noteworthy that it is some 19 years since the exchange had a member in default.

The exchange has an arbitration committee to whom any public trader in stocks can appeal if he has a grievance, and it is noteworthy that the board of governors, who have the final decision in the matter, really lean backward in favor of the stock trader.

The exchange is licensed and the members bonded by and is under the control of the Utah Securities Commission, and no stock is listed without its first having passed the Utah Securities Commission. Companies are obliged to report any time that the exchange requests a sworn statement as to the conditions affecting investors in the shares.

The trading on the exchange to a large extent is in the shares of mining companies, and it has proved a valuable factor in the securing of new capital for the development of known mineralized ground; this has proved an important factor in adding to the wealth of the world. That you may readily grasp the method pursued in the securing of new capital the following illustrates: an individual or group of individuals own what is considered by competent engineers valuable mineralized ground which they desire to have developed; they then form a company and transfer their ground, taking some 30 to 50 percent of the capital stock in payment of the ground, leaving the balance of its shares in the treasury to be sold to provide the development capital, and the treasury stock is not listed until distributed, thus providing a trading place for the investors. They then apply for a permit from the Utah Securities Commission, and if the permit is granted the securities commission compel them to place in escrow, until the treasury stock is financed, those shares paid for the property or to promoters, so that the owners of the property are unable in any way to dispose of stock until they have secured sufficient funds for development or the development has reached that stage where the mine is proven productive and investors are safeguarded. This provides an opportunity for investors to make profits.

Mining stocks have suffered through the years of depression but not to the extent that other stocks have suffered in the larger exchanges for the reason that the majority of the stocks on the Salt Lake Stock Exchange are quoted in cents and not in dollars. A depreciation of 5 cents on the usual board lot of mining stock does not inflict on an investor as severe a loss that a drop of $5 on a stock in the larger exchanges.

The exchange has readily complied with all codes or regulations imposed by the Utah securities commission or the Securities Act of 1933, and is willing to keep in the vanguard of progress in protecting investors.

The foregoing is the foundation on which the business of the Salt Lake Stock Exchange has been established and continued. The reader will readily see how unjust and unfair it would be to impose on this exchange the requirements of the Fletcher-Rayburn bill introduced into Congress.

The members of the exchange would not object to being registered under the Federal Trade Commission or some similar body, nor would they object to reasonable examination of all trading that takes place on the market; but it is quite evident that the foregoing bill is designed to govern the larger exchanges and in its operations would impose on the Salt Lake Stock Exchange conditions that would not only be detrimental to operations but might result in its closing and work an injury on thousands of investors all over the country. Such conditions would force trading in mining stocks into some sort of unregulated channel that would result in undesirable methods of bootlegging whereby investors would become a prey to the unscrupulous trader.

If the Fletcher-Rayburn bill, or one similar, be enacted into law, we would suggest that it does not apply to exchanges, only as far as registration and examination in cities less than 250,000 population or to exchanges trading in less than 25,000,000 shares per year. By this method those in authority would maintain a control over the exchange and in their discretion could immediately remedy any defects in the trading that would be detrimental to the investors.

It is apparent this exchange is different from other exchanges in the class of stocks traded.

We feel sure that it is not the intention of Congress to work a hardship but only to eliminate the practices which are unethical or unfavorable to investors, and it is in this spirit that we submit the foregong for consideration.

Respectfully submitted.

SALT LAKE STOCK EXCHANGE,
By J. A. BARCLAY, President.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the New Republic of March 28, 1934, entitled "Employers Throw Down the Gauntlet."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New Republic of Wednesday, Mar. 28, 1934]

EMPLOYERS THROW DOWN THE GAUNTLET

Ever since the passage of the National Industrial Recovery Act the antiunion employers of the country have sought to escape the intent of the collective-bargaining provisions of that law. The latest example—that of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, which announces that "the industry does not intend to recognize the American Federation of Labor as such, nor to enter into any contract with it on behalf of its employees"—is merely a repetition of action that we have seen pursued in the captive coal mines of the United States Steel Corporation, the Weirton steel plant, the Budd plant, and thousands of other minor cases throughout the country. The rulers who govern the backbone of American heavy industry—steel, automobiles, and utilities—do not purpose to allow the growth of a labor movement.

The chief means of evading the law which they employ is a refurbishment of the old company union. The company union is a union of straw, a fictitious body, like a dummy corporation. Company unions have grown about five times as rapidly as genuine unions since the passage of the Recovery Act. They are organized in fact or in effect by the employers themselves. Such a union almost never covers the workers in the plants of more than one employer. Its constitution is usually handed down by the employer, and its elections are carried out under his supervision. If it has any dues at all, they are not sufficient to fill a war chest. Its officers are employees, and their union work is paid for directly or indirectly by the employer. Through undercover agents, if necessary, the employer finds it possible easily to control the actions of such a union. The widely proclaimed preference of the employer and the fear of reprisal induce employees to join this union and take part in its elections. The employer then pretends that because he is willing to negotiate with the committeemen of his own organization he is carrying on collective bargaining with representatives of the employees' own choosing.

Bargaining of this sort is, however, bargaining in name only. It is like bargaining with oneself, or bargaining between a holding company and a subsidiary corporation. No true bargain can occur unless both parties have power to decline the terms offered. In a great industry, a union covering one plant only would have no such power, even if it were thoroughly independent of the employer. For it cannot strike effectively. Still less can it do so when it has no funds, when its officers are employed and paid by the opposite party to the bargain, when its laws were framed by him and its elections are conducted by him. Employee representatives, flattered and conciliated by those who have given them their jobs and from whom they receive their pay, and conscious that the rank and file has no power to support them in a struggle, do not make demands and offer terms but rather present suppliant petitions. Even if they were honest and aggressive, they would not have the experience and skill in union activity, or the expert knowledge, to be any match for the employer. It is precisely because the employers do not want labor to be able to bargain collectively, and thus to be capable of exerting some real power over industry, that they substitute company unions for real ones. Any union that can exert power over wages or working conditions is denounced as one that wishes to "run the industry"—as the automobile executives now denounce the A. F. of L.

Just because employees have participated in an election to choose company-union officers these officers are not necessarily "representatives of their own choosing." The employees, if given real freedom of choice, might join an independent industry-wide or trade union and choose officials who are experts and are not under their employer's thumb. But they are often restrained from doing so by the employer's bitter and announced opposition to the genuine union. They fear his wrath if they join it or ask others to do so. They know that they can establish its right to bargain for them only by risking their jobs and their pay in a strike, and thus enforcing of its claims on the employer—if the strike is successful. If even one fifth of a given number of employees are willing to strike for recognition of a genuine union, one can be pretty certain that at least three fifths more would prefer to bargain through that union if they were not afraid of the employer's vengeance.

In view of these realities of coercion by employers it is an absurd distortion of the truth for the automobile executive to declare that an outstanding reason for the strike order "is the effort of professional labor leaders to get control over the automobile workers by force, by coercion, by intimidation of employees and their families by open violence and threats of strike." Imagine a handful of labor leaders invading a city and in the teeth of employers and police forcing tens of thousands of workers to submit to their authority.

As long as the right of labor to organize independently of employers and bargain through independent unions is not recognized we can have industrial peace only through industrial autocracy. If the workers are sufficiently intimidated by the employers, they may consent to remain in fact without power to protest. But that is fatal to all that the new deal is supposed to stand for. And as long as workers retain any confidence in the new deal bitter controversies are bound to arise concerning the right of union recognition.

Thus the practical rights of labor rest in the limbo where they stood before the Recovery Act was passed. Its plain intent to balance the power of organized employers, who are now given full scope under the law, by the power of industry-wide and Nation-wide labor organizations, has been obstructed in a number of the most important industries. To make that intent more explicit and enforceable, Senator WAGNER has introduced his industrial-disputes bill. Section 4 of this bill states: "Employees shall have the right to organize and join labor organizations and to engage in concerted activities, either in labor organizations or otherwise, for the purpose of organizing or bargaining collectively through representatives of their own choosing or for other purposes of mutual aid and protection." Section 5 states that it shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer or anyone acting in his interest "to attempt by interference, influence, restraint, favor, coercion, or lockout, or by any other means, to impair the right of employees guaranteed in section 4", or what is equally important, "to refuse to recognize and/or deal with representatives of his employees or to fail to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements with such representatives concerning wages, hours, and other conditions of employment." The company union is also, in effect, outlawed by forbidding employers "to initiate, participate in, supervise, or influence the formation, constitution, by-laws, other governing rules, operations, policies, or elections of any labor organization" or to contribute to its financial support or compensate its officers, or to practice any discrimination that would influence employees in their choice of an organization, with a proviso that would permit an agreement with a genuine labor organization for a union shop.

The bill also sets up a National Labor Board as a permanent organization, with full-time, paid members representing the general public, as well as unpaid members representing employers and labor. The board is empowered to enforce the law by "cease and desist orders" similar to those now issued by the Federal Trade Commission to prevent unfair trade practices, such orders being subject to court review. It also can act as arbitrator for labor disputes when the parties submit the case for arbitration. The board has full powers of investigation and subpena.

If such a law were passed and honestly enforced, the anti-union employers would find it much more difficult to evade genuine collective bargaining than they have done during the past few months. They could not form company unions or pretend that by talking with their representatives they were obeying the law. They could not, when a genuine union was formed, decline to bargain with its representatives, or announce that they did not intend to come to any agreement with it, or attempt to starve it out by a lockout—that is, by shutting down their plants. It is even doubtful whether they could—as the automobile employers have just done—distribute literature and publish advertisements urging their employees not to join unions. No wonder they are mobilizing to prevent the passage of the bill.

If employers are so obdurate against the autonomous organization of their employees even under such conservative auspices as most of the American Federation of Labor unions provide, what hope is there that they will do anything to reconstruct capitalism itself? They have been acting in regard to labor exactly as they acted before the new deal was inaugurated. They decline to grant the least iota of power to workers over working conditions, or to government, as a representative of consumers, over prices. Capitalism is behaving in the United States in 1934 just as it behaved in England in the 1890's. Collective bargaining with unions, which long since was recognized in older industrial nations, is not a revolution, Heaven knows. But the rulers of industry, whose political and economic incompetence has been so abundantly proved in the crisis, decline to accept even this moderate reform. To them, the social world does not change. Dictatorship by capital is the only formula they understand. They will cling to it, though the old order crashes about their ears.

INTERCHANGEABILITY OF USES OF OILS AND FATS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present for publication in the RECORD a memorandum on the interchangeability of the uses of oils and fats, with special reference to marine animal oil, prepared by John Ruel Manning, chief technologist, Bureau of Fisheries, United States Department of Commerce.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON THE INTERCHANGEABILITY OF THE USERS OF OILS AND FATS, WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO MARINE ANIMAL OILS

At the outset permit me to make plain that the chemical, economic, and general technical principles which I have outlined in this statement apply only to saponifiable oils and fats and do not pertain to the mineral-oil industry.

The interchangeability of the uses of oils and fats in commerce and in the various industries involves both technical and economic considerations. From a technical standpoint there can be and is free interchangeability of the uses of various oils and fats. Modern methods of hydrogenation, refining, treatment, etc., make it possible to prepare practically all oils and fats for almost any industrial use. This means that it is possible chemically to use practically any animal or vegetable oil or fat in soap manufacture or in some of the other possible consuming industries of these commodities. Therefore the actual practice of the interchangeability of the uses of oils and fats is a matter of prices or other economic considerations. Formerly certain technical and economic obstacles prevented any great interchangeability. At the present time certainly no technical obstacles exist and it is doubtful that there are many economic obstacles which would hinder complete potential interchangeability. It is quite true that the specifications of the finished product may to a certain extent govern interchangeability. However, in many instances, favorable economic influences will overcome even these requirements or specifications.

The statement is quite often made that this or that particular oil or fat is not suitable for the manufacture of soap or other finished product, because of the relatively high or low content of the particular oil or fat in some specific fatty acid. This statement is not true for the following reasons: Animal and vegetable fats and fatty oils are of similar general composition since they are mixtures of compounds of glycerin and certain organic acids, which, due to their presence in fats, are called fatty acids. Obviously the variable in the composition of these materials is the fatty acid portion. For this reason the properties of the various fats and oils, and consequently their desirability for a particular use, depend primarily upon their constituent fatty acids and the proportion of these various acids present. This situation applies to all oils and fats, both marine animal, terrestrial animal, and vegetable. Without making the discussion too involved, it is a known fact among chemists and technologists that developments in hydrogenation processes have made it possible to convert unsaturated liquid oils to any desired degree of hardness. Consequently the apparent difference in the natural qualities of various fats and oils has resolved itself into little actual difference insofar as the possibilities for the interchangeability of these materials is concerned, or where hard fats are required for the particular use in question.

It is therefore readily seen that whenever economic considerations enter into the industrial picture, or, in other words, when the price of a particular oil or fat is relatively low, it is quite often advantageous and economically attractive to substitute as an ingredient of the finished product a cheaper oil or fat than the one formerly used. It is commonly known among those familiar with the uses of oils and fats that such substitution or interchangeability is actually practiced in the consuming industries whenever market conditions are sufficiently favorable.

Statistics show that there is a world surplus of oils and fats. There is a domestic surplus of oils and fats for nearly all domestic uses. With the great possibilities for the interchangeability of the uses of these oils and fats as discussed above, it is readily apparent that a highly complicated and competitive market for these raw materials exists. Even though a particular oil or fat, because of some special natural property, is favored for certain specific uses, this specific oil or fat will be affected either directly or indirectly by changes in the market for these commodities as a whole. In other words, if the supply of oils or fats intended for shortenings, for other edible use, for a source of vitamins for use in either human or animal nutrition, is more than the market can absorb, this oil or these oils and fats will affect and be affected by the supply and demand for other oils for other uses. Since the soap kettle is the principal consumer of oils and fats, it is probably one of the important, if not the most important, factors affecting the general market situation for these commodities. If an oil or fat is especially desired for some particular use and is commanding a higher price for that use than it would command for soap manufacture, and cannot find a market for this higher-priced use, it will gravitate to the market for soap manufacture.

This is just one example of how the possible and actual interchangeability of the uses of various oils and fats can and does affect markets and prices for each and every type of oils and fats under conditions of a world surplus and a domestic surplus of oils and fats.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN RUEL MANNING,
Chief Technologist, Bureau of Fisheries,
United States Department of Commerce.

EMERGENCY AID IN EARTHQUAKE, FLOOD, ETC.

Mr. McADOO. I submit a conference report on House bill 7599 and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California submits a conference report, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7599) to provide emergency aid for the repair or reconstruction of homes and other property damaged by earthquake, tidal wave, flood, tornado, or cyclone in 1933 and 1934, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert:

"That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered, through such existing agency or agencies as it may designate, to make loans to nonprofit corporations, with or without capital stock, organized for the purpose of financing the acquisition of home or building sites in replacement of sites formerly occupied by buildings where such sites are declared by public authority to be unsafe by reason of flood, danger of flood, or earthquake, and for the purpose of financing the repair or construction of buildings or structures, or water, irrigation, gas, electric, sewer, drainage, flood-control, communication or transportation systems, damaged or destroyed by earthquake, conflagration, tornado, cyclone, or flood in the year 1933, and in the months of January and February 1934, and deemed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be economically useful or necessary.

"Obligations accepted hereunder shall be collateraled—

"(a) In case of loans for the acquisition, repair, or reconstruction of private property, by the obligations of the owner of such property, secured by a paramount lien except as to taxes and special assessments on the property to be acquired, repaired, or reconstructed, or on other property of the borrowers;

"(b) In case of loans for the repair or reconstruction of privately owned water, gas, electric, communication, or transportation systems, by the obligations of the owners of such water, gas, electric, communication, or transportation systems, secured by a lien thereon; and

"(c) In case of loans for the repair or reconstruction of property of municipalities or political subdivisions of States or of their public agencies, including public-school boards and public-school districts, and water, irrigation, sewer, drainage, and flood-control districts, by an obligation of such municipality, political subdivision, public agency, board, or district, payable from any source, including taxation or tax-anticipation warrants.

"In any case in which any such loan is made, in whole or in part, for the acquisition of land in replacement of land privately owned and declared by public authority to be unsafe by reason of flood, danger of flood, or earthquake, such unsafe property shall be conveyed by the owner thereof, without cost, to the county, municipality, or district in which such property is situated.

"The corporation shall not deny otherwise acceptable applications for loans for repair or reconstruction of buildings or structures, or water, irrigation, gas, electric, sewer, drainage, flood control, communication, or transportation systems of municipalities, political subdivisions, public agencies, boards, or districts because of constitutional or other legal inhibitions affecting the collateral. The collateral obligations shall have maturities not exceeding 10 years in case of loans made under paragraph (a) of this act and not exceeding 20 years in case of loans under paragraphs (b) and (c) of this act.

"The corporation shall prescribe such regulations as will most effectively expedite the repair and construction provided for by this act and effectively carry out the emergency relief purposes of this act.

"The aggregate of loans made under this act shall not exceed $5,000,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

W. G. McADOO,
AUGUSTINE LONERGAN,
HENRY W. KEYES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN W. McCORMACK,
CHARLES WEST,
W. E. EVANS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the report?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from California before I am ready to vote upon the conference report to what extent it modifies existing law or transcends the bounds and field of the bill which we passed.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, the conference report does not transcend the bounds of the bill as passed by the Senate. The bill simply transfers the power to deal with the loans covered by it to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is an amendment of the original earthquake relief act which was passed last year. The bill as passed by the Senate was a substitute for the House bill, which conferred the power upon the Public Works Administration. Since the agencies employed in the administration of the original relief measure were under the auspices of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, it was thought to be much simpler to allow them to remain with that organization.

I may say further that the advances of money provided for are not gifts. They are loans to be secured by first liens on real property, as provided in the earthquake relief bill. Wherever municipalities are involved the loans are to be made to the municipalities. The provisions of the bill also are not limited to California. They operate coextensively with the United States, where anyone can qualify under them. The present act has reference more particularly to the relief of flood sufferers in the States of Washington and Oregon, where we understand considerable damage was occasioned last fall. The report has been unanimously agreed to by the conferees representing the two Houses.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator further whether the amount carried in the bill as it passed the Senate has been increased?

Mr. McADOO. I meant to refer to that point. The amount originally carried was $3,000,000, and that was increased to $5,000,000. It was felt that the original amount was entirely too small. We all feel that $5,000,000 is as far as we should go, although the amount does not cover the damages involved. In the House bill the amount was not stated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact it is almost a fait accompli, that we have gone so far with this character of legislation that it is probably impossible to do anything about it; but I submit we are embarking upon a rather dangerous experimentation if we are to loan money to build houses wherever a tornado or a flood destroys them. In my State of Utah there have been numerous floods to the great damage of the people, but we have never felt there was an obligation upon the Federal Government to extend credit in order to rebuild houses, roads, and so forth, which had been damaged by flood or by storms. Evidently the Federal Government is becoming a kind of great treasure house into which we all put our hands to meet every individual emergency to say nothing of public emergency.

I shall vote against the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

REGULATION OF THE COTTON INDUSTRY

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I challenge the attention of the Senate to section 25, page 24, of the pending bill, and move to strike out the entire section. The language which is most objectionable is as follows——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 24, line 1, it is proposed to strike out section 25, as follows:

SEC. 25. Subsection (1) of section 8 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by inserting at the end of the first sentence thereof the following:

"Agreements authorized by this subsection may include, among others, provisions requiring the producers who are parties to such agreements to reduce or limit acreage and/or production for market of agricultural commodities other than basic agricultural commodities, as well as of one or more basic agricultural commodities."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is the bill now on its final passage?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments have just been ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill will be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McNARY. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have received several letters which indicate that there is a tremendous amount of concern over how far this kind of legislation will reach.

These letters have come from the Southern States, from people I do not know. In fact, they are the first communications I have ever had from them. I am not going to take any time other than simply to suggest that I am of the opinion that there will be terrific resentment if attempts shall be made to administer this legislation as I think it will have to be administered if it is to be operative at all.

I have a great deal of sympathy for the effort to solve the serious problem of overproduction. My office was visited this morning by the head of a committee that is dealing with exactly the same problem on a different subject. He says there are 44 companies engaged in the industry he represents, that of producing evaporated milk, and that of the 44 companies, 39 signed the code; the other 5 refused to sign it, and he gave me his experience. He is now, as the head of a committee, down here before the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to see whether they can work out the problem. He said that the five who refused to sign the code are selling in the market where he is selling, and it is a kind of competition that he cannot stand. He is losing his sales entirely; and when he presents the situation here, the Administration officials say they have no control over the five who have not signed the code. If they would sign it, the officials would have control. That would be an argument for forcing the minority into the arrangement if the whole procedure were justified. On the other hand, when this man asked if he would be permitted to withdraw his signature in order to be able to compete with those who are taking his business, the officials told him he could not do that unless those producing 75 percent of the product would consent to it.

He tells me the situation is that 75 percent of the product is produced by four great companies, located in St. Louis, Chicago, and other places. None of them is located in Ohio, and of course they will not agree to his withdrawal; so he is up against this situation: If he continues in the operation he will lose his business, because he is not permitted to sell to meet this competition; the code will not let him do so; and yet there is no control over the 5 percent. So if he is to be compelled to stay under the code he will lose his business, because he cannot sell in competition and if he asks to go out the officials say, "You cannot do it unless those interested to the extent of 75 percent, at least, will agree to your doing so."

I recognize the situation that exists, where it may be said that the largest interest is forcing those five producers to go in under the code. That would be compulsory; but, at the same time, it seems to me such action would create such resentment on the part of the individual that it could not possibly be enforced.

Here is a letter to me from a man in Fairbanks, La. The writer says:

> I am a man bordering on 80 years of age, and have been on my present farm of 100 acres for 22 years, and my principal crop has been cotton. Since 1929 I have been voluntarily reducing my cotton crop to where in 1933 I only had 43.75 acres in cotton, or less than 50 percent of my total acreage. I have 12 Negroes on my place, making up three families, which rent my land on a share basis. These families raised 8, 4, and 2 bales, respectively, in 1933, and will not be able to raise but 50 percent as much in 1934, or 7 bales. The point I am trying to get before you is that if the cotton reduction bill passes, and allows these Negroes only 50 percent of last year's crop, I am turning them over to charity, as so many others have done.

Then the writer of the letter proceeds to elaborate upon the situation, and expresses himself in rather bitter terms, and asks me to do all I can to get the matter before the Senate.

Here is a letter from a man in Virginia. He has the same kind of a story to tell. Those who think there will not be any bitterness following legislation of this kind will be interested in what the writer says in this paragraph:

> This letter is not written by any scholar, but one that knows cotton and farm life, and has enough common sense to know it will be one of the worst laws ever placed on the books at Washington.

Then, parenthetically, he makes this statement:

> I would like to add I am a Democrat, and have been at all times, and all my people are.

And then he says:

> But God help us now! So please defeat this, or we are a ruined South.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. In view of the fact that a great many farmers have been led to believe that this is only an emergency program, I desire to read from page 275 of the report of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration which was released on March 26, 1934, in the first place as showing the reflection of the farmers, and that they are going to be asked to cooperate, and that in the end this is going to be a long-time program:

> This is proof that farmers, when afforded the opportunity, are eager to cooperate with each other and with the Government—> in an attack on their common problems. There is reason to believe that, building upon the emergency efforts of the present, the farmers will continue to cooperate in the execution of long-time plans designed to serve their own group interests and the best welfare of the Nation as a whole.

Which simply means that when we get deadlocked into this program it is going to be a long-time program.

Mr. FESS. I agree with the Senator.

As I stated the other day, I am not concerned about the length of the step we are taking. I am concerned about the direction in which we are going. That is very serious. In other words, if this is to be an approved course for the Nation to follow, it goes without saying that it will not stop with cotton; it will extend to other American farm products.

A friend who was in my office this morning, complaining about this measure, is not interested in cotton. He has no interest whatever in it; but he was wondering whether, if we shall pass it, we will not be opening the way for doing the same thing with reference to the agricultural products of Ohio. I stated to him that the difficulty will be that when a man wants to sow in the spring he will resent the mere suggestion that before he can do so he must get the consent, after consultation, of some bureau here in Washington; and then, later on, he will have to submit to some inspector sent out from Washington to ascertain whether the instruction of the Government given in the spring is being carried out; and then, later on, when he comes to harvest his crop, he probably will be confronted by another inspector to say how he shall harvest it, where he shall sell it, how much he shall sell, and for what price he shall sell it.

I think every provision of this measure is un-American, and that it will produce terrific resentment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then there is a still further development, as disclosed in the last sugar bill. If the farmer misstates to someone else any terms of his relationship to the Government, he goes to jail for a year.

Mr. FESS. That is correct, and I think that what the Senator from Michigan has said is a most pertinent illustration, because sugar is certainly the next commodity to be considered under this category. There is not a bit of doubt about that.

I have a letter here from Abilene, Tex., the famous State from which our beloved Vice President comes. I will read only a paragraph of it, though it is a rather interesting letter. The writer states:

> Any clear thinker who is not bound by party ties stronger than his American instincts should appreciate the tragic calamity confronting the country under any similar compulsory legislation.

Then he adds:

> If the Bankhead bill is enacted it will ruin the greatest export item we have.

I asked the Senator from North Carolina yesterday or the day before whether he had considered the problem, whether, if there is any good to come from the control of the production of cotton, that good would inure to any man in the United States, or would inure altogether to the foreigner. I think there is no doubt that it would benefit the foreigner rather than our own citizens. I have been so informed by one of the best experts in connection with the Government today.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I should like to suggest that in the same report to which I have heretofore referred, at page 271, I find that the use of rented land for growing crops for direct consumption by the farm family, or for feeding livestock contributing to the farm family, is permitted in the case of cotton.

I suggest that in the State of Ohio and in the State of Iowa much corn is raised, and from the Des Moines Sunday Register of last Sunday I read this suggestion:

SOLID SOUTH PLANTING MORE ACRES IN CORN

> J. S. Russell's story, elsewhere in this issue, of the national "intentions to plant" as revealed in the Department of Agriculture's annual check-up, will repay the closest study. The map accompanying the article is particularly illuminating. Six of the seven States whose farmers contemplate increasing their corn acreage are located in the heart of the "solid South", the section from which one would naturally expect the heartiest support of all for the policies of a Democratic administration.
> Corn yields per acre in the Southern States do not begin to compare with those of the Corn Belt. On the other hand, their total production is far from negligible. The six States indicating an acreage increase last year raised more than 170 million bushels of corn. A case might reasonably be made for requiring southern farmers, who have benefited greatly in cotton control payments, to spend a fraction of those benefits in purchasing additional corn needed for feed, instead of using retired acreage to compete with the Corn Belt. Northern States, even if they so desired, could not possibly do anything to counteract the retirement of cotton acreage in the South, while there is a distinct element of noncooperation in the planting of additional corn acres in the South.
> This is another impressive example of the complicated nature of the A.A.A. problem. The Bankhead bill, already passed by the House, does make some provision for correlation of the production-control program, but its compulsory aspects bring up new problems just as disconcerting.

We are encouraging the corn producer of Iowa to reduce his acreage, and also at the same time we find two distinct things happening: Competition is permitted to grow up in the South, because corn can be produced in the South, and we cannot produce cotton in the North. Also there is the further complication of the impressive program of selling highbred seed corn out in Iowa, to assist also in overcoming and counteracting the effects of the expenditure of many millions of dollars being spent for curtailing the corn acreage.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. I will take a little time on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No amendment is pending. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FESS. I will defer what I had to say until after we vote on the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana obtained the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I wished to add only one sentence, and the Senator from Indiana permits me to do so in his time.

The fact that the President at one time pronounced against compulsory acreage reduction, and the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture has never seemed to have been sold to the idea, and yet it has been supported in certain circles with more or less unanimity, has caused me to have considerable concern as to how far it will go. If such strong position as that of the President and the Secretary of Agriculture is going to be changed under any kind of persuasion, I cannot imagine where this sort of legislation will end.

DR. WILLIAM A. WIRT AND THE "BRAIN TRUST"

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, some few days ago a statement attributed to Dr. William A. Wirt was placed in the record of one of the committees in the House of Representatives by some witness who had received the statement from Dr. Wirt. Dr. Wirt undertook to say what some of the "brain trusters" of this administration had told him. Dr. Wirt said, substantially, that he had been told by a member of the "brain trust" that the country was drifting directly toward revolution; even that the present Chief Executive had been represented by the "brain trusters" to be the Kerensky of this revolution, while they were looking for the Stalin; that it would require a strong man to be the Stalin.

The statement has aroused a great deal of comment throughout the country. I suppose it was only natural to assume that members of the so-called "brain trust", and apologists for the administration, would attempt to belittle Dr. Wirt, to reflect on his ability and his very great fame. I rise this morning to give the facts, in just a few words, about Dr. Wirt.

I did not suppose anyone would ask a question such as that attributed to a prominent educator on his return from Europe yesterday or the day before, namely, "Who is Dr. Wirt?" Dr. William A. Wirt is regarded as one of the country's leading educators. Since 1907 he has been superintendent of schools at Gary, Ind. He is the originator of, and the first to put into large-scale operation the so-called "platoon or duplicate system in public education." By this method the capacity of the average school building is increased 40 percent, students have a 20 percent longer day, and no extra teachers are employed. The system has made Dr. Wirt nationally known, and has been installed in more than 150 schools. Educators from all parts of the United States come to see Dr. Wirt every year to learn about the Gary system.

Dr. Wirt has served as official adviser of the Board of Education of New York City. He has made special studies of educational methods in England, Belgium, France, and Germany, and is recognized as an authority on school administration. I suppose there is not an educator in the United States who does not know Dr. Wirt either personally or by reputation. He is a distinguished character in the educational field.

Further than that, Mr. President, Dr. Wirt is a man of his word. He is a man of character and integrity, and if Dr. Wirt makes a statement, those who know him personally will be sure that the statement is true. Consequently, there is no doubt in the world that the statements which are alleged by Dr. Wirt to have come from members of the so-called "brain trust" were actually made by somebody connected with the "brain trust."

Events all over the country tend to substantiate what Dr. Wirt said. Books have been written by those alleged to be connected with the "brain trust" on the "Revolution in America." In the minute or two remaining of my time I desire to invite the attention of the Senate to a story appearing in the Washington Herald on Tuesday, March 27, from which I shall quote very briefly. Then I will ask that it, together with another article printed this morning in the Herald, may be incorporated in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I quote now, Mr. President, from this article:

In its February issue, Fight, published by the American League Against War and Fascism, prints a map of the United States showing locations of many munition plants.

Fight is the publication of the American League Against War and Fascism, you will note.

"Hits Munition Makers" is the caption. In the text, many munition plants are identified by name and location. Text below reads:

The imperialist governments are preparing a new blood bath for the workers and farmers.

We call upon the workers of these plants to get into touch with the American League Against War and Fascism, 112 East Nineteenth Street, New York, or with the branch of the league located in your city.

We call upon all workers everywhere who have information on the manufacture of war material to mail us immediately the location of the plant, the type of war material made, and the number of workers employed.

I quote further from the Washington Herald:

In February, the first issue of the Yard Voice was distributed among navy yard workers. This propaganda publication, a single sheet as yet, is critically reviewed by the Daily Worker.

That is the Communist organ in this country—which notes that:

Of course it will be the most important means for opening the eyes of the navy yard workers to class consciousness and rally them for the final aim of the Communist Party—the overthrow of the capitalist system and the establishment of a Soviet America with all that implies. * * *

I advert now to the Young Communist League and subversive activities among youth of the land. I quote:

From the Y.C.L.'ers of all countries it is now demanded—

The Secretary of the Young Communist League of America said:

that they mobilize all forces and energy for the struggle of the youth against their compulsory fascization and militarization.

The secretary of the Y.C.L., Comrade Chemedonov, says, according to the story in the Herald, which quotes the Young Worker of February 13 issue:

Chemendonov assures youth that Soviet nonaggression treaties and American recognition do not end the danger of an attack upon the Soviet. Moreover, he tells youth bluntly:

"It is impossible for two mutually exclusive systems like the Socialist and capitalist systems to exist continually."

The February issue of Fight indicates that "youth is being enlisted in searching out and reporting factories making war supplies."

Youth also is urged to make demonstrations at factories and around docks.

The Young Fighter, published by the Trade Union Unity League, Communist, of which William Z. Foster is the head, prints the six-point pledge of the youth section, American league against war and fascism, item 2 therein reading:

"I pledge to work for the stoppage of all production and shipment of munition and war material."

I read again from the Herald, further quoting from the report of a speech made in the West, as the Western Worker, Communist organ in the West, reported it:

But when Rudie Lambert, speaking for the Workers' Ex-Service Men's League, declared that as a Communist he was going into the Army in the next imperialist war and urge the workers to turn their weapons against their class enemies, he received the greatest ovation of the entire evening.

Mr. President, there is much more along the same line. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read it. These articles show how widespread and how well coordinated and strongly controlled are the many subversive activities in this country. I ask, however, that the two articles may at this point be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). Without objection it is so ordered.

The articles referred to are as follows:

REDS ORDER DRIVE TO CRIPPLE UNITED STATES DEFENSES

(By Ralph M. Easley, chairman executive council, the National Civic Federation; as told to Earl Reeves)

The Red International of Moscow has ordered the Communist Party, United States of America, into militant action in an attempt to cripple our national defense.

In current Communist literature our belated repair of long-neglected national defense is represented as arming for attack upon the soviet.

On January 13 there was published in the Daily Worker, official organ of the Communist Party, United States of America, the Thesis of the XIII Plenum of the Communist International, a document which becomes automatically standing orders for all Communist parties.

The Daily Worker quoted from the Thesis, then the American application, as follows:

"The fight against the Roosevelt war plans means the organizing of bitter resistance to every single war move, every action and utterance of the Roosevelt government leading to war. An intense spotlight of exposure must be trained on every slightest war step of Roosevelt to enlighten the masses as to where the Roosevelt government is leading them."

The Thesis itself ordered Communists "to exert every effort without losing a moment for the revolutionary preparation for the impending decisive battle for power."

ATTACKS CONSTANT

The published and platform attacks by communism upon naval construction, Army modernization, Air Corps expansion, upon the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, the National Guard, and civilian training have been bitter and constant.

The Red International uses imperative forms in its orders to its subjects throughout the world. Paragraph by paragraph the Thesis says "the Communist parties must", or "Communists must"—this being relieved by occasional use of "demand" or "obliged."

That Communists of America are obeying these latest orders, through action, is clear. Some examples follow:

1. "In fighting against war", commands the thesis, "the Communists must prepare even now for the transformation of imperial war into civil war, and concentrate their forces in each country at the vital parts of the war machine of imperialism."

In its February issue, Fight, published by the American League Against War and Fascism, prints a map of the United States showing location of many munition plants.

"Hit Munition Makers" is the caption. In the text many munition plants are identified by name and location. Text below reads:

"The imperialist governments are preparing a new blood bath for the workers and farmers.

"We call upon the workers of these plants to get into touch with the American League Against War and Fascism, 112 East Nineteenth Street, New York, or with the branch of the league located in your city.

"We call upon all workers everywhere who have information on the manufacture of war material to mail us immediately the location of the plant, the type of war material made, and the number of workers employed."

SECRET CELLS FORMED

"Secret cells" of Communists are being established as rapidly as possible, in plants making war supplies. Members act as spies. They foment trouble.

2. The Moscow thesis further directed that "the Communist Parties must intensify political educational work in the Army and Navy."

That such Communist "educational work" has already been attempted in our Army is shown by the Soldier's Voice, vol. 1, no. 1, December, known to have been distributed recently among soldiers at Monmouth, N.J., and doubtless elsewhere.

This little 8-page newspaper stirs up as many soldier grievances as possible and winds up with the declaration that "the bosses of the United States plan to send us soldiers to destroy the Soviet Union", but—

"We as workers must refuse to do this dirty work for our masters, the bosses! Let us prepare and organize now not to fight against the Soviet Union, but for our class—the working class."

In February the first issue of the Yard Voice was distributed among navy-yard workers. This new propaganda publication, a single sheet as yet, is critically reviewed by the Daily Worker, which notes that:

"Of course, it will be the most important means for opening the eyes of the navy-yard workers to class consciousness and rally them for the final aim of the Communist Party—the overthrow of the capitalist system and the establishment of a soviet America with all that implies."

The Moscow thesis makes clear that this implies, for the United States, a replica of Russia's "Red October."

3. In the Young Worker on February 13, extracts from the speech of Comrade Chemedonov, secretary of the Young Communist International, were printed for the guidance of the Young Communist League of America.

MUST MOBILIZE

"From the Y.C.L.'ers of all countries it is now demanded", he said "that they mobilize all forces and energy for the struggle of the youth against their compulsory fascization and militarization."

Chemendonov assures youth that Soviet nonaggression treaties and American recognition do not end the danger of an attack upon the Soviet. Moreover, he tells youth bluntly:

"It is impossible for two mutually exclusive systems like the Socialist and capitalist systems to exist continually."

This makes clear that the drive to recruit youth aims to enlist them for the Soviet, and against America, in "the impending decisive battle for power." To the adult world, Moscow has been saying, "Let us live peaceably together."

YOUTH AS SPIES

The February issue of Fight indicates that youth is being enlisted in searching out and reporting factories making war supplies. Youth also is urged to make demonstrations at factories and around docks.

The Young Fighter, publisher by the Trade Union Unity League, Communist, of which William Z. Foster is the head, prints the six-point pledge of the youth section, American League Against War and Fascism, item two therein, reading:

"I pledge to work for the stoppage of all production and shipment of ammunition and war material."

In March a booklet of the Young Communist League was circulated containing this quote:

"Therefore we raised the slogan, 'Turn the imperialist war into civil war', which meant that when one of these wars for markets or colonies started and the bosses gave us guns and told us to go forward and kill other young workers, that we would take those guns, but instead of shooting down our fellow-workers across the trenches, we would, when the time was ripe, use these weapons against the capitalists."

Such things as these, per Moscow order, "concentrates forces on the vital part of the war machine."

Significantly, the Young People's Socialist League has refused a request to cooperate. They work for socialism through the ballot, not by the bullet.

4. Another section of the Moscow thesis orders "setting up fighting self-defense detachments."

5. Attacks upon national defense are made by the Communists by organizing so-called "antiwar congresses", into which many organizations or groups are drawn. Ostensibly against war, these congresses are used for agitation against defense programs.

On January 29, a "Bay Region Congress Against War and Fascism" was held in Berkeley, Calif. It was said to represent all shades of opinions, and 147 organizations. Ministers and educators spoke. It is cited as typical of the so-called "united front" tactics by which Communists obtain non-Communist support on many issues. Here, as elsewhere, Communist-drafted resolutions were passed.

PHRASE MONGERS

"Throughout the conference, the pacifist speakers were exposed in their true role as phrase-mongers", the Western Worker reported. "Dr. Aurelia Reinhardt, of Mills College, who gushed * * * thoroughly disgusted even the pacifist delegates * * *. The Rev. Lowther's speech was received very coldly.

"But when Rudie Lambert, speaking for the Workers' Ex-Servicemen's League, declared that as a Commmunist he was going into the Army in the next imperialist war and urge the workers to turn their weapons against their class enemies, he received the greatest ovation of the entire evening."

Before a congressional committee, William Z. Foster, the general secretary of the Communist Party of America and now head of its Trade Unity League, said:

"The revolutionary workers of every country have only one flag and that is the red flag, and all capitalists' flags are flags of the capitalist class, and we owe them no allegiance."

Communism in America is an efficient, organized machine.

It acknowledges allegiance to Moscow, not to Washington.

It is working on a carefully plotted plan, dictated by Moscow, and aimed at vital points.

Its openly announced objective is Soviet power in America.

UNITED STATES COMMUNISTS MEET SECRETLY TO INCREASE FIGHTING FITNESS—INTENSIVE CHECK-UP ON THE MEMBERSHIP ISS NOW IN PROGRESS—"TIGHTENING UP OF DISCIPLINE", AS ORDERED BY MOSCOW, IS CARRIED ON

(By Ralph M. Easley, chairman executive council, the National Civic Federation, as told to Earl Reeves)

The Red International of Moscow, through its thesis for the coming year's operations on January 13, gave orders to the Communist Party, United States of America, on preparing to go underground and on tightening up discipline and fighting fitness.

Since that time there has been increased activity in secret factions of the party. Many meetings of the type formerly held in local headquarters now are being held secretly in homes of party members.

CHECK-UP BEGUN

An intensive check-up is in process, not alone on the party membership, but throughout communistic mass organization; in which, for every party member, there are 10 to 20 aspirants to party membership.

Striking evidence regarding the tactics of communism in the United States will be given in this article from documents of the Communists themselves.

Communists recently held Lenin memorial mass meetings. One was held at Ninth and Grand Avenue, Los Angeles. Joseph Branch, director of the Communist Party school at San Francisco, spoke. He indicated that Communists within the United States consider themselves Russian subjects. He said:

"Manchuria is one of the danger spots of the world—for you here in California, fellow comrades.

"A most important point is that Manchuria borders upon our own land, our own country; it borders for approximately 2,000 miles on our country; a 2,000-mile line of the heroic Red Army.

CLASH WILL COME

"The Japanese militarists are not going to hesitate forever. At some point the clash will come.

"At that point we will have to take very serious measures to defend our country, our fatherland.

"Remember, 100 years ago Karl Marx said: 'We have no fatherland.' That was right at that time.

"But now when anyone says 'Defend your country,' tell them: "'Yes; I will defend my country. The only difference is that my country is on the other side of the world.'

"And tell them further that you intend to extend this country of yours until it extends and reaches around and engulfs the whole world."

Communism now is seeking out and publishing to its membership name and location of factories in the United States making war supplies. In the event of a Russo-Japanese war, if any of these supplies are destined for Japan, the plants manufacturing them become, in the minds of the Communists, enemies of their fatherland.

Similarly, if the United States becomes involved in war, that, in the eyes of Communists, is capitalist or imperialist war and by Communist doctrine it is necessary not only that they stop manufacture and shipment of ammunition and war supplies, but that they also strive to turn the imperialist war into civil war.

ARMY OF OCCUPATION

Many types of local citizens unwittingly cooperate with Communists. On no account should loyal citizens ever do so.

Communism is an enemy army of occupation within the United States.

Moscow ordered the building of the secret machinery which is now causing strikes, riots, and demonstrations. It is striving to cripple our national defense and seeking a strangle hold on vital sources of war supply.

The Red International has ordered such things as:

Training of small groups for strike and fight leadership, maintenance of secret organizations, tactics in street fighting methods of arming mobs, and use of barricades, such as appeared in the streets of Paris recently.

Excerpts from a Moscow document, published in six languages, with the United States heading the distribution list, follows:

Secrecy: "The question of an illegal organization must occupy the center of attention of all Communist Parties of the capitalist countries without exception.

"It is necessary to create illegal machinery immediately parallel to the legal machinery of the party. Addresses and places must be arranged for secret correspondence and secret meetings; and also for lodging illegal militants of the party. All the militants of the party should know what are the documents which should remain secret. There shall be no document left in the legal premises of the party which may give cause for (police) repression.

"As regards these premises it should be the general rule that the militant leaders should avoid being found there."

MYSTERY STRIKES

Strikes: Above all, it was emphasized that one branch of the Communist work must be secret.

"The factory cells absolutely must organize themselves immediately as illegal organizations and work with illegal methods."

These cells now cause mystery strikes and block settlements, spread unrest—and communism.

These cells also constitute communism's spy system within American industry.

In the event of revolution cell members expect to be appointed soviet directors of the plants in which they now are employed.

Riots: It must be recalled that while, at the time of armed insurrection, the watchword is, the offensive at all costs, revolutionary demonstrations are only training for war, and not real war. * * *

"To publish in advance the watchword 'armed demonstration' is to play at insurrection in an absurd fashion. Those who demand arms of the Communist Party are simply incapable of arming themselves.

"There is nothing against the spontaneous arming of demonstrators, but only against their general arming as the result of a watchword launched in advance and in the course of a period not yet ripe for armed insurrection.

CLASS WAR

"Nonresistance (against police) amounts to a betrayal of the principle of class war.

"Tactics: Organize marches of workers and starving poor in quarters inhabited by the rich * * * initiative groups to take leadership in demonstrations and all other Reds must follow the leadership of such groups * * * place closely knit groups here and there in crowds and through teamwork of the Red secret groups assume leadership of the entire gathering * * * force the police to disperse their forces. Special groups to be organized to act behind the police detachments and draw their attention away from the real center of the demonstration."

Communist demonstrators in America have used these tactics.

Such Moscow instructions should convince any reader of the true revolutionary nature of communism.

Dupes: The present Communist campaign is one of concentration on vital spots. The extraordinary conference held in New York last July ordered concentration on special factories, districts, and sections and on factory nuclei, local organizations, and street nuclei.

Except where communism has revolutionary unions of its own, it seeks strategic control at vital points, where the Nation can be crippled through other elements of the population, these being disaffected.

The sole objective of the Communists who use these groups is revolution and Soviet power in America.

This method of working was frankly revealed in the open letter which followed the extraordinary conference of last July, in a statement as follows:

"It goes without saying that it is our task to place ourselves at the head of every movement which breaks out spontaneously in the country, and to lead such movements.

"Or, where the reformist leaders stand at the head of the movement, to work for the exposure and replacement of the reformist leaders."

In other words, secretly penetrate and capture any movement which aims at reform or betterment of conditions. Turn it into channels of disrupting destructive criticism and agitation.

Again and again the Communists have done this very thing; and thus loyal citizens by hundreds of thousands have been made the unconscious tools of revolutionary communism. Loyal citizens should recognize communism for what it is and refuse to be its dupes.

A POLITE FICTION

Many have been bewildered by a polite fiction that the Third International has existed merely as a propaganda organization, having no connection with the Soviet Government. Prominent Americans, returning from Russia, have publicly stated this to be true.

It is untrue. Stalin directs both the Soviet Government and the Communist International. The latter is not merely a propaganda organization, but the actively functioning, fighting head and master of communism throughout the entire world.

Its orders are obeyed by the Communist Party of America.

Since American recognition, Stalin has acted to wipe out the always thin distinction between the Soviet Government and the Communist Party, welding the two into tightened unity. This action has been reported by Moscow correspondents, including those friendliest to the Soviet.

The directors of the Soviet are the directors of the recently speeded-up effort to bring about revolution in America.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

REGULATION OF THE COTTON INDUSTRY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word with reference to the bill now under consideration. I do not intend to enter into any discussion of its merits, but merely to put into the RECORD my own reaction and a very brief explanation of the vote which I shall cast.

I recognize that the times in which we are living are strange times, and strange remedies have to be brought forward for strange evils.

The bill now under consideration has been made temporary by the amendments which have been adopted by the Senate. I still am one of those who believe that it is of doubtful wisdom by legislation to take away from the farmer the right to cultivate the soil, the possession and title to which he has labored and struggled to obtain. Nevertheless, I recognize that almost the unanimous desire of the cotton growers of this country has been registered in behalf of the pending bill.

I do not know whether the provisions of the bill will work or not. I hope that if it shall be enacted it will work. I shall vote for it with all my fingers and toes crossed, and I want it understood that by so voting I am not in any way committing myself to any principle involved in this bill in respect to any future legislation that may come before the Senate.

There is a very small production of cotton in the State which I in part represent. There are a few counties along the Tennessee border where a little cotton is produced. I do not possess enough expert knowledge on the production and marketing of cotton to enable me to have absolute confidence in my own judgment as to what is best for the cotton producer, but I shall support this measure with the reservations stated, and with the understanding that I am doing it in order to try out the method which shall be adopted under the provisions of the bill and not in any way as a committal on my part upon that subject in the future.

That, Mr. President, is all I have to say. I have not shed any light on the subject, but my remarks were made for the purpose of explaining my own vote.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the pending measure. Many of the cotton farmers in my State are in favor of the proposed legislation. Perhaps a majority of the cotton farmers in Oklahoma favor this legislation. Oklahoma is the third or fourth cotton-producing State in the Union.

I deem it both a duty and a privilege to carry out the ascertained wishes of the farmers of my State when I can do so without violating my official oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. I still cling to the Constitution as to the horns of the altar.

I hope this measure will prove a practical success, but I fear that the farmers are winding a boa constrictor about themselves that one day may break every bone in their bodies. I cannot conscientiously cast my vote in favor of this measure. My objections are both economic and constitutional, if that stands for anything.

Thomas Jefferson once said:

Were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we should soon want bread.

If the farmers can be told when to plant, what to plant, and where to plant it, what not to plant, and where not to plant it, then what is left of private property; then what is left of individual liberty, when we have created a desert by statute?

Mr. President, if the present measure is constitutional, then nothing is unconstitutional. It would be difficult to imagine a measure that violates the letter and the spirit of the Constitution if this measures comes within its letter and comes within its spirit.

As I view it, it takes property without due process of law. It takes property without just compensation. It takes all that land is, the rents, the revenues, and the profits arising from the land. Destroy a man's rents, revenues, and profits arising from the land and you destroy the value of the land itself.

If you destroy the value, what is left of the property itself. Of what value—of what avail is the barren fig tree? Destroy the value of property and you take property without due process of law. Upon this point I shall content myself with having read one sentence from that distinguished and fearless English jurist, Sir Edward Coke.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

As according to the feudal law, the whole beneficial interest in the land consisted in the right to take the * * * rents and profits, the general rule has always been, in the language of Coke, that "if a man seized of land in fee by his deed granteth to another the profits of those lands, to have and to hold to him and his heirs, and making livery secundum forman chartes, the whole land itself doth pass. For 'What is the land but the profits thereof?' Coke, Lit. 45, and that a devise of the rents and profits or of the income of lands passes the land itself both at law and in equity." (1 Jarv. Wills., 5th ed., and cases cited.)

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD prior to the final vote on the passage of the bill a clipping from the Chicago Tribune headed "Iowan Discovers Tax on Hog Sale is 57 Percent of Price"; two editorials from the Atlantic News Telegraph, of Atlantic, Iowa, one headed "They'll Never Stand For It", and the other headed "The Logical Result"; and also an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune of this morning entitled "The Real 'Revolution'."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune]

IOWAN DISCOVERS TAX ON HOG SALE IS 57 PERCENT OF PRICE

Dr. J. T. Waite, a veterinarian of Kossuth County, Iowa, was staggered to find that the processing tax on 41½ tons of hogs he marketed here this week was equivalent to 57 percent of the total market price on this huge consignment.

He sold 187 hogs, weighing 83,730 pounds, for a total of $3,300. The tax amounted to $1,884.

"People don't realize what a tax-mad administration means until it strikes home", he said.

"Where else in the world is there a product under a taxation as heavy or as unreasonable as this one. I would be well satisfied to make the profit on my hogs that the Government is getting."

Dr. Waite's highly improved farm, or "hog factory", as he calls it, turns out about 160 tons of hogs annually.

[From the Atlantic (Iowa) News Telegraph]

THEY'LL NEVER STAND FOR IT

Dispatches of Monday announced that the Bankhead bill, designed to nationalize and regiment the cotton industry by allocating to every raiser of cotton the amount of that product he can plant and cultivate and harvest, had passed the House of Representatives at Washington. If this bill becomes a law, the raiser of cotton will be forced to comply with governmental regulation and governmental dictation as to the amount he can raise for the 3 years it is effective. We are not arguing in this discussion the merits or demerits of the plan. We are simply setting forth our idea as to the reaction to such legislation. Should the Cotton Control Act become a law, inevitably other agricultural commodities will come under the same regulation. Secretary Wallace, who perhaps is the best informed of the "new dealers" on agricultural subjects, is understood to believe that if the present agricultural relief measures do not produce the desired results compulsory curtailment of crops and Government regulation of the farmer's every move are inevitable.

The farmers of the United States will never stand for any such an arrangement. Regardless of under what guise it is presented, they will never subscribe to a nationalized agriculture. They have such a set-up in Russia, and few farmers that we know want to see the country Russianized. Already, in the face of what has been done toward the control of the farmer's activities by voluntary cooperation on his part, there are rumblings of discontent, born of the governmental control of his operations. These rumblings are but a whisper compared with what will come if and when the Government sets about to make the regulation mandatory. Of all the men in the economic set-up, the farmer is the most highly individualistic. That has been the story of American agriculture from its earliest beginnings. The farmer does not want any Government functionary messing around his place telling him what to do and when to do it. Anyone who thinks he does is not in possession of the facts. Nationalization of agriculture will bring fireworks. Anyone with half an eye can see that as the result. The Democratic administration will dig its own political grave whenever it starts in on that policy.

[From the Atlantic (Iowa) News Telegraph]

THE LOGICAL RESULT

A friend of ours, in a recent conversation, decried the incursion of the Government into the affairs of every individual. He gave it as his opinion that our traditional personal liberties are gradually disappearing in a wholesale application of paternalism by Uncle Sam, and that if a halt is not called the individual citizen will soon be a helpless and spineless creature of the central government, whose every move and every activity will be regulated by government ukase.

This friend of ours is warranted in what he says. There is a tendency for the Government to mix too much in the affairs of the individual. There is a tendency away from the traditional personal liberty which has characterized the United States of America. But, seeking for the cause, we think, one does not have to probe very far.

In the last 2 decades or more there has been growing up in this country the theory that the central government is Santa Claus and that Christmas comes every day. Gradually, and at times almost imperceptibly, the dangerous philosophy has fastened itself into our reckonings that the purpose of the Federal Government is to dole out largess to various groups of its citizens and to wet-nurse their activities whatever they may be. We have been in a fair way of becoming a government by blocs. The various groups of our citizens who have sought entree to the Public Treasury have gained it largely by the threat of political reprisals against Congressmen who would not listen to reason. The result is that everybody has wanted to get something and few have offered to give anything. We have become an organized appetite and we have looked to the Federal Government to take care of the various wants and demands of groups of citizens with influential voting power.

It is the principle of human existence that one cannot get something for nothing. A price must be paid in life for all that we are able to attain. Inevitably it is an impossibility for the Government to subsidize particular groups of people in the country and not gradually assume a control over their activities. If there is too much government in business and too much governmental interference in the affairs of the individual, it is because we have brought it on ourselves. We have made a bid for it. The cause of the present tendency goes deeper than the numerous activities of the new deal. It goes back much further than these activities. It is the logical result of the insistence by groups of citizens that their Government owes them something and that the approved policy is to get everything possible out of that Government. The result is a lessening of the old independent relation borne toward the Federal Government by the average citizen. If we insist that the Government enter into all phases of our lives by acting as our guardian and our financier and our rescuer, then we should not complain if it results in a gradually increasing control by that Government of our individual affairs. The two go together. They are irrevocably linked up. It is impossible that the individual citizen can have no Government interference in his affairs but at the same time act as the guardian of those affairs in a financial way. There is no escaping this logic.

After all is said and done, our Government is pretty much representative of ourselves. If we sow the seeds of governmental participation in our individual activities, the harvest is bound to be a little more of the same. The personal liberty of the citizen is curtailed the moment he asks his Uncle Sam to act as his benefactor. The theory that the Government owes us something is a false theory, but its lure has become strong in our day. In its wake it is bound to bring more governmental messing in our lives and the consequent lessening of the vaunted personal liberty of the individual citizen. This is just as immutable a rule as the law of gravitation.

THE REAL REVOLUTION

The efforts to smear Dr. Wirt and to whitewash the "brain trust" should not be permitted to distract attention from the basic charges in Dr. Wirt's letter. These have little to do with Kerenskys and Stalins, but much to do with fundamental changes in our social, economic, and poltical structure involved in measures already passed by or introduced into Congress. These measures, giving life to the new deal, have made it possible for the Government in Washington to:

1. Tell the American farmer how much he may grow, and punish him with a fine if he grows more.

2. Tell American storekeepers what prices they must charge for articles they sell. (Already a man in Rochester has been arraigned for the crime of giving away a loaf of bread with a bottle of milk that he sold.)

3. Fix prices for services such as tailoring. (Already men have been punished in California, Michigan, Illinois, and Alabama for charging a few cents less for pressing a dress than the price fixed in Washington.)

4. License industries, limiting their hours of work, their output, the prices of their products, and even their right to modernize their plants.

5. Exercise powers of life or death over business operations through the arbitrary use of the tariff-making powers by the President rather than by Congress.

6. Attempt to control sources of credit through the securities bill and the stock-exchange regulations and the new banking bills.

7. Confiscate personal property through the forced surrender of gold and the subsequent devaluation of the dollar.

8. Cripple an entire industry like aviation by preferring unspecified and as yet unproved charges of corruption and collusion in obtaining contracts and by summarily canceling these contracts without a hearing or a fair trial.

These—to mention but a few of the departures from the old American system—do not signify revolution. But through most of them runs the desire to consolidate arbitrary and almost dictatorial powers in the hands of the Federal Government, and to set as a goal a sort of planned economy in which the Federal Government is to determine the entire productive activities of the country. A planned economy implies not only a surrender of individual rights to the National Government but the creation by the National Government of a large bureau of compliance (to use the new-deal terminology for what used to be called "enforcement"). We shall have to have an industrial and agricultural "cheka."

These changes lead, unless checked, to the establishment of a sort of economic despotism in place of democracy. This is the goal of much of the new deal. And this, unless we misread the sound sense that is sandwiched in with the gossip and chaff in

Dr. Wirt's letter, is what he warns against. Certainly most of his fellow countrymen have so far failed to perceive that such a danger lies ahead.

It is not too late to call a halt. The President is still in midstream and the course that some of his advisers have been urging on him has not yet been run. There can be no possible doubt as to the Nation's reaction once it knows the whole truth. Only if those who are seeking thus to effect unperceived changes in our system succeed in stifling discussion is there any fear of the outcome.

The fullest possible discussion of the new deal is therefore imperative—including the ideals as well as the acts to date of the so-called "brain trust." The service of Dr. Wirt's letter has been to facilitate such an airing. It may be that the country wishes to submit to a regimented planned economy. But before submitting it should at least have a chance to know that such a planned economy is another name for paternalism or benevolent autocracy, and that as such it is the negation of the American system under which this Nation grew great and powerful.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass? On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when Mr. JOHNSON's name was called). The senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has a pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. If the Senator from Louisiana were present, he would vote "yea", and if the Senator from California were present he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEBERT (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and let my vote stand. If present, the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay", and the Senator from Illinois, if present, would vote "yea."

I desire to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 39, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I think this will be the first time I have ever made an explanation of any vote I have cast. I wish to say in regard to my vote on the so-called "Bankhead cotton bill" that the vote was cast with rather strong misgivings as to the probable effects which may come from its enactment. The measure was passed with very great doubt on my part as to its constitutionality. However, I have cast aside those misgivings. I have been willing to allow the bill to pass without any expression from me with reference to its constitutionality. I realize the serious condition of those who live in the cotton-growing States; I realize that relief should be given to them; and for that reason I have been willing to allow this chance to be taken; in other words, to let the bill be passed without any protest from me.

I am not presumptuous enough to believe, Mr. President, that if I had expressed these thoughts before the vote was taken, before the roll was called, any Senator would have been affected by what I might have said. But I did not know whether the bill would be passed, and I did not care to make this expression then because I know the strong desire of the people of the South with reference to the legislation, and I did not want, if the bill had been defeated, to have it said by anyone that I contributed to that defeat. Hence the delay in expressing myself in regard to the measure.

INCLUSION OF CATTLE AS A BASIC COMMODITY—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By virtue of an order previously made, the Senate will now proceed to consider bills on the calendar to which there is no objection.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before that is done, I ask that the conference report on the so-called "cattle bill" be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there is so much disorder in the Chamber that I did not understand the nature of the request of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I asked that the conference report on the so-called "cattle bill" be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of the report, but I should like to have an explanation of it from the chairman of the Senate conferees.

Mr. SMITH. The conferees have agreed on the report, the nature of which will be indicated by the clerk when he reads it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7478) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle as a basic agricultural commodity, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 7.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 6. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $50,000,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make advances to the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation for the purchase of dairy and beef products for distribution for relief purposes, and to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, under rules and regulations to be promulgated by him and upon such terms as he may prescribe, to eliminate diseased dairy and beef cattle, including cattle suffering from tuberculosis or Bangs' disease, and to make payments to owners with respect thereto."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "To amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle and other products as basic agricultural commodities, and for other purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

E. D. SMITH,
ELMER THOMAS,
GEO. McGILL,
G. W. NORRIS,
CHAS. L. McNARY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
WALL DOXEY,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
J. ROLAND KINZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina defer his request for the consideration of the report for a few moments on account of the absence of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who expressed a desire to be present when the report was considered? He will be in the Chamber in a few minutes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in the meantime, we might occupy a few moments by having the Senator from South Carolina explain the conference report. We cannot be advised by hearing the numbers of the admendments read.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, there were included by the Senate——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will not the Senator defer his request until the Senator from Wyoming may be present?

Mr. BORAH. In the meantime, I should like to know what the report is.

Mr. SMITH. I will defer my request until the Senator from Wyoming comes in, and then I will ask that the conference report be laid before the Senate.

(At this point several matters of routine business were transacted, which appear under the appropriate headings.)

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I say that I have communicated with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] and ascertained that he has no objection, and therefore I have no objection to the consideration of the conference report at this time.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I renew my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7478) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle as a basic agricultural commodity, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the report is now before the Senate. As the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has asked for an explanation, I will say that the Senate added certain agricultural products as basic commodities. The House agreed to those amendments. There was a certain amount provided in the bill to carry out the intent and purpose of adding of these basic commodities. That provision was retained in the bill.

There was added to the bill as it came from the House a provision for $150,000,000 for the purposes specified in the several amendments, chief among which was the purchase of certain milk cows to be distributed among needy families, and also for eradication of certain diseases, tuberculosis and other diseases, among cattle.

After consultation with the representatives of the Department it was found that there would be some difficulty not only in administration but in getting an amount sufficient to carry out the purposes of the measure, so the $150,000,000 was reduced to $50,000,000 but including the major point contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The last amendment, which had to do with increasing the items that would be considered in the parity price, namely, freight, insurance, and taxes, we found was already practically included in the process, and the Senate receded on that amendment.

In the main, the major action of the conference was in the reduction of the amount of money that was asked for in the Senate amendment, reducing it from $150,000,000 to $50,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator say that the total amount now carried in the measure as submitted by the conference report is not reimbursable to the Treasury?

Mr. SMITH. The testimony given by the Secretary of Agriculture was that ultimately this money will all be returned to the Treasury through certain processing taxes, as he claims. He wants to start the industry without having to cripple the price level by insertion of these matters until such time as supply can be adjusted to the demand.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to be sure I understand the Senator. Is the Senator now saying that the entire amount appropriated for the cattle fund is to be reimbursed from the processing tax?

Mr. SMITH. I think that is the purpose of the Department of Agriculture, though it is not so specified in this bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator understands that in the course of the debate on the bill we were told some 15 or 20 different things respecting this particular proposition. Some Senators voted for the bill on the theory that there was going to be no processing tax, and all of it was bounty; some on the theory that the beneficiaries were going to get half of it as bounty; and some voted for it on the theory that it was all a processing tax. I was wondering if, in the final show-down, the Senator can tell me with some conclusiveness whether the money is going out of the Treasury for keeps, whether part of it is coming back, or whether all of it is coming back?

Mr. SMITH. It all depends entirely upon what is going to be the price level that may be brought about without the processing tax. If there should be sufficient recovery to bring the prices up to where parity is reached, of course, there would be no processing tax. But in adjusting affairs it is claimed that the Department will have to have a certain amount, not the entire amount, because it is believed that will not be necessary at the beginning, but if it is necessary for them to consume this amount they will do so, and under the general A.A.A. act they may impose a processing tax. My opinion is that the Treasury will be reimbursed through a processing tax to the amount that is necessary to be used out of the $200,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is that entirely discretionary with the Department?

Mr. SMITH. That is discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, if I now understand the situation correctly, this is a permissive $200,000,000 grant, and whether or not any of it is chargeable to the Treasury is dependent upon the discretion of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration? Is that a correct statement?

Mr. SMITH. That is true. The Senator has stated the situation as I understand it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Was there any protest in the conference from the Director of the Budget against this particular use of money, or is the amount to be charged to this collateral budget which we never shall have to balance?

Mr. SMITH. There was no protest from him, but he did discuss the $50,000,000 involved in the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. That we did discuss; but the Director of the Budget did not discuss with us the $200,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What did the Director say about the $50,000,000? Was he in favor of that?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; he thought perhaps that could be handled.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Did he suggest that we ought to provide the taxes to raise that particular amount in the same connection?

Mr. SMITH. No. What they thought could be done was that this amount could be gotten from what was known as the "relief fund" which is already provided for, and perhaps it might be gotten through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. After we discussed that question we just made it an appropriation and left it up to them to find the money. It is here in the form of relief in one or two or three departments.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, this could, under certain circumstances, represent an appropriation of $250,000,000 out of the Treasury?

Mr. SMITH. It could, under certain conditions; but I do not think we are justified in assuming that all this money will come out of the Treasury. I myself think that a good portion of the $200,000,000 is going to come out of the processing tax. I think so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But many who are supporting the bill are doing so on the contrary theory, that there will be no processing tax and no reimbursement. So the truth of the matter is that it is a blind speculation with a quarter of a billion dollars.

Mr. MURPHY and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, before the cattle bill was passed I put in the RECORD a letter from Secretary Wallace, in which he said that a processing tax would be imposed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then the Senator from Iowa disagrees with the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. No; we do not disagree, because in the discussion, when we sent for the members of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, they were indefinite as to whether or not the amount provided here would all be raised by imposing a processing tax. If it should be necessary to use it all before we reached a parity price, it would all be collectible out of a processing tax; but they said to us that the parity price was predicated upon certain movements they had in view, and that it might not be necessary to use all this amount of $200,000,000 and have it reimbursed through a processing tax.

The Senator is just about right when he says we have made available, if necessary, $250,000,000, of which $50,000,000 has no reference to a processing tax. That is a relief fund. That is distinctly the proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. The $200,000,000 may all be used and reimbursed by a processing tax.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Or not.

Mr. SMITH. Or not; yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And we are entirely at the mercy of the Secretary of Agriculture and Dr. Ezekiel and the rest of them in that answer.

Mr. MURPHY and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MURPHY. I have referred to the letter from Secretary Wallace. Here it is:

> In response to your telephone request, I wish to state that if beef cattle were made a basic commodity under the Agricultural Adjustment Act we would not plan to impose a processing tax on beef until a plan for controlling beef-cattle production and marketing through a system of contracts with producers had been developed and agreed upon by beef-cattle producers.
> The act provides that whenever benefit payments to producers are to be made with respect to any basic agricultural commodity, a processing tax shall be in effect with respect to that commodity from the beginning of the following marketing year. It would be our policy to levy only a small tax at the beginning and to proclaim increases in the tax only as marketing conditions in the industry had improved to the extent that the increased tax would not react unfavorably on producers. We could proclaim a marketing year beginning either in the fall or spring.
> Sincerely yours,
> H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

As I read that letter, the Secretary of Agriculture will be free to use $200,000,000 in furtherance of his plans to increase the price of cattle, and he will employ some of those plans to build up the price of cattle at least in an amount sufficient to resist the impact of the processing tax, which, in my opinion, will fall largely on the producer.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, does he find in the language of the letter he has read anything which undertakes to state that the entire sum is to be reimbursed?

Mr. MURPHY. I do not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is what I am trying to find out—how much of the appropriation we are now making is a floating appropriation at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to reach in or out of the Treasury when, as, and if he sees fit.

Mr. MURPHY. If the Senator please, I submit that it is in contemplation to recover this money—in what amount I confess I do not know—but to recover money with the processing tax.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is the Senator's confession which interests me.

Mr. MURPHY. I do not know in what amount it will be recovered. Personally, I hope that not a great deal of it will thus be recovered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Exactly; and so do most of those who voted for the bill.

Mr. MURPHY. But the contemplation of the law, in my opinion, is that there shall be recovery through the processing tax of expenditures made, as to the $200,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, the Senator's hopes and interpretations are at war with each other.

Mr. MURPHY. Exactly.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, if the processing tax is imposed, the incidence will be upon the producer.

Mr. MURPHY. In my opinion it will largely be there until supply falls short of demand.

Mr. BORAH. It will be something like the jute tax.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] if he justifies legislation which puts into the hands of any official—except possibly in time of war—$200,000,000, or any sum, without any limitations upon the uses to which it shall be put.

It seems to me we ought to say either that this is a gift of $200,000,000, or that it is a loan to be repaid.

I should dislike to vote for this bill, much as I might desire, if we do not know whether the amount appropriated is to be used for specific purposes or is to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture or officials in the Department as they may see fit. It seems to me it is unwise and improper legislation to turn over to an official of the Government $200,000,000 to spend as he may see fit in the execution of some plan that is not yet proposed, and which may depend upon its form upon many unforeseen contingencies.

We may not justify legislation taxing the people of the United States millions of dollars, the expenditure of which rests solely in the discretion of some Federal official.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have had no opportunity to look into the conference report. I signed the conference report upon faith and confidence in the members who attended the conference. As I read the report hurriedly, it occurred to me that the only changes made were regarding the disposal of $50,000,000 out of $200,000,000.

Unquestionably, when cattle become a basic agricultural commodity they become subject to the processing tax and all provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. About that I have no doubt whatsoever.

The $50,000,000 is made available to the Department of Agriculture to treat tuberculosis in cattle, which is the policy of the country, and the annual appropriation bills carry large sums for that purpose; and this is supplemental thereto, except that it includes Bangs' disease of cattle. The policy of the country has been always for the Federal Government, in the destruction of diseased cattle, to pay one third of their value; the owner pays one third and the State pays one third. We are not inaugurating a new policy. We are extending and supplementing the sums of money carried by the agricultural appropriation bill. Also, part of this money goes into a relief fund which may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in any way he thinks it might better the condition of the cattle industry. To me that is perfectly plain and certain. As to the processing tax, there can be no doubt whatever that when any commodity is made a basic commodity it becomes subject to all the provisions contained in the original act.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I stated frankly to both the Senators who made inquiry that after having discussed this matter back and forth we sent for members of the Agricultural Department to come down and explain what the $200,000,000 was for. Every man knew that the minute cattle should become a basic agricultural commodity, under the terms of the Agricultural Adjustment Act they would be subject to a processing tax; but the explanation given us was practically along the lines stated by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] and myself. The representatives of the Department said that after they had figured up about what would be necessary to put the whole act in operation at once, to make the necessary expenditures for benefits and otherwise, they estimated that $200,000,000 would be necessary to put it into operation as had been done in the case of other basic agricultural commodities. But, according to the letter read by the Senator from Iowa and the testimony before our committee, they seemed to have some mental reservation that they would not use all of the processing tax on account of certain agreements they might enter into with certain of those who were engaged in the beef-cattle business.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the course of their explanation, did they give the Senator any satisfactory reason as to why they need $200,000,000 as a fund for one commodity, whereas the original A.A.A. act provided only $100,000,000 for all seven of the staples of the country? Why do they need twice as much for cattle?

Mr. SMITH. The reason they gave was that that amount, in their opinion, would be necessary if they did not enter into any of the trade agreements which were signified by the letter written to the Senator from Iowa.

In all the mysteries connected with this matter it is not fair for the Senator from Michigan to ask me to stand here and unravel the mental processes of those dealing with it. I cannot do it. I can only take their word, and their word was that they might not use all this fund if they could enter into certain trade agreements. But to whatever extent there is an expense incident to getting this matter adjusted, the money will be reimbursed to the Treasury through the imposition of a processing tax. That is all I know about it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his candor. Inasmuch as he was not able to understand it at first-hand, he will absolve me of any ignorance in not being able to understand it at second-hand.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator will recall that when the cattle people were here in a convention to present this subject to the Department of Agriculture, the Secretary of Agriculture communicated with various Senators. I received a letter from him asking whether, in my judgment, the opinion of the Congress would be that cattle should be added to the Adjustment Act as a basic commodiy, or whether it would be better to do what many cattlemen wanted, to have $200,000,000 paid out of the Treasury as a subsidy to cattle raisers. The question was specific as to which would be the better.

My reply to the Secretary of Agriculture was that since we are in this experimental stage, if cattle were to be included in the granting of any special assistance from the Government, it would be logical to add cattle to the Adjustment Act as an additional basic commodity, rather than to take the new field of making a direct subsidy.

I have not heard anything more than what the papers have stated, but, to be perfectly frank, it seems to me that the object was to avoid any criticism, and, at the same time get the $200,000,000, to add cattle as a basic commodity, and then ask for the $200,000,000 in addition. I may be wrong, but that seems to me to be exactly what was done.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in reply to that, there was bitter opposition for a while against any processing tax, but if my memory serves me correctly, those who came before the committee who had been opposed to the processing tax were willing to forego their objections in order to get their commodity included as a basic commodity.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio, as well as to the Senator from South Carolina, that a great many of the cattlemen, when this matter first arose, opposed it because they were antagonistic to the processing tax, but later on, when they realized there was no other way by which they could get any relief except to take their chances with the processing tax, the majority of the cattlemen from my section of the country were willing and anxious to have the bill enacted, even though it did carry a processing tax.

Mr. FESS. Do they not get the $200,000,000 just the same?

Mr. CONNALLY. No.

Mr. FESS. Is not that what they asked for?

Mr. CONNALLY. They asked for it. They have to have an operating fund, but if their commodity is included in the Agricultural Adjustment Act as a basic commodity, then it goes in just like all other basic commodities, and the law provides that if any direct benefits are paid to the cattle people, the Secretary of Agriculture shall be required to put on a processing tax.

Mr. FESS. I understand. I will say to the Senator that I am not criticizing those who were objecting to the processing tax, because if the processing tax could be passed on to the consumer, then the producer would get some benefit from the legislation; but if a processing tax is assessed on the producer and paid by him alone, he will be worse off than he was before.

Mr. CONNALLY. The chances are that the processing tax will not all be passed on to the consumer, and will not all come out of the producer. The chances are that a part of it will come out of each. Just as in the case of any other factor of cost, it is very seldom passed on 100 percent; but if the producer gets 50 percent more than he is now getting, and the consumer does have to pay a little more, the plan will be beneficial; and that is the way I think it will work.

Mr. FESS. It is a very uncertain sort of legislation. Nobody knows what is going to be done.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly. It is a new field; it is virgin soil; it is experimental, and we never move the world forward an inch except by the process of experimentation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH. I yield the floor. I am perfectly willing to answer any question as to what the conferees have done, and, as far as possible, to illuminate the subject; but I am not here defending the bill one way or another. I am simply upholding the conference report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of some Senator who can give information as to whether or not this $200,000,000, or any part of it, is to be used as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, in his discretion, whether he may impose a processing tax or not as he pleases, whether he may expend the whole or any part of it without making any provision to recoup the Treasury for a single dollar. I should like to know whether it is a gift, a gratuity, or a loan; and no one seems to be able to answer.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes, Mr. President; there is no question about it. I think it has been made perfectly manifest that, to whatever extent they use any part of this $200,000,000, it is going to be subject to a processing tax to that amount to reimburse the Treasury.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from South Carolina this question: In view of the fact that statements have been made indicating that where processing taxes have been authorized there have been or will be deficits of five or six hundred million dollars, whether we should treat all of these appropriations as gratuities or whether we should not make it clear in the bill that sufficient taxes are to be levied and collected as will meet all expenditures?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not think there need be any question about whether money which was advanced from any other source went to reimburse the source from which it came. I do not know who is going to pay, whether the producer or the consumer. I have my ideas about what has happened up to the present; and if the Senator will recall, I stood here, when the bill providing for the Agricultural Administration was before the Senate, and stoutly opposed the processing tax, because, in the first place, I did not believe in the principle of it; it was applying a high protective tariff. In the next place, I had serious doubt as to who would pay it. I have none now; I had then. I had serious doubts. But I do not think the Department of Agriculture should be charged with squandering money outside of the provisions of law. So far as I know, they have meticulously observed the law, and wherever this tax has been imposed and collected, if the money had been advanced from some other source pending the collection of the tax, it has gone to reimburse that source, and the processing tax, whenever it shall be collected, will be, under the terms of the law, turned back to the producers ratably, according to the amount they have sold. I am not here holding any brief for the Department of Agriculture, but I do believe they are observing the law fairly and meticulously.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] a day or two ago presented figures, which I understood had been obtained in response to an inquiry or resolution of the Senate addressed to the Department of Agriculture, which showed, if I remember his statement, that, notwithstanding the processing taxes which had been imposed with reference to those basic agricultural commodities as to which the tax had been levied, there was a deficit of five or six hundred million dollars.

If we are proceeding upon the theory that the processing tax is to recoup the Treasury for the hundreds of millions of dollars which are taken from it, and the figures submitted by the Senator from Iowa are correct, obviously we are living in a sort of fool's paradise, and we may have a deficit of more than five or six hundred million dollars growing out of the enforcement of the basic agricultural commodity measures.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Only in the interest of accuracy I am compelled to make this statement and correct the Senator from Utah. It never has been $500,000,000 or $600,000,000.

Mr. KING. I am merely stating figures which I understood the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] gave to the Senate a day or so ago. I have no independent knowledge as to the deficits to be incurred under the basic agricultural commodity measures.

Mr. McNARY. I do know, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to get the information.

Mr. McNARY. There has been levied in the aggregate in processing taxes on wheat and cotton about $235,000,000. Therefore there could not be a loss of $500,000,000.

With respect to the situation as concerns cotton. The processing tax this year, as estimated by the Secretary of Agriculture in the release which he made Monday, clearly indicates that the accumulation from the imposition and collection of the tax will be $116,000,000; the amount advanced in the nature of benefits is $125,000,000; or a loss of $9,000,000 on cotton for the crop year of 1933–34. Necessarily there must be some variance between the processing tax and the benefit, because the estimate is made of the parity price by the Secretary of Agriculture before the tax is imposed. When he imposed the tax it was on the basis of an estimate he had made, probably based upon the best advice he had. So when the estimate of the processing tax is $116,000,000, in fact the benefits accruing were $125,000,000, or a net loss of $9,000,000. That is the situation with respect to cotton.

The report on wheat is not in, but the benefits to wheat have been $110,000,000, paid out in the same crop year. The amounts collected in the processing tax have not as yet been announced. So I repeat that the Senator's figures are quite awry; but there never can be an accurate arrangement, because one is an approximation, the other is a collection imposed by tax.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] is now in the Chamber. I used his name a few moments ago in connection with a statement which he made a day or two ago as to the deficits resulting from the enforcement of the basic agricultural acts. The Senator referred to the processing taxes collected and, as I understood him, indicated there would be a deficit of several hundred million dollars. I shall be glad if the Senator will correct me if I am in error.

Mr. DICKINSON. What figure did the Senator use?

Mr. KING. Several hundred million. I think I stated $500,000,000 or $600,000,000.

Mr. DICKINSON. As a matter of fact, what has happened to date is that the processing tax has brought in about $235,000,000. The estimates given in the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture were that the entire A.A.A. would cost us about $855,000,000. The figures in the report are all official figures. But, of course, the processing tax will be collected between now and July 1. Therefore we do not know exactly what the deficit will be.

With reference to the particular items——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. Permit me to finish my statement and I shall yield.

With reference to the particular items in the Agricultural Adjustment Act report which has just come out, on page 284 will be found a reference to cotton for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934. The collections of processing taxes will amount to $134,700,000 up to July 1, 1934.

Then the various credits are given for the various contributions that have been made to charitable organizations, drawbacks, and so forth, with the net collections up to June 30, 1934, of $129,700,000.

The rental payments to date for the 1933 crop were $112,000,000.

The rental payments on the 1934 crop, $50,388,000.

Total expenditures $162,000,000, with the excess of expenditures over collections of $32,688,000.

Then an estimate is given for the year 1935.

With reference to wheat, it shows an excess of expenditures over collections of $6,500,000.

With reference to corn and hogs, a total expenditure of $430,000,000.

The processing tax there, after giving credit to that, shows a net deficit of $97,045,000.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator what those net credits are? As a matter of fact that would be a loss, would it not? Would it not be a charge upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. KING. How much were they? They would be many millions of dollars?

Mr. DICKINSON. Credit is taken in the report for what is known as the "Bankhead fund." The Bankhead fund was a fund created under the agricultural act that was allocated to the various commodities, and, of course, they took credit for that fund. They are not entitled to a credit for that fund. Besides it is purely a payment out of the Federal Treasury.

As to how much the processing tax will amount to between now and the 1st of July, I do not believe the Department officials themselves can estimate. The fact is that for this month of March it will be about $35,000,000 or $36,000,000. As we go into the months of April, May, and June, it will be less. Why? Because we have less processing of pork and less processing of wheat in those months. I do not know what it will be with reference to cotton. I do not know about the ginning of cotton.

I think we are safe in saying that with the expenditures, which are in the nature of rental benefits and the other types of benefits that have been paid out, we will have a deficit of about one-half billion dollars.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I hold no brief for the processing tax. I think the statement is not fairly made as respects that tax. Expenditures have been made that are nonrecurring. To illustrate, in the case of hogs, they bought last year 6,000,000 pigs and something over 200,000 sows. There will not be a repetition of that expenditure.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, does the Senator mean that a hog can be killed only once?

Mr. DICKINSON and Mr. CAREY rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield to my colleague from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to suggest that there has not been a repetition of the original purchases, but remember that the Department of Agriculture daily is making extensive purchases of hogs and paying packers for processing, and they are being distributed for emergency relief purposes. The mayor of an eastern city told me recently that the Department was shipping in so much stuff there that they did not know what in the world to do with it. They could not use it all.

So with regard to the statement that the purchase of pigs will not be recurring, it will be recurring unless we provide a way by which we can prevent the Department from doing what section 24 of the cotton bill would have permitted to be done—which section the Senator from Utah had stricken from the bill—and that is to continue to buy this stuff for emergency purposes when, as a matter of fact, the purchase is purely for the purpose of maintaining a price stabilization to avoid the real effect of the processing tax on price levels.

Mr. MURPHY. I should think the real purpose is not that which has been stated by my colleague. There is an association of purposes. To prevent what we are doing we would have to do away with poverty. We are buying pork and we are feeding it to the poor. There is a contribution to the processing of the pork and the cost of the hog by A.A.A. and the relief administration.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question with reference to his statement that such purchases would not recur. Does the Senator not think there is a possibility of another crop of pigs this year that would have to be purchased?

Mr. MURPHY. I am proceeding on the assumption that the program is being worked out, and that there will be a greatly restricted number of hogs.

To resume the thought I was expressing, this processing tax will continue long after these extraordinary expenditures shall have been made. So the disparity between income and outgo that shows today will not show after the processing tax has been in operation for a much longer period. We started the processing tax in the case of hogs with $1, and today that tax is $2.25. That tax is intended to yield the money out of which the benefits are paid to the producer. It is manifestly unfair to strike a balance today as between expenditures in connection with the program and income from the processing tax. We ought to be fair, and not seek to strike that balance until sufficient time shall have elapsed to permit the collection of sufficient processing money.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. Then it will be possible for the Department of Agriculture to keep increasing the processing taxes until the money is repaid?

Mr. MURPHY. I would say to the Senator that the Agricultural Department increases the processing tax very reluctantly, because increasing the tax arrests consumption and thereby, in a way, defeats the success of its plan. It ought to appear that we cannot make cattle a basic commodity without imposing a processing tax, and our experience with hogs does not warrant the assumption that this money is going to be taken as a gratuity out of the Federal Treasury and given to the farmer.

I have stated my conviction already as to hogs, and I restate it. In my belief, practically all the processing tax comes out of the producers of hogs. If that be true, it does not lie in the mouth of any man here to assert that this appropriation intended for cattle is going to come out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. KING. If I understood the Senator, he stated that the processing taxes would continue for some time. I was wondering when the law will deny the Agricultural Department the authority to impose a processing tax? It is not indefinite, is it?

Mr. MURPHY. The theory of the processing tax is that it will decline as prices approach parity. When prices shall have attained parity the processing tax will disappear, according to the theory of the plan.

Mr. KING. What I wanted to ask the Senator was whether or not the basic agricultural commodity law does not expire by limitation or is it to continue permanently?

Mr. MURPHY. It is an emergency act.

Mr. KING. Then, when that——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I answer the Senator?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. As the Senator may remember, in the text of the original act it is stated, as it was also stated by the Department which is the proponent of the bill, that when parity shall be reached between what the farmer has to buy and what he has to sell, based upon a comparison between the two prices in a given year—and the basic years are stated in the original organic act—whenever the prices shall reach that parity, if the price of what the farmer has to buy goes up, of course, it will be necessary to keep pushing up the price of the raw material until it shall reach that parity. There is no fixed price; but when it reaches that parity, all processing taxes cease.

Mr. KING. But suppose the price does not reach that parity in the lifetime of the able Senator, then what?

Mr. SMITH. Then it will be necessary to pay the processing tax.

Mr. KING. Then this proposed law may be continued indefinitely?

Mr. SMITH. The contemplation of the law, its theory, is that the processors shall pay to the producers a tax that will make up the difference between that parity, and so long as that difference exists that tax will be placed upon the processors. Who will pay the tax remains to be seen in the actual operation of the law.

Mr. KING. Then, may I say, Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa this question: He says when the price reaches parity the processing tax stops. Is that correct?

Mr. MURPHY. That is my understanding of the theory of the tax.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well. Suppose when the price reaches parity there is still a substantial deficit in the benefit fund, how does it get itself reimbursed if the processing tax stops?

Mr. MURPHY. In that event, I presume the Federal Treasury will hold the bag.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then we are back to the point where, in spite of the tentative language of the law, there may be a deficit chargeable to the Treasury which is not reimbursed?

Mr. MURPHY. And we may rejoice that, having reached parity, it has been worth whatever that deficit may be.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator may be entirely justified in that statement, but he begs the question. He announced a moment ago that it did not lie in anyone's mouth on this floor to suggest that one nickel was coming out of the Treasury which was not to be reimbursed as a result of the passage of this bill.

Mr. MURPHY. Until such time as it shall be ascertained after the lapse of a fair time. This whole program is being arraigned on account of the existing differential between outgo and income from the processing tax. I submit that that is not fair. That is my only contention. If the time shall arrive when there still shall be a deficit, and the processing tax disappears because we have obtained parity prices, then I say that we will have well expended the differential in restoring that price and attaining the success of the program.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator and I may agree upon the value received, and I think now we can also agree that somewhere in this indeterminate appropriation which we are now handing to the Secretary of Agriculture to use if, as, and when the "brain trust" pleases, there may be a nonreimbursable charge against the Treasury of the United States of any amount.

Mr. MURPHY. It may be 30 cents; it may be——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Two hundred million dollars.

Mr. MURPHY. Well, hardly.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I rise merely to ask to have some data inserted in the RECORD. In view of this discussion I think the estimates of the Department ought to be inserted in the RECORD. They have taken cotton, wheat, corn, and hogs and made an estimate for the year 1934, for the year 1935, and for the year 1936. I ask unanimous consent that the pages covering these tables may, as to the respective commodities, be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am still convinced that the sum authorized by the amendment which I offered, namely, $150,000,000, to be appropriated for the purpose of eradicating diseased cattle and for the purpose of advances to the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation for the distribution of dairy and beef products in the channels of relief, is necessary if we are to achieve a substantial improvement in the situation so far as these two industries are concerned. Nevertheless, after consulting with members of the conference committee who represented the Senate and with other Senators from the dairy States who are interested in this amendment, I am convinced that the conferees have obtained all that could be obtained in the adjustment of the differences between the two Houses, and, therefore, I feel constrained reluctantly to accept the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR COST OF LEVEE RIGHTS-OF-WAY

The bill (S. 2796) to authorize payments for the purchase of, or to reimburse States or local levee districts for the cost of levee rights-of-way for flood-control work in the Mississippi Valley, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection to enable me to explain the purpose of the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well.

Mr. OVERTON. This is a bill providing for certain levee rights-of-way required by various States and subdivisions in connection with the execution of the Federal flood-control plan on certain tributaries of the Mississippi River. The bill comes here with the approval of the War Department. It does not require any additional appropriation. The funds available for the purpose have already been covered by the appropriation made for flood control of the Mississippi River.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to supplement the statement made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]. The bill is of importance. The Attorney General, as I understand, has held that there is a liability on the Government in accordance with the terms of the bill. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will withdraw his objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to look into the measure and shall have to insist upon my objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE ACT

The bill (S. 2835) to amend section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920, entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and to provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes", as applied to the Virgin Islands of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator who made the objection to withhold it for a moment to enable me to make a statement?

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Mississippi explain just what it is.

Mr. STEPHENS. I shall be glad to do that. I introduced the bill at the request of Mr. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior. Very briefly he states why the bill should be enacted into law. Let me quote from his letter:

Briefly, the justification for such legislation is this. The one important port of the Virgin Islands is St. Thomas. Exports from and imports to the islands are very small. (The total population is less than 25,000.) As a port of call and transshipping, however, St. Thomas is important. It is the chief bunkering port of the Caribbean. The reason is that St. Thomas lies on a direct line from Europe to the Panama Canal and is also a port of call for vessels plying between our Atlantic ports and the east coast of South America. Most of the vessels which call are of foreign registry. The coastwise shipping laws of the United States, if applied to the Virgin Islands, would prohibit such calls. These laws became applicable to the Virgin Islands February 1, 1922, subject, however, to the power of the President to defer that application. From time to time the President has deferred that application, but it is desirable that St. Thomas, as a port of call for foreign ships, should be protected more definitely.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a similar bill was passed last year, and a question arose as to whether it was the purpose of the Government or the Post Office Department and the Shipping Board to award a mail contract to these islands.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have no information as to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it has such a purpose, I would be opposed to it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have no information on the subject. This bill simply puts into effect what the President has been doing all through the year.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure there will not be a mail contract awarded now anyway.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am sure there will not be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920 (41 Stat.L. 997), entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes", is hereby amended by adding thereto the following proviso: "And provided further, That the coastwise laws of the United States shall not extend to the Virgin Islands of the United States."

DAVID I. BROWN

The bill (H.R. 1403) for the relief of David I. Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill comes within the usual rules followed by the committee in such cases. The soldier served 2 years and was court-martialed for a minor offense. He was given a dishonorable discharge for a very small offense. He did not desert. The committee feels, in view of his service and in view of the severity of the penalty, that at this time his record should be cleared.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, or dependent relatives, David I. Brown, formerly a private of Company E, Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 17th day of January 1903: Provided, That no pay, pension, bounty, or other emoluments shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

JOHN NEWMAN

The bill (H.R. 2509) for the relief of John Newman was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection a moment to enable me to make a statement?

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. CAREY. This is the case of a man who enlisted in the Regular Army and deserted, and afterward reenlisted and made a good soldier while in the service. But it was found while he was serving his second enlistment that he had previously deserted. He was tried and given a dishonorable discharge on his second enlistment because of the fact that he had deserted during his first enlistment.

Afterward he enlisted in the Canadian Army and served during the war. There is an act of Congress which relieved him of the charge of desertion on account of his first enlistment and because of his having served in the Canadian Army during the war. All the bill does is to remove the charge against him on his second enlistment, when he was dishonorably discharged on account of his desertion during his previous enlistment. Considering the man's record and his service during the war, the committee feel that it is a meritorious measure. I think, considering the man's record in the war, that the bill is a meritorious one.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that removing the charge of desertion which resulted in a dishonorable discharge gives the man a pensionable status; so that it is more than merely removing the charge of desertion.

Mr. CAREY. He has already been relieved of the first charge through an act of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John Newman, recently of the United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private from Company B, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, on the 5th day of August 1902: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

HARRY F. STERN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1114) for the relief of the estate of Harry F. Stern, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representatives of Harry F. Stern the sum of $18,704.89, but such payment shall not be made unless the Secretary of the Treasury receives evidence satisfactory to him that such legal representatives have paid a like sum (plus any penalty imposed by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania) to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania before the expiration of 90 days after the date of the enactment of this act. Such sum, payable to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania as part of the inheritance tax imposed by the laws of such Commonwealth on the estate of the said Harry F. Stern, was erroneously paid to the United States as part of the Federal estate tax, and its recovery has been barred by the statute of limitations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill? I see the Department have recommended against it.

Mr. REED. That is true, Mr. President, as they do in all cases providing for the payment of claims for overpaid taxes.

The fact in this case is that this estate has paid double taxes. It has paid the State of Pennsylvania 80 percent of the Federal tax; it has paid the Federal Government something like 60 percent of the Federal tax; so that its total payments are almost half again as much as should have been paid, and that came about in this wise:

Mr. Stern and his wife died almost at the same time, and very heavy payments were made by both estates to the Federal Government. At the time Stern died there was an act of the legislature of Pennsylvania, recently passed, fixing our estate tax at 80 percent of whatever the Federal tax might be. That was very bitterly attacked in the courts, and pending the decision on its constitutionality in the courts, it seems not to have been enforced in Pennsylvania. By the time the decision came down, the 3-year period for a refund had gone. The attorney for the estate at first did not know that that act had been passed and that it was pending in the courts; and all this bill provides is for the refund of the excess of tax which the Treasury officials admit they have received and are holding. They admit the justice of the claim; but, following their usual practice, they say that we ought not to waive the statute of limitations, although in all good conscience it is admitted by the Treasury that the money does not belong to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANSON H. PEASE

The bill (S. 838) for the relief of Anson H. Pease was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue to Anson H. Pease, Crow Indian allottee no. 1322, a patent in fee to the 649 acres, more or less, of land allotted to him in the Crow Indian Reservation, Mont., under the provisions of the Act entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of the lands of the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes", approved June 4, 1920, as amended, and designated as homestead land.

REPORTS OF CONDITION OF STATE MEMBER BANKS

The bill (S. 2870) to require the publication of reports of condition of State member banks of the Federal Reserve System, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fifth paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 324), is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "Such reports of condition shall be in such form and shall contain such information as the Federal Reserve Board may require and shall be published by the reporting banks in such manner and in accordance with such regulations as the said Board may prescribe."

QUINAIELT INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1882) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lots to Indians within the Indian village of Taholah, on the Quinaielt Indian Reservation, Wash., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, upon application by any qualified Indian living within the Indian village of Taholah, on the Quinaielt Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, to issue to such Indian a patent for not to exceed 2 contiguous lots within said village, 1 of which lots must be occupied by said applicant: Provided, That where pursuant to section 10 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat.L. 858), 1 lot within said Indian village has heretofore been patented to any Indian living thereon said Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to patent to such Indian, or to his or her heirs in case of death, 1 additional contiguous lot wherever available. All patents issued hereunder shall be of the legal effect prescribed by said section 10 of the act of June 25, 1910, and all lots so patented to said Indians shall be disposed of as provided for in section 1 of that act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President will the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], make an explanation of this bill? May I call his attention to what I understand to be rather a new policy upon the part of the Indian Bureau; namely, to withhold patents, because so many of the Indians to whom patents were issued soon lost the control and, indeed, the fee-simple title to their lands. They were overreached by the whites; advantage was taken of them; and hundreds and hundreds of Indians have lost their lands and are now thrown back upon the Government. Some of them, unfortunately, have become what are denominated "blanket Indians" by reason of having lost the title to their lands. I was wondering if the bill is in contravention of the new policy announced by the Interior Department.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no; I do not think it is at all. This bill simply has reference to some lots in the State of Washington and has the recommendation of the Department. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the Department is scanning very, very carefully the issuance of patents, but this is a case where I am sure the Senator would agree that it would be perfectly proper.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCKY BOY INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2754) to add certain public-domain land in Montana to the Rocky Boy Indian Reservation, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That approximately 557 acres of public-domain land in the State of Montana, described as lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 25; lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 26; lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 27; lots 2, 3, and 4, section 28; lot 5, of section 29, township 28 north, range 15 east; lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 27; lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 28; lots 2, 4, 6, and 8, section 29; lots 5, 7, 9, and 11, section 30, township 28 north, range 16 east, Montana meridian, in Montana, be, and the same are hereby, withdrawn from the public domain and added to the Rocky Boy Indian Reservation: Provided, That the rights and claims of bona fide settlers initiated under the public land laws prior to January 6, 1934, the date of temporary withdrawal of the land from all forms of entry, shall not be affected by this Act.

Mr. KING. What can the Senator from Montana tell me about this bill?

Mr. WHEELER. That is all right, too.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2018) relative to Members of Congress acting as attorneys in matters where the United States has an interest was announced as next in order,

Mr. REED. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

OPPORTUNITY FOR CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR UNDER RULE VIII

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the leader of the majority and the leader of the minority that I think we are entitled to a morning hour when bills can be considered without a unanimous-consent agreement for the consideration only of unobjected bills. There are certain bills on the calendar which will be objected to from now until the end of the session by Senators who have a particular reason for doing so, and I hope the next call of the calendar will be a general call without the limitation of a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I find myself in accord with the views expressed by the Senator from Idaho; and I stated 2 days ago on the floor to the Senator from Arkansas that I thought the next call should be under rule VIII.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas a few days ago in reply to an interrogation of the Senator from Oregon will be adhered to, and that early next week a day may be set aside for taking up measures of the character indicated.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES OF OKLAHOMA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1874) relative to leasing restricted lands of Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after 30 days from the date of approval of this act all restricted land belonging to Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma, which has been designated as tax exempt pursuant to section 4 of the act of May 10, 1928 (45 Stat.L. 495), may be leased by the owner, if an adult, or by a guardian or curator under order of a proper probate court if a minor or incompetent, for a period of 1 year without the privilege of renewal; and that all other restricted lands owned by Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma may be leased for a period not to exceed 5 years without the privilege of renewal: Provided, That leases of restricted lands for oil, gas, or other mining purposes; leases for more than 1 year of lands designated as tax exempt; and leases for a period of more than 5 years, of restricted lands other than lands designated as tax exempt, may be made with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior under rules and regulations prescribed by said Secretary and not otherwise: Provided further, That no lease covering such lands shall be construed as a conveyance of an interest in lands within the meaning of section 9 of the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat.L. 312), requiring the approval of the county court.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma make an explanation of this bill, in view of the statement I made a moment ago as to the new policy of the Interior Department in dealing with Indian lands?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, Senate bill 1874 is a bill relative to leasing restricted lands of Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma, and for other purposes. The bill is predicated upon a letter submitted to the Department here by the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes with office at Muskogee. I read two sentences from his letter which explain the reason why this legislation is pending:

Under the act of May 10, 1928, Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes were authorized to select 160 acres of their restricted land to remain nontaxable 25 years from April 26, 1931. We believe that this 160 acres so selected should not be leased by the Indians for more than 1 year without supervision and this bill is drawn and submitted with that idea in mind.

It is the opinion of the superintendent of the Muskogee office that these lands held by Indians, upon which they have their homes, should not be leased for more than 1 year at a time; and this bill gives the Secretary the power and authority to restrict such leases to 1 year in his discretion.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1657) to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act to extend the period of restriction in lands of certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes", approved May 10, 1928 (45 Stat.L. 496), as amended by the act of February 14, 1931 (46 Stat.L. 1108), which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of May 10, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 496), entitled "An act to extend the period of restriction in lands of certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes", as amended February 14, 1931, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That all minerals, including oil and gas, produced on or after April 26, 1931, from restricted allotted lands of members of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, or from inherited restricted lands of full-blood Indian heirs or devisees of such lands, shall be subject to all State and Federal taxes of every kind and character the same as those produced from lands owned by other citizens of the State of Oklahoma; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid, from the individual Indian funds held under his supervision and control and belonging to the Indian owners of the lands, the tax or taxes so assessed against the royalty interest of the respective Indian owners in such oil, gas, and other mineral production: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to impose or provide for double taxation and, in those cases where the machinery or equipment used in producing oil or other minerals on restricted Indian lands are subject to the ad valorem tax of the State of Oklahoma for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, the gross production tax which is in lieu thereof shall not be imposed prior to July 1, 1931: Provided further, That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior the tax or taxes due the State of Oklahoma may be paid in the manner provided by the statutes of the State of Oklahoma."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is this the same kind of a bill as the preceding one?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This is the same sort of a bill, but it covers a different question. The Congress heretofore has authorized the State of Oklahoma to tax the royalties derived from oil wells and gas wells in my State. The State has provided a rather comprehensive system of reporting, and the oil companies and the lessees must, of course, follow that system. This bill simply gives the Secretary the right to conform to those State laws in my State.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, was the proviso recommended by the Secretary of the Interior put in the bill—

That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior the tax or taxes due the State of Oklahoma may be paid in the manner provided by the statutes of the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I say, is that in the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; that is in the bill, and that was the particular point which the Secretary recommended—the proviso which was added to the latter part of that section.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERNEY S. BLAZER

The bill (H.R. 3997) for the relief of Erney S. Blazer was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Erney S. Blazer, who was a member of Company E, Second Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 22d day of October 1902: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

CHARLES T. MOLL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 3985) for the relief of Charles T. Moll, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I see on the calendar a number of these bills. I do not like to object to them, and yet I was wondering upon what theory they are warranted, when there is no question as to the fact that the soldier deserted.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, frequently the soldiers did not desert in cases of this kind. In this particular case there was no desertion. The soldier served for 2 years, committed a minor offense, and was courtmartialed and given a dishonorable discharge. In view of that fact, under the precedents, and the fact that he served 2 years faithfully and did not desert, the committee feels that he should have a clearance at this time. He has pursued an upright life since his discharge.

Mr. KING. When was he discharged?

Mr. SHEPPARD. About 1901.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Moll" to insert "who served in Company F, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry", and in line 8, after the words "on the", to strike out "9th day of August" and insert "3d day of January"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Charles T. Moll, who served in Company F, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 3d day of January 1901 and notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in the act relating to pensions approved April 26, 1898, as amended by the act approved May 11, 1908: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MAILING OF CERTAIN DRUGS AND MEDICINES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 822) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend section 217, as amended, of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States', approved March 4, 1909", approved January 11, 1929, with respect to the use of the mails for the shipment of certain drugs and medicines to cosmetologists and barbers, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "section", to strike out "317" and insert "217", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first proviso in the first sentence of the act entitled "An act to amend section 217, as amended, of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States', approved March 4, 1909", approved January 11, 1929, is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That the transmission in the mails of poisonous drugs and medicines may be limited by the Postmaster General to shipments of such articles from the manufacturer thereof or dealer therein to licensed physicians, surgeons, dentists, pharmacists, druggists, cosmetologists, barbers, and veterinarians, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, under the present law it is permissible to transmit through the mail certain drugs and medicines, but the classes of persons to whom the permission is given is limited. The purpose of this measure is to include cosmetologists and barbers in that permission. These drugs—important drugs as they are—may be transmitted through the mail by physicians, surgeons, dentists, pharmacists, druggists, and so on. The letter from Postmaster General Farley says that he sees no reason why these other classes of persons should not have the same permission.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what kind of drugs are involved?

Mr. STEPHENS. The bill relates to any kind of poisonous drugs or medicines now permitted to be shipped to physicians, surgeons, dentists, pharmacists, and druggists. Now it is desired that barbers shall have the same privilege. I am very sure that not all the poisonous drugs that are shipped to druggists and physicians will be shipped to barbers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I ask the Senator whether this measure was referred to the Department of Agriculture for a report?

Mr. STEPHENS. No; it was not, as I recall. As I said, there is a letter here from the Postmaster General, Mr. Farley, and the Department of Justice also wrote a letter regarding the bill. The report of the committee says:

The Attorney General also has stated that he has no objection to this legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to let the bill go over. In the meantime I will make an investigation, before the next call of the calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS. The minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], is the author of the bill. Perhaps he has some information as to the feeling of the Department of Agriculture on the subject.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I really could not answer the question of the Senator, but in view of the very reasonable request of the Senator from Wisconsin, I think the bill should go over for the day.

Mr. STEPHENS. Of course, I do not object, if the Senator from Oregon does not, to the bill going over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

A UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY

The bill (H.R. 5950) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this is a bill involving some controversial features, and I assume it will have to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TITLES TO INDIAN LANDS

The bill (S. 1891) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cancel restricted fee patents and issue trust patents in lieu thereof, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to cancel any fee patent containing restrictions on alienation, issued under any law or treaty, title to which is still held under restriction by the original Indian allottee or his heirs or successors in title; and to cause to be issued in lieu thereof, to the said allottee, his heirs or successors, a trust patent in the form and subject to all the provisions set forth in the general allotment act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat.L. 388–391), as amended; the trust period thereon to run 10 years from date of issuance of said lieu patent.

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall not apply to the Osages nor to the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

FISH AND GAME PRIVILEGES ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS IN NEW YORK

The bill (S. 2425) to repeal the act entitled "An act to grant to the State of New York and the Seneca Nation of Indians jurisdiction over the taking of fish and game within the Allegany, Cataraugus, and Oil Spring Indian Reservations", approved January 5, 1927, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I notice that this refers to Indians in my State, and I think I ought to look into the matter. I ask that it go over.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from New York that this is a bill similar to one passed at the last session. It simply provides for the repeal of an act putting the Indians affected under the State law as to their hunting on the reservation. The Indians are all opposed to the present system. They say they do not get a square deal. They are arrested for shooting or fishing on their own land under the State law. They have had these privileges ever since before the time when the white people came to the United States and feel they are entitled to hunt on their own lands. They ask that the present law be repealed and that they be allowed to hunt and fish on their own property.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to grant to the State of New York and the Seneca Nation of Indians jurisdiction over the taking of fish and game within the Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Oil Spring Indian Reservations", approved January 5, 1927 (44 Stat.L. 932), is hereby repealed.

DISPOSITION OF INDIAN LANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1135) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes", approved June 25, 1910, as amended, which had been reported from the committee affairs with an amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator state the object of this bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, under the present law, when an estate is left by a deceased Indian, the heirs are determined, and oftentimes the lands, under the law, must be sold under a sort of installment payment plan. If, after a period of years, the one who buys the land fails to carry out his contract and keep up the installments, the only way by which the heirs can get back the land is to pay all the installments which have been paid up to that date. It is an absolutely unjust and unfair system, and this bill seeks to repeal that law. The bill is recommended by the Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Department made certain suggestions. Were all of those carried out?

Mr. FRAZIER. Absolutely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That section 1 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 855), entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes", as amended by the act of March 3, 1928 (45 Stat. 161), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That when any Indian to whom an allotment of land has been made, or may hereafter be made, dies before the expiration of the trust period and before the issuance of a fee-simple patent, without having made a will disposing of said allotment as hereinafter provided, the Secretary of the Interior, upon notice and hearing, under such rules as he may prescribe, shall ascertain the legal heirs of such decedent, and his decision thereon shall be final and conclusive. If the Secretary of the Interior decides the heir or heirs of such competent to manage their own affairs, he shall issue to such heir or heirs a patent in fee for the allotment of such decedent; if he shall decide one or more of the heirs to be incompetent, he may, in his discretion, cause such lands to be sold: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall find that the lands of the decedent are capable of partition to the advantage of the heirs, he may cause the shares of such as are competent, upon their petition, to be set aside and patents in fee to be issued to them therefor. All sales of lands allotted to Indians authorized by this or any other act shall be made under such rules and regulations and upon such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and he shall require a deposit of 10 percent of the purchase price at the time of the sale. Should the purchaser fail to comply with the terms of sale prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, the amount so paid shall be forfeited; in case the balance of the purchase price is to be paid on such deferred payments, all payments made together with all interest paid on such deferred installments, shall be so forfeited for failure to comply with the terms of the sale. All forfeitures shall inure to the benefit of the allottee or his heirs. Upon payment of the purchase price in full, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be issued to the purchaser patent in fee for such land: Provided, That the proceeds of the sale of inherited lands shall be paid to such heir or heirs as may be competent and held in trust subject to use and expenditure during the trust period for such heir or heirs as may be incompetent as their respective interests shall appear: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to issue a certificate of competency, upon application therefor, to any Indian, or in case of his death to his heirs, to whom a patent in fee containing restrictions on alienation has been or may hereafter be issued, and such certificate shall have the effect of removing the restrictions on alienation contained in such patent: Provided further, That hereafter any United States Indian agent, superintendent, or other disbursing agent of the Indian Service may deposit Indian moneys, individual or tribal, coming into his hands as custodian, in such bank or banks as he may select: Provided, That the bank or banks so selected by him shall first execute to the said disbursing agent a bond, with approved surety, in such amount as will properly safeguard the funds to be deposited. Such bonds shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether in the investigations which were made under his direction as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs at that time, this question received attention?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; it was thoroughly considered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN SCHOOL AT QUEETS, WASH.

The bill (S. 236) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Queets, Wash., in the construction of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the village of Queets, Jefferson County, Wash., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly. Will the Senator explain the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. The bill authorizes an appropriation of $10,000 to build a school for Indian children, in cooperation with Jefferson County, Wash. The Indian Bureau is in favor of it, and says it will aid in conducting of the school, but the Bureau of the Budget says that the expenditure of the $10,000 is not in accordance with their plans. The Indian Office itself says it will greatly facilitate their work. Both the white children and the Indian children at this time have to go to school in a log cabin.

Mr. McKELLAR. A lot of us did the same thing.

Mr. WHEELER. That is true, and, as the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] suggests, Lincoln did the same. But it is a very unhealthy condition which exists there. The appropriation is for only $10,000, and there is only one way in which these Indian schools can be carried on, or for the children to get any education and have proper facilities, and that is for the United States Government to cooperate in the building of the schools. It means a saving to the Government rather than a loss. If this shall not be done, they will have to put the children in private boarding schools, at greater expense.

Mr. McKELLAR. How many Indian children would there be at this school?

Mr. WHEELER. I think it is stated in the report. The Department reports:

This public-school district has been operating three schools, one of which was abandoned this year through inability to conduct three separate schools. One of these schools has been operated in an old log building which was formerly a Government Indian day school known as "Queets" or "Queets River." The Indian Office has been authorizing payment of tuition for the Indian children attending this school at the rate of 60 cents per attendance day for 38 Indian pupils.

Mr. McKELLAR. A $10,000 schoolhouse for 38 children is a pretty large expenditure. May I ask the Senator to let this and the succeeding bill go over, and I will look into them by the time we have another call of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

INDIAN SCHOOL AT POPLAR, MONT.

The bill (S. 1826) for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Poplar, Mont., in the construction or improvement of public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WILSON G. BINGHAM

The bill (H.R. 2632) for the relief of Wilson G. Bingham was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Utah that the only effect of this bill is to enable the officer to apply to the Veterans' Administration for additional compensation. He was honorably discharged from the Army as an officer in the Army, having served in France, and having been wounded and gassed.

The House passed a bill permitting him to retire as a captain if found eligible by a board, but the War Department and the Senate committee believed that he should have the status of a retired emergency Army officer and should be given an honorable discharge as such officer in order that he might test his rights to additional benefits on that basis.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let the bill be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF EMERGENCY RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1933

The bill (S. 2411) to amend the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let that go over.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask why there is objection to that bill?

Mr. McNARY. I do not object for myself, but at the request of some other Senators who are not present at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN L. SUMMERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1857) for the relief of John L. Summers, disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is a bill to straighten out the accounts of the Treasury Department and dates back over a period of years. I am informed that it has been customary since time immemorial to pass measures of this kind in order to straighten out the accounts of the Treasury.

This case involves forgeries, in some instances, and losses in other instances. The Treasurer of the United States is under bond for all the employees in his office, and in a case of this kind his bondsmen are held.

It seems that this appropriation was recommended in the last administration, and again in this administration. It is recommended that Congress pass this measure and clean up this old account. In one case there was a fraudulent raising of a check from $47.50 to $44,750. A bank at Baltimore cashed the check, and the money was paid here in the Treasury, and suit was brought against the bank in Baltimore to recover. The court there held with the bank, the case was carried up to the Supreme Court, and they held with the bank. The bank recovered the $47.50, but they are out the balance. It is not fair for the Treasury of the United States to be charged up with an account of that kind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that the Comptroller General recommended against the bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. Parts of it, just the system, as I understand.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are there bondsmen who are interested in this legislation?

Mr. FRAZIER. I presume so.

Mr. McKELLAR. If bonds have been taken and there has been a default on the bonds, why should not the bondsmen pay them? Is it simply because it is the Government which is involved?

Mr. FRAZIER. If the bondsmen paid, they would come back on the individuals, who are former Treasurers of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is running through my mind is that if the Government takes the bond and there is a default on the bond, and the bond has to be paid, that is certainly not the fault of the Government. The Government took the bond for its own protection.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is perfectly true; but as I have stated, this practice has been in vogue for years and years. Perhaps it is all wrong, but when there has been some little irregularity or shortage, bills have always been passed to straighten out the account.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection to the bill, the amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 9, after the word "numbered", it is proposed to insert the numerals "342"; on page 2, line 9, after the word "numbered", insert the numerals "342"; in line 16, after the word "numbered", insert the numerals "342"; and in line 24, after the word "numbered", insert the numerals "342", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow in the accounts of John L. Summers, disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, sums aggregating $888.96 now standing as disallowances in his accounts with the General Accounting Office under various Treasury Department appropriations, as set forth in House Document No. 342, Seventy-third Congress, first session.

SEC. 2. The Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to allow in the accounts of Frank White and H. T. Tate, former Treasurers of the United States; Guy F. Allen, former Acting Treasurer of the United States; and Robert G. Hilton, former Assistant Treasurer of the United States at Baltimore, Md., the sums of $34,899.70, $92.89, $362.42, and $126.67, respectively, representing unavailable funds, as set forth in House Document No. 342, Seventy-third Congress, first session.

SEC. 3. The Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to settle an account to cover the claims of Blanchard Johnson, John Frank Rodzen, and Elizabeth Kennard in the sums of not to exceed $25.74, $26.59, and $126.67, respectively, representing unrecovered amounts due them, as referred to on pages of House Document No. 342, Seventy-third Congress, first session, and to certify the same to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust discrepancies in certain national-bank note currency accounts in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, covering the period from April 5, 1912, or immediately prior thereto, to November 21, 1928, as set forth in House Document No. 342, Seventy-third Congress, first session; and the Treasurer of the United States is authorized and directed to charge the sum of $27,680 against his general account, with corresponding credit therein to the fund for retirement of national-bank notes established by the act of July 14, 1890 (26 Stat.L. 289, U.S.C., title 12, sec. 122).

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN HAMPSHIRE

The bill (S. 255) for the relief of John Hampshire was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John Hampshire, of Grants Pass, Oreg., the sum of $32,715.81 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages resulting from the suspension of work under his contract with the United States no. I–1p–71, dated July 29, 1927, for road construction and improvement in Mount Rainier National Park in the State of Washington, such suspension having been made necessary by the failure to provide adequate appropriations to permit the continuance of the work in accordance with such contract.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 31) consenting that certain States may sue the United States and providing for trial on the merits in any suit brought hereunder by a State to recover direct taxes alleged to have been illegally collected by the United States during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1866, 1867, and 1868, and vesting the right in each State to sue in its own name was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Over.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, with reference to Senate Joint Resolution 31, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental amended report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted. The joint resolution will go over.

STATE TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS

The bill (S. 2788) to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (relating to State taxation of national banking associations), was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object on behalf of a Senator who is unavoidably detained.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I wish to ask to have the bill go over for the reason that the Senator from Wisconsin perhaps has in mind. The Senator to whom he refers has not read the report. Another Senator now present has indicated his purpose to have the bill go over. I request him to read the report.

The full explanation of the bill will be found in Senate Report No. 512. The bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and after 10 years of controversy the American Bankers Association has united in the advocacy of this bill. I would be obliged if the two Senators objecting would be good enough to read the Senate report, which comprehends a complete explanation of the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I also am objecting. I have read the report accompanying the bill to which the Senator from Virginia refers. I should like to know whether or not any inquiry was made to ascertain just what intangible personal property is assessed in the different States. My objection, I will frankly state to the Senator from Virginia, is that in Louisiana it is assessed at only 10 percent of the actual cash value, as I understand. Therefore, if the bill were enacted into law, in Louisiana the shares of the stock in national banks would be assessed at only 10 percent of their actual cash value.

Mr. GLASS. I should assume that in a controversy extending over a period of 10 years the American Bankers' Association ascertained all the facts with great deliberation and care. It may be that the Committees on Banking and Currency of the respective Houses have done the same thing, but about that I cannot speak confidently. I will say, however, before the bill goes over that a single State could very much more readily alter its tax laws to comply with the requirement of 47 other States than we could adopt a tax bill here that would be adapted to a single State.

Mr. OVERTON. That is the reason why I was asking for the information, if the Senator will pardon me. I have the impression that intangible personal property is not assessed at all in some States. I may be wrong as to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

INTERNATIONAL ARMS & FUZE CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2309) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the International Arms & Fuze Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 2, line 21, to strike out the following proviso:

And provided further, That any judgment rendered by the Court of Claims for either the United States or the International Arms & Fuze Co., Inc., shall include interest.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations, or any award or awards previously made and accepted by the International Arms & Fuze Co., Inc., to hear and determine the claims of the said International Arms & Fuze Co., Inc., growing out of contracts nos. G–1048–559–A, dated January 1, 1918, and P–19219–4797–A, dated November 5, 1918, with the United States and the amendments and modifications thereof, in accordance with the terms of these contracts, as amended and modified, together with claims for storage, services, and work incident thereto and rendered in connection therewith, and in considering the aforesaid claims the court shall give the United States credit for any and all payments heretofore made by the United States on account of said contracts: Provided, however, That if the Court of Claims determines that the amount due the International Arms & Fuze Co., Inc., under the claims above set forth is less than the amounts previously paid the said International Arms & Fuze Co., Inc., by the United States in connection with the said contracts, the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to render judgment against the International Arms & Fuze Co., Inc., for the difference between the amounts found to be due the International Arms & Fuze Co., Inc., and the amounts heretofore paid the International Arms & Fuze Co., Inc.: And provided further, That from any decision or judgment rendered in any suit presented under the authority of this act a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States may be applied for by either party thereto, as is provided by law in other cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2864) for the relief of Weymouth Kirkland and Robert N. Golding was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill? If not, I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the bill go over.

ESTATE OF MARTIN FLYNN

The bill (S. 1998) for the relief of the estate of Martin Flynn was announced as next in order.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, this bill was considered the last time the calendar was called. There is one item in it that did not have the endorsement of the Veterans' Bureau. I have now investigated the matter and I find, instead of the amount being without interest $4,000, it should be $3,810. There was one item that was included in the way of lavatories. I ask that the sum "$4,000" be stricken from the bill and "$3,810" be inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the reason for that change is to be found in the Veterans' Administration letter of February 19, to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], in which they fixed the total amount at $3,025.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, but one item there is not included, and that is an item for plumbing and the labor in restoring the plumbing. I submitted the matter again to the Veterans' Bureau and have also talked with Colonel Griffith. The Bureau admits that in making their original estimate they did not cover the plumbing item.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can we get a certificate from the Department? I am not doubting the Senator at all, but sometimes there are misunderstandings about such items.

Mr. DICKINSON. The only point is that this claim has been running for 4 years, and we have already declined to pay interest. I am afraid if we do not get it passed soon, we will not get it through the House. I have taken the matter up with Colonel Griffith. He suggests in order to clear the record, which indicates that lavatories and plumb-ing were not included, that I should get some proof from Iowa. If the Senator insists upon it I will get that proof.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will not take long to get it. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES TULLEY HAZEL

The bill (S. 896) for the relief of James Tulley Hazel was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers James Tulley Hazel, captain, Medical Corps, United States Army, September 3, 1918, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been regularly commissioned as a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States Army on the 3d day of September 1918.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2800) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BYRNES. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION AND REGULATION OF FISHERIES OF ALASKA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3022) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend sections 3 and 4 of an act of Congress entitled 'An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska', approved June 26, 1906, as amended by the act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, and for other purposes."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, the bill relates to fisheries in Alaska. The Commissioner of Fisheries, Frank T. Bell, presented a memorandum to Mr. Roper, Secretary of Commerce, who sent it to the committee with his letter, saying, "I concur in the memorandum of the Commissioner."

Mr. McKELLAR. I see that the Commissioner of Fisheries has endorsed the bill, so I have no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS. We had hearings on this bill. The Delegate from Alaska was present, and the bill was unanimously agreed upon.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska", approved June 26, 1906, as amended by the act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved June 6, 1924, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

For the purposes of this section, the mouth of such creek, stream, or river shall be taken to be the point determined as such mouth by the Secretary of Commerce and marked in accordance with this determination. It shall be unlawful to lay or set any seine or net of any kind within 100 yards of any other seine, net, or other fishing appliance which is being or which has been laid or set in any of the waters of Alaska, or to drive or to construct any trap or other fixed fishing appliance within 600 yards laterally or within 100 yards endwise of any other trap or fixed fishing appliance."

SEC. 2. That section 4 of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska", approved June 26, 1906, as amended by the act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved June 6, 1924, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful to fish for, take, or kill any salmon of any species or by any means except by hand rod, spear, or gaff in any of the creeks, streams, or rivers of Alaska; or within 500 yards of the mouth of any such creek, stream, or river over which the United States has jurisdiction, excepting the Karluk, Ugashik, Yukon, and Kuskokwim Rivers: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the taking of fish for local food requirements or for use as dog feed: Provided further, That the exception hereinabove contained with reference to the Kuskokwim and Yukon Rivers shall be solely for the purpose of enabling native Indians and bona fide permanent white inhabitants along the said rivers to take from said rivers for commercial purposes and for export from the Territory of Alaska king salmon in such manner and such quantities and at such times as the Secretary of Commerce may, by suitable regulations, from time to time permit: Provided further, That no person shall be deemed to be a bona fide permanent inhabitant of said rivers who has not resided thereon or within 50 miles thereof for a period of over 1 year, and that the term 'native Indians' as used herein shall be taken to mean members of the aboriginal races inhabiting Alaska when annexed to the United States, and their descendants of the whole or half blood."

RICHARD A. CHAVIS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 2032) for the relief of Richard A. Chavis, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment on page 10, to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred upon Richard A. Chavis by reason of the enactment of this act shall be limited to admission to a soldiers' home under the regulations governing such admission.

So as to make the bill read:

Chavis, who served as a member of Company L, Second South Carolina Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from said service on the 19th day of April 1899: Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued by reason of the enactment of this act: Provided further, That the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred upon Richard A. Chavis by reason of the enactment of this act shall be limited to admission to a soldiers' home under the regulations governing such admission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Munn, who served as a private in Troop L, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on January 10, 1878: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

equipment now held by such post, and to cancel and release all obligations to the United States incurred pursuant to such act in connection with loans of such equipment to posts of the American Legion.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2455) to increase the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Regular Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 2857) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia, as amended", was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah explain that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the bill was reported by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not recall at the moment the terms of the bill, but it has received the approval of the Commissioners of the District and was carefully considered by the District Committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it seems to relate to an insurance company now existing. Why should they reincorporate or have a new incorporation? I am just wondering as to that. There seem to be a number of acts on the subject.

Mr. KING. I do not recall the details.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over for the moment.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, this afternoon during the consideration of the calendar, when Order of Business No. 542, Senate bill 2857, to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia", as amended, was reached, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] objected. I have explained the purport of the bill to the Senator and he has now no objection to its passage.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 2 to 9 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia", approved January 10, 1855 (10 Stat. 836), as amended April 12, 1866 (14 Stat. 32, ch. 41), March 25, 1870 (16 Stat. 80, ch. 35), June 14, 1878 (20 Stat. 132, ch. 195), and July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. 155, ch. 233), are hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. The purpose and designs of this corporation shall be to insure the property of the members thereof against loss or damage by fire, lightning, sprinkler leakage, cyclone, tornado, windstorm, and hail; to insure glass against breakage; to insure the loss of use and occupancy and rents of buildings when such loss is caused by fire, lightning, cyclone, tornado, windstorm, and hail; to insure automobiles and other vehicles, and other property, against loss or damage by fire, theft, transportation, explosion, and collision; to insure against the loss of property by burglary, theft, robbery, larceny, and forgery; to insure against loss or damage by any other hazard upon any risk which is not prohibited by statute or at common law from being the subject of insurance by a fire-insurance company but not including loss or damage by reason of bodily injury to the person, nor shall such corporation do a life-insurance or fidelity or surety business; and to cede and accept reinsurance upon the whole or any part of any risk; and to have and exercise all the general powers of corporations organized under the laws of the District of Columbia, insofar as they relate to mutual fire-insurance companies: Provided, however, That said corporation shall forever be conducted for the mutual benefit of its members, and not for profit; and, as to its business transacted in the District of Columbia or in any State or other jurisdiction in which it is licensed, shall be subject to all laws of such district, State, or other jurisdiction governing mutual fire-insurance companies.

"SEC. 3. The policies hereafter issued by said corporation shall provide for a premium or premium deposit payable in cash without premium note, and, except as herein provided, for a contingent premium at least equal to the premium or premium deposit: Provided, That said corporation may issue policies without additional contingent liability of its members whenever it has a surplus of assets over all its liabilities of $100,000, or more.

"SEC. 4. All persons who shall hereafter insure with said corporation; and their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns continuing to be insured by said corporation, shall thereby become members thereof during the period they shall remain insured by said corporation and no longer. Any public or private corporation, board, association, or estate may hold policies in the corporation. Any officer, director, trustee, or legal representative of such corporation, board, association, or estate may be recognized as acting for or on its behalf for the purpose of membership in this corporation, but shall not be personally liable upon such contract of insurance by reason of acting in such representative capacity. The right of any corporation, board, association, or estate to participate as a member of this corporation is hereby declared to be incidental to the purpose for which such corporation, board, association, or estate is organized and as much granted as the rights and powers expressly conferred.

"SEC. 5. The annual meeting of the members of said corporation shall be held at such time and place as provided in the bylaws. It shall be the duty of the president to call a special meeting of the corporation upon the written request of 20 members. Each member shall have one vote for each risk held by him on all matters properly before any meeting of the members.

"SEC. 6. The affairs of said corporation shall be conducted by a board consisting of seven directors or such greater number as may be authorized by the bylaws, selected from the members, to be elected by ballot at annual meetings of the members, for terms not exceeding 3 years, as fixed by the bylaws, and to continue in office until their successors are chosen. The board of directors shall have full power to make and prescribe such bylaws, rules, and regulations as they shall deem needful and proper for the elections herein provided and for the conduct and management of the business, funds, property, and effects of the company, not contrary to this act or to the laws of the United States, and they shall have power to alter or amend the same as the interests of the company, in their opinion, may require. Not less than a majority of the directors shall be a quorum to do business, but a less number may adjourn from time to time. Vacancies happening in the board may be filled by the remaining directors for the remainder of the term for which they were elected. The board shall choose one of their number as president, and appoint a secretary and treasurer and such other officers as may be necessary for conducting the affairs of said corporation. The persons now acting as managers shall continue as the board of directors until the next annual meeting after the passage of this act, and thereafter until their successors are duly chosen.

"SEC. 7. It shall be lawful for said company to invest and reinvest all moneys received by it in such manner, consistent with the laws of the District of Columbia relating to mutual fire-insurance companies, as the directors deem best for the interests of the company, and to acquire, hold, and sell real estate necessary or convenient for the transaction of its corporate business.

"SEC. 8. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect or impair in any manner whatsoever any vested right or interest in or under any existing contract of the company.

"SEC. 9. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

SEC. 2. Sections 10 to 16, inclusive, of the said act of January 10, 1855 (10 Stat. 836), as amended April 12, 1866 (14 Stat. 32), March 25, 1870 (16 Stat. 80), June 14, 1878 (20 Stat. 132), and July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. 155), and said act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. 155), are hereby repealed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the letter appearing in the report from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia regarding this matter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 5, 1934.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit the following on Senate bill 2857, Seventy-third Congress, second session, entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia', as amended", which you referred to them for report as to the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

On January 10, 1855, Congress passed an act incorporating the Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia. Since that date the insurance company has been doing, within the District of Columbia, a mutual fire-insurance business covering dwelling houses and other buildings, furniture, and every description of property of its members.

Under section 3 of the original act the capital stock of this company consists of premium notes given by the insured and of the cash paid in as interest on said premium notes. These notes are payable on demand and constitute a lien in amount thereof upon all buildings insured by the said company, and upon the land on which the buildings stand and the appurtenances thereto, and goes so far as to become a lien upon the estate and interest, legal or equitable, of the assured in such buildings, lands, and appurtenances insured by the company.

By virtue of the original act the company may file in the office of the clerk of the circuit court a memorandum giving the name of the individual insured, the description of the property, the amount of the unpaid note, and the amount of the premium due, and upon the filing of the same a judgment may be entered and execution had thereon.

The present bill now seeks to eliminate the requirement of the law that a demand note be required of each policyholder and also enlarges the list of property which may be insured, such as sprinkler leakage, cyclone, tornado, windstorm, and hail, and also insures against glass breakage and the loss of use and occupancy and rents of buildings when such loss of use and occupancy and rents occurs through fire, lightning, cyclone, tornado, etc., and seeks to authorize insurance upon automobiles and other vehicles and other property against loss or damage by fire, theft, transportation, explosion, and collision; and insures against the loss of property by burglary, theft, robbery, etc. In short it seeks to cover all insurance usually done by a fire-insurance company, not including, of course, loss or damage by reason of bodily injury to person, nor does the proposed amendment permit the corporation to do a life-insurance business or fidelity business.

The proposed amendments do not seek to change the original purposes of the incorporation act. It is still a mutual company and is not operated for profit.

Section 3 of the proposed amendments eliminates the premium note required under the old incorporation law.

Section 4 permits public or private corporations, associations, or even estates to hold policies in the incorporation. Obviously as the law now stands, executors or administrators of estates cannot insure in such a company which requires the execution of demand notes.

Sections 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 are the usual sections relating to meetings of the members of the corporation, the duties of its officers, bylaws, etc.

The incorporation act has not been modified or changed since 1884, and as the matter now stands there are many obsolete requirements which are not required of other mutual insurance companies, and while the insurance company could be dissolved and reincorporated under the general incorporation laws of the District of Columbia the officers of the insurance company feel that to do so would seriously affect the good will of the company.

The Commissioners know of no objection to the passage of the bill.

Very truly yours,

M. C. HAZEN,
President Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

RELIEF OF DISTRESS, AND SOCIAL WELFARE OF INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2571) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to arrange with States for the education, medical attention, relief of distress, and social welfare of Indians, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment, in section 4, page 2, line 21, after the word "report", to strike out "to Congress on or before the first Monday in December of each year" and insert "annually to the Congress", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall report annually to the Congress any contract or contracts made under the provisions of this act, and the moneys expended thereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I have been asked by the Delegate from Alaska to have this bill, if there be no objection, made applicable as well to the Territory of Alaska. That may be accomplished by inserting on page 1, line 5, after the word "State" the words "or Territory"; in line 7 of the same page, after the word "State" by inserting the words "or Territory"; in line 8 of the same page, after the word "State" by inserting the words "or Territory"; in line 5, page 2, after the word "State", by inserting the words "or Territory"; and in line 18, page 2, after the word "States", by inserting the words "or Territories." I can see no objection to making the bill applicable to Alaska, because the Delegate says the Indian tribal conditions there are similar to those in the States. I move the amendments suggested by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendments offered by the Senator from California.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to enter into a contract or contracts with any State or Territory having legal authority so to do, for the education, medical attention, agricultural assistance, and social welfare, including relief of distress, of Indians in such State or Territory, through the qualified agencies of such State or Territory, and to expend under such contract or contracts moneys appropriated by Congress for the education, medical attention, agricultural assistance, and social welfare, including relief of distress, of Indians in such State.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior, in making any contract herein authorized with any State, or Territory, may permit such State to utilize for the purpose of this act, existing school buildings, hospitals, and other facilities, and all equipment therein or appertaining thereto, including livestock and other personal property owned by the Government, under such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon for their use and maintenance.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations, including minimum standards of service, as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect: Provided, That such minimum standards of service are not less than the highest maintained by the States or Territories with which said contract or contracts, as herein provided, are executed.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall report annually to the Congress any contract or contracts made under the provisions of this act, and the moneys expended thereunder.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to arrange with States or Territories for the education, medical attention, relief of distress, and social welfare of Indians, and for other purposes.

LOANS BY FEDERAL LAND BANKS TO INCORPORATED ASSOCIATIONS

The bill (S. 2997) authorizing loans by Federal land banks to incorporated associations and corporations in certain cases, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I did not ask that the bill go over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggested that the bill go over because I did not think that it could be presented in 5 minutes.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I think I can present it in that time; at any rate, I will try to do so.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, the Federal Farm Loan Act in its present form provides that loans may be made only to individuals—the words used are "individual persons"—and the purpose of this amendment to the act is to make possible loans to those engaged in agriculture whose business is incorporated. In the western States nearly all the live-stock companies, or a great many of them, at any rate, are now organized as corporations, in many instances that being considered the easier method of conducting the business. Many of them are small companies with capital as low as $5,000 or $10,000 and up. It is the custom for them to incorporate. Under the present law they cannot obtain any benefit from the Federal farm land banks. This amendment to the act will permit them to borrow on condition that all the stockholders endorse the paper for a loan. There is also a provision that the farm loan commissioners may waive that requirement when a majority of the stockholders sign the paper. Further than that, there is a restriction that loans may not be made unless all the stockholders are engaged in the farming business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has the Senator information as to the amount that will probably be needed to meet the requirements of this bill.

Mr. CAREY. I cannot give that information. I can say to the Senator that there is no objection to this bill from the Farm Credit Administration. I introduced another bill, and they requested certain amendments, and this bill was introduced with the changes made to cover the amendments which they asked to have adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The amendments suggested by the Farm Credit Administration have been incorporated in the bill?

Mr. CAREY. They are included in the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CAREY. Certainly.

Mr. KING. If I understand this bill, it permits private individuals to obtain credit and loans.

Mr. CAREY. No; it is intended to permit corporations composed of people who are stockholders, all of whom are actually engaged in agricultural pursuits, to obtain loans. It will not permit loans to a corporation which is engaged in some other activity as well as in farming. All the stockholders of a corporation which would be entitled to a loan under this proposal would have to be actively engaged in farming unless the loan commissioner should waive the restriction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph "Sixth" of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 771), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "As used in this paragraph the term 'person' includes an individual, an incorporated association, and a corporation; but no such loan shall be made to a corporation (1) unless all the stock of the corporation is owned by persons actually engaged, or shortly to become engaged, in the cultivation of the farm to be mortgaged as security for the loan, except in a case where the Land Bank Commissioner permits the loan if a majority of the stock of the corporation is so owned, and (2) unless all the stockholders of the corporation assume personal liability for the loan."

SEC. 2. (a) The first sentence of the sixth paragraph of section 7 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 716), is amended to read as follows: "Ten or more persons who are the owners, or about to become the owners, of farm lands qualified as security for a mortgage loan under section 12 of this act, may unite to form a national farm-loan association."

(b) The sixth paragraph of such section 7 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "As used in this section, the term 'person' includes an individual, an incorporated association, and a corporation which is eligible for a loan under section 12 of this act."

SEC. 3. (a) The first sentence of the fifth paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 745), is amended by striking out the words "any natural person" and inserting in lieu thereof "any person."

(b) The fifth paragraph of such section 9 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "As used in this section, the term 'person' includes an individual, an incorporated association, and a corporation which is eligible for a loan under section 12 of this act."

CRIME OF EXTORTION BY TELEPHONE, TELEGRAPH, ETC.

The bill (S. 2249) applying the powers of the Federal Government under the commerce clause of the Constitution to extortion by means of telephone, telegraph, radio, oral message, or otherwise, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever, with intent to extort from any person, firm, association, or corporation any money or other thing of value, shall transmit in interstate commerce, by telephone, telegraph, radio, or oral message, or by any other means whatsoever, any threat (1) to injure the person, property, or reputation of any person, or the reputation of a deceased person, or (2) to kidnap any person, or (3) to accuse any person of a crime, or (4) containing any demand or request for a ransom or reward for the release of any kidnaped person, shall upon conviction be punished by imprisonment for such term of years as the court, in its discretion, shall determine: Provided, That the term "interstate commerce" shall include communication from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

PROTECTION OF TRADE AGAINST INTERFERENCE BY VIOLENCE, THREATS, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2248) to protect trade and commerce against interference by violence, threats, coercion, or intimidation, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the term "trade and commerce", as used herein, shall include trade or commerce between any States, with foreign nations, in the District of Columbia, in any Territory of the United States, between any such Territory or the District of Columbia and any State or other Territory, and all other trade or commerce over which the United States has constitutional jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. Any person who, in connection with or in relation to any act in any way or to any degree affecting, burdening, hindering, destroying, stifling, or diverting trade or commerce or any article or commodity moving or about to move in trade or commerce—

(1) Commits or threatens to commit any act of violence, intimidation, or injury to a person or property, or commits any act which is declared to be unlawful by the criminal laws of the State, District, or Territory where the act is committed; or

(2) Extorts or attempts to extort money or other valuable considerations; or

(3) Coerces or attempts to coerce any person, firm, association, or corporation to join or not to join an association, firm, corporation, or group, or to buy or rent commodities or services from particular sources, persons, firms, or corporations, or to make payments directly or indirectly to any person, association, firm, corporation, or group except for a bona fide consideration; or

(4) Coerces or attempts to coerce any person, firm, association, or corporation to do an act which such person, firm, association, or corporation has a legal right not to do, or to abstain from doing an act which such person, firm, association, or corporation has a legal right to do—shall, upon conviction thereof, be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment from 1 to 99 years, and in addition, by a fine which shall be at least commensurate with the amount of the unlawful gain.

SEC. 3. Any person charged with violating this act may be punished in any district in which any part of the offense has been committed by him or his associates or his conspirators.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. ASHURST obtained the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi for a moment.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, it is recognized that crime has reached very large proportions and because of that condition a resolution submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and a very interesting investigation on this subject was had. Based on that, and other considerations as well, 7 or 8 bills were introduced, some at the suggestion of the Department of Justice, some by individual Senators. All such bills were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. We had before that committee the Attorney General and one of his assistants. Each one of the bills was gone over very carefully. The Department of Justice through the Attorney General submitted a memorandum in which it was stated as follows:

This is a proposed Federal antiracketeering statute based on the interstate commerce power.

In the past such persons have been prosecuted in the Federal courts for incidental violations of law, such as mail frauds or income-tax evasions. The nearest approach to prosecution of racketeers as such has been under the Sherman Antitrust Act. This act, however, was designed primarily to prevent and punish capitalistic combinations and monopolies, and because of the many limitations engrafted upon the act by interpretations of the courts, the act is not well suited for prosecution of persons who commit acts of violence, intimidation, and extortion. Furthermore, the Sherman Act requires proof of a conspiracy, combination, or monopoly, and it is often difficult to prove that the acts of racketeers affecting interstate commerce amount to a conspiracy in restraint of such commerce, or monopoly. Moreover, a violation of the Sherman Act is merely a misdemeanor, punishable by 1 year in jail plus $5,000 fine, which is not a sufficient penalty for the usual acts of violence and intimidation affecting interstate commerce.

The accompanying proposed statute is designed to avoid many of the embarrassing limitations in the wording and interpretation of the Sherman Act, and to extend Federal jurisdiction over all restraints of any commerce within the scope of the Federal Government's constitutional powers. Such restraints, if accompanied by extortion, violence, coercion, or intimidation, are made felonies, whether the restraints are in form of conspiracies or not. The proposed statute also makes it a felony to do any act affecting or burdening such trade or commerce if accompanied by extortion, violence, coercion, or intimidation.

In the hearings to which I have referred it was stated that the tax on the American public, resulting from crimes of this character and others closely related, is about $13,000,000,000 a year. That is why the Attorney General is so very much interested and that is why the committee, after giving full consideration, unanimously adopted a favorable report.

If there is any particular feature of the bill about which any Senator would like to inquire, I shall be glad to answer if I can.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUNISHMENT FOR AVOIDING PROSECUTION OR THE GIVING OF TESTIMONY

The bill (S. 2253) making it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another for the purpose of avoiding prosecution or the giving of testimony in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation, but, with my present views, I shall ask that the bill go over.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am particularly interested in this particular measure, because it relates to the crime problem in southeastern Michigan, where a large city is on the rim of an interstate boundary. Precisely the same conditions exist wherever a large city is close to a State boundary. At the present time the chief difficulty in handling and policing the situation in any one of such cities is the fact that when a criminal is apprehended, the witnesses against him immediately put themselves beyond the jurisdiction of the State courts. For instance, in Detroit the "fade-away" and "hide-out" is in Toledo. In Chicago the "fade-away" and "hide-out" is in Indiana or southwestern Michigan. That situation exists wherever a large city is close to a State boundary line or to an interstate boundary line.

The prosecuting attorney of Wayne County, who has made an amazing record in Detroit in law enforcement, told our committee that he asked no further cooperation from the Federal Government than this simple statute which would permit him to be protected against fugitive witnesses. It is the only way by which the Federal Government can make a contribution of this character. I submit this is a thoroughly simple exercise of authority. According to the testimony submitted to the crime-investigating committee, headed by the able Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], it is fundamental in the local self-reliance of our police officials in those communities which are close to State boundaries.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this bill is one of a series comprehended by Calendars Nos. 563 to 569, inclusive. As stated by the Senator who has just spoken, it is a material part of the antiracketeering program, and I sincerely hope that the bill may be considered and passed. It will be quite helpful to the Department of Justice and to all public authorities in enforcing the criminal laws.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS. I invite the Senator's attention to Calendar 570, which is another one of the series of very great importance.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; that is true. I desire to correct the number to include nos. 563 to 570, both inclusive.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has correctly said, this is one of the numerous bills of the group which we call the antigangster legislation.

I read for the RECORD at this point a memorandum from the Department of Justice in support of the bill. Said the Attorney General:

This bill provides that a Federal offense is committed by any person who flees from one State with intent either to avoid prosecution for a felony under the laws of the place from which he flees or to avoid giving testimony in any criminal proceeding in such place. While this bill would undoubtedly extend Federal criminal jurisdiction in a marked degree, yet it would afford an opportunity for the apprehension of the roving class of criminals who are responsible for so many of the crimes of violence in our country. Although drastic in nature, it is my opinion ultimately some relief must be provided for those who suffer from offenses committed by criminals who flee from the scene of crime beyond the jurisdiction of the State wherein the crime is committed and eventually escape punishment entirely. I advocate the most serious consideration for this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona if all of these bills are approved by the Attorney General?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; all the bills to which the Senator from Arkansas referred, beginning with Order of Business 563 and down to and including 570, have been submitted to and approved by the Department of Justice. They have not only been expressly approved by the Department of Justice, but the Attorney General himself appeared before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, and I am not using too strong a word when I say he vehemently urged the passage of the bills.

Mr. WALSH. Without exception?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; without exception.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I add a further word? It is simply intolerable, to take an illustration of which I am familiar, to have a witness or other person needed in a criminal prosecution in the city of Fort Smith, Ark., step across the line into Oklahoma and thus defeat the ends and aims of justice. The bill, in my judgment, is necessary for a proper enforcement of the law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I appreciate the importance of legislation which is within the purview of the Federal Government to deal with racketeering and gangsters. The criminal records of gangsters and racketeers have aroused the country and led to a demand for their control. Undoubtedly, if the States exercised the authority possessed by them and zealously enforced their criminal laws, many of the crimes which have shocked them would not have been committed. However, I am sure that the States and their officials will be more earnest in the future in curbing the crimes referred to and punishing law violators.

Referring to the bill which we are now discussing, making it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another for the purpose of avoiding prosecution or the giving of testimony in certain cases, any State has the power to deal with these questions, and to enact laws providing that any person charged with a felony who flees from a State shall be guilty of an offense and be subject to prosecution therefor. Section 2 of the bill provides that if a witness, to avoid giving testimony in any criminal proceedings, goes beyond the boundaries of the State, though perhaps the offense charged against the person is only a misdemeanor, he subjects himself to a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment not longer than 5 years.

The State may pass a law declaring that witnesses who seek to avoid testifying and who flee the State may be punished. By this measure we are taking a position that the States are incompetent to deal with matters with which they have complete authority to deal and which are exclusively within their jurisdiction.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I appreciate, as I believe we all do, the earnestness of purpose and the legal talent of the Senator from Utah (Mr. KING); but when we reflect upon the present condition of affairs in this country, and remember that there are, as I am reliably advised, more gangsters under arms in the United States at this hour than there are men under arms in the entire United States Army, we realize the necessity for taking drastic measures to deal with gangsters.

These gangsters are equipped with machine guns, sawed-off shotguns, and other lethal weapons. They have, in large part, no consideration for human life; and society therefore, in order to survive, must be bold, and zealous; and we are required to bring into requisition every ounce of energy that we constitutionally may.

I do not doubt that many able lawyers and other conscientious men believe that the separate States should handle this or that question. I regret to say, however, that it is beyond the power of an individual State properly to cope with the gangster menace.

I advert for a moment to the case of a Mr. Bremer, who was kidnaped, and who later was returned, and the abductors captured. When the facts shall become known, the superbly able and clever service performed by the Department of Justic will read like a romance. Senators will be amazed to know the efficiency of that Department, and with what almost telepathic instinct our Department of Justice moved to apprehend these men. It could not have been done by a State.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in the famous Oklahoma kidnaping case, the crime occurred in Oklahoma; the money passed in Minnesota; the kidnaped person was recovered in Texas; and the chief conspirator was arrested in Ohio. There is a fine cameo example of the fact that crime is now mobile and interstate, and crime detection has to be equally mobile in order to catch up with it.

Mr. ASHURST. I cannot possibly add anything to the Senators' statement.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let me invite the attention of my friend from Utah [Mr. KING] to the situation as regards fugitive witnesses. It was testified before our committee by prosecuting attorneys that the greatest difficulty they had in bringing to book the various criminals lay in the fact that the witnesses were intimidated, or bought off, and fled from the jurisdiction of the State. So, after long consideration and taking much testimony, it was determined that the only way in which we could deal with the fugitive witness was in the manner here prescribed.

Of course the State could make it a felony for a witness to flee the jurisdiction of the court, but the State would have no power to bring the witness back. In this case, however, if he is an important witness to a murder, or to a gang operation, and flees to another State, he becomes guilty of a felony, and may be brought back by the district court or by the Federal Government. So there can be no doubt that in apprehending criminals and in bringing them to book this is an important bill, and one which should be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2253) making it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another for the purpose of avoiding prosecution or the giving of testimony in certain cases, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question, if I may. Referring to the bill now under consideration, I find limitations on the jurisdiction or upon the venue of the court in the very last line of the bill. The language is:

> Violations of this act may be prosecuted only in the Federal judicial district in which the crime was committed.

The crime does not consist in fleeing from a Federal judicial district. The crime consists in fleeing under certain circumstances from a State or Territory or possession. It might conceivably be that in that State there would be more than one judicial district. Did the committee consider whether the provision I have just read introduces any obscurity into the measure, or raises any question about the jurisdiction of the court that would try the crime?

Mr. ASHURST rose.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I answer the Senator?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. There was back of this provision another thought that was particularly prominent in the mind of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], that if the witness were brought back to the jurisdiction of the court from which he fled it might happen that he would be within the jurisdiction of the State court after he had been dealt with as a Federal prisoner, and he might ultimately be brought in as a material witness in the State case, which might be a murder case.

Mr. STEIWER. I think the purpose just explained by the Senator is a very proper purpose. I raise no challenge as to the purpose. When, however, we limit jurisdiction to the judicial district in which the crime was committed, inasmuch as the crime is not committed necessarily in a judicial district, but the crime consists in flight from a State, I still wonder whether or not we have not left in the law some obscurity or ambiguity that may make trouble.

Mr. COPELAND. I should not have any objection to such a change as the Senator has in mind; but suppose the witness should flee from Detroit to Columbus, Ohio, and he should be dealt with in the court in Columbus, Ohio, for having committed a felony against the United States. The State officials in Detroit would not be benefited at all in the event the witness should be dealt with afterward by the court in Columbus, because he would be outside the State of Michigan, and could not be dealt with anyway by the State of Michigan.

Mr. STEIWER. I agree thoroughly that the accused ought to go back to the State from which he flees, but in my mind there is a reasonably serious question as to the effect of that limitation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Oregon is misinterpreting the word "crime." The word "crime" at this point does not refer to the violation of this measure; it refers to the original felony from which the witness is a fugitive.

Mr. COPELAND. It might be well to insert there the word "original", so that it would read:

Only in the Federal judicial district in which the original crime was committed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is the point.

Mr. COPELAND. That is what the Senator from Michigan has in mind, and what we had in mind.

Mr. STEIWER. I confess I was not construing the bill as the Senator from Michigan construes it. I had understood that the crime was the crime here defined, for which a penalty is provided.

Mr. COPELAND. No.

Mr. STEIWER. If the language refers to the original crime, I think there would be no question about it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, as a legal proposition I think the question raised by the Senator from Oregon is an important one. Ordinarily, in interpreting a statute, the court would hold that the word "crime", where used, would mean the crime defined in the statute itself.

Mr. COPELAND. If we should insert the word "original", that would remove the ambiguity; would it not?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In all probability that would make it clear.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the bill be amended in that way.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think it should read "in which the original crime was alleged to have been committed", because otherwise it would be necessary to prove that a crime had been committed before a prosecution could be commenced under this statute.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I will accept the language suggested by the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, as modified by the language proposed by the Senator from Arkansas?

The Chair hears none; and the amendment, as modified, is agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of this bill. I shall vote against it, however, because I believe it will be abused in its administration. I doubt its constitutionality; and I have not any doubt on earth that in the hysteria now existing, and that which may follow, persons will be imposed upon, will be arrested and prosecuted under the Federal law, where the facts and circumstances will not warrant it.

We are assuming that the States are wholly impotent to deal with questions which properly arise under their authority. We are challenging the competency of the States to govern their own affairs. We are substituting a Federal criminal code for the criminal codes of the States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 2, after the word "than" to insert "$5,000", and in line 3, after the word "than", to insert "5 years"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to flee from any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or the District of Columbia, with intent either (1) to avoid prosecution for a felony under the laws of the place from which he flees, or (2) to avoid giving testimony in any criminal proceedings in such place in which the commission of a felony is charged. Any person who violates the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not longer than 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Violations of this act may be prosecuted only in the Federal judicial district in which the original crime was alleged to have been committed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION OF KIDNAPED PERSONS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The bill (S. 2252) to amend the act forbidding the transportation of kidnaped persons in interstate commerce was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of June 22, 1932 (U.S.C., ch. 271, title 18, sec. 408a), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Whoever shall knowingly transport or cause to be transported, or aid or abet in transporting, in interstate or foreign commerce, any person who shall have been unlawfully seized, confined, inveigled, decoyed, kidnaped, abducted, or carried away by any means whatsoever and held for ransom or reward or otherwise, shall, upon conviction, be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for such term of years as the court, in its discretion, shall determine: Provided, That the term 'interstate or foreign commerce' shall include transportation from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, or from a foreign country to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia: Provided further, That if two or more persons enter into an agreement, confederation, or conspiracy to violate the provisions of the foregoing act and do any overt act toward carrying out such unlawful agreement, confederation, or conspiracy, such person or persons shall be punished in like manner as hereinbefore provided by this act: And provided further, That in the absence of the return of the person or persons so unlawfully seized, confined, inveigled, decoyed, kidnaped, abducted, or carried away and the apprehension of the person or persons offending against the provisions of this act for or during a period of 3 days, it shall be presumed that such person or persons have been transported in interstate or foreign commerce, but such presumption shall not be conclusive."

DEFINITION OF CERTAIN CRIMES AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

The bill (S. 2575) to define certain crimes against the United States in connection with the administration of Federal penal and correctional institutions and to fix the punishment therefor, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Mr. KING. Yes; I ask that it go over.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

OFFENSES AGAINST BANKS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2841) to provide punishment for certain offenses committed against banks organized or operating under laws of the United States or any member of the Federal Reserve System, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 9, after the word "property", to insert the words "or money or any other thing of value"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "property", to insert the words "or money or any other thing of value"; on page 2, line 7, after the word "property", to insert the words "or money or any other thing of value"; on page 2, line 22, after the word "property", to insert the words "or money or any other thing of value", so as to make the bill read:

The true intent of this bill is to relinquish and abandon, grant, give, and concede any and all right, interest, and estate, in law or equity, which the United States is, or is supposed to be, entitled to in part of said land by escheat because of the death of Catharine B. LEAVE OF ABSENCE OF EMPLOYEES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2096) equalizing annual leave of employees of the Department of Agriculture stationed outside the continental limits of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not see the author of the bill, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] in the Chamber, but I am perfectly familiar with the features of the bill, and I think it ought to be enacted, because, as anyone reading the report will see, those employed under the Department of Agriculture in foreign countries have different leaves of absence from those at home. I see the Senator from Arizona now in the Chamber, and I turn the matter over to him.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I might say that the Senate, at a former session of the Congress, passed an identical bill recommended by the then Secretary of Agriculture. The pending bill is recommended by the present Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of June 30, 1914 (U.S.C., p. 58, sec. 535), and the act of July 24, 1919 (U.S.C., p. 58, sec. 536), with respect to annual and cumulative leave for certain employees of the Department of Agriculture stationed in Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the island of Guam, and the Virgin Islands shall hereafter apply to all employees of said Department assigned to permanent duty at any place outside the continental limits of the United States.

"SEC. 2. Such lands in public ownership within 6 miles of the exterior boundaries of the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, as may be found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes, may be added to the Deschutes National Forest by proclamation of the President, subject to any valid existing claims in such lands."

MIGRATORY-BIRD REFUGES

The bill (S. 2934) to facilitate the acquisition of migratory-bird refuges, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the Migratory Bird Conservation Act, approved February 18, 1929 (U.S.C., supp. 4, title 16, sec. 715; 45 Stat. 1222), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Agriculture may do all things and make all expenditures necessary to secure the safe title in the United States to the areas which may be acquired under this act, but no payment shall be made for any such areas until the title thereto shall be satisfactory to the Attorney General, but the acquisition of such areas by the United States shall in no case be defeated because of rights-of-way, easements, and reservations which from their nature will in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture in no manner interfere with the use of the areas so encumbered for the purposes of this act; but such rights-of-way, easements, and reservations retained by the grantor or lessor, from whom the United States receives title under this or any other act for the acquisition by the Secretary of Agriculture of areas for wild-life refuges, shall be subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the occupation, use, operation, protection, and administration of such areas as inviolate sanctuaries for migratory birds or as refuges for wild life; and it shall be expressed in the deed or lease that the use, occupation, and operation of such rights-of-way, easements, and reservations shall be subordinate to and subject to such rules and regulations as are set out in such deed or lease or, if deemed necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture, to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him from time to time."

SEC. 2. That when the public interest will be benefited thereby, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States title to any land which he deems chiefly valuable for wild-life refuges, and in exchange therefor to convey by deed on behalf of the United States an equal value of lands acquired by him for like purposes, or he may authorize the grantor to cut and remove from such lands an equal value of timber, hay, or other products, or to otherwise use said lands, when compatible with the protection of the wild life thereon, the values in each case to be determined by said Secretary. Timber or other products so granted shall be cut and removed, and other uses exercised, under the laws and regulations applicable to such refuges and under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture and under such supervision and restrictions as he may prescribe. Any lands acquired by the Secretary of Agriculture under the terms of this section shall immediately become a part of the refuge or reservation of which the lands, timber, or other products or uses given in exchange were or are a part and shall be administered under the laws and regulations applicable to such refuge or reservation.

SEC. 3. That when the public interest will be benefited thereby the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands which in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture are chiefly valuable for migratory-bird or other wild-life refuges, and in exchange therefor may patent not to exceed an equal value of surveyed or unsurveyed, unappropriated, and unreserved nonmineral public lands of the United States in the same State, the values in each case to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture. Before any such exchange is effected notice thereof reciting the lands involved shall be published once each week for 4 successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in the county or counties in which may be situated the lands proposed to be granted by the United States in such exchange. Lands conveyed to the United States under this section shall be held and administered by the Secretary of Agriculture under the terms of section 10 cf the aforesaid Migratory Bird Conservation Act of February 18, 1929, and all the provisions of said section of said act are hereby extended to and shall be applicable to the lands so acquired.

SEC. 4. That an exchange under the terms of this act shall in no case be defeated because of rights-of-way, easements, and reservations existing or retained in or in respect to lands conveyed to the United States which from their nature will, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, in no manner interfere with the use of the areas so encumbered for the purposes of this act; but such rights-of-ways, easements, and reservations retained by the grantor, from whom the United States receives title, shall be subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the occupation, use, operation, protection, and administration of such areas for the purposes of this act; and it shall be expressed in the deed that the use, occupation, and operation of such rights-of-way, easements, and reservations shall be subordinate to and subject to such rules and regulations as are set out in such deed or, if deemed necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture, to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him from time to time. In effecting any such exchange the value of such rights-of-way, easements, and reservations shall be considered in determining the relation of the value of the lands received by the United States to that of the land conveyed by the United States.

PAUL JELNA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 3032) for the relief of Paul Jelna, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, to strike out the proviso, "That no back pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act", and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That no pay, pension, privilege, or other emolument shall accrue by virtue of this act prior to its passage, or subsequent thereto.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows or dependent relatives, Paul Jelna, who was a private of Company A, Twenty-ninth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on November 30, 1902: Provided, That no pay, pension, privilege, or other emolument shall accrue by virtue of this act prior to its passage, or subsequent thereto.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PERISHABLE AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

The bill (H.R. 6525) to amend the act known as the "Perishable Agriculture Commodities Act, 1930", approved June 10, 1930, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this appears to be a bill of considerable importance. I should like to have some discussion of it, and an explanation of its provisions.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, this is a bill which is amendatory of the act which is now in force, the design of the amendment being to cover the particular cases where the matters were covered loosely in the original act. It is a long bill, and it is difficult in a brief period to explain it. Nevertheless, if I explain to Senators some of the vicissitudes which have been undergone, perhaps that will be ample.

The measure was introduced by Representative BUCK in the House of Representatives. He himself is a very large grower of fruits, and is thoroughly familiar with the production of perishable commodities. After full study of the subject the House committee reported the bill, and it was passed. It came to the Senate, a subcommittee was appointed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry at the instance of the Representative; that subcommittee reported favorably to the general committee, and the general committee has reported the bill, and submitted a written report.

The bill consists of an amendment designed to correct the weaknesses in the original act, which are all recited in the report of the House committee. The bill is approved by the Department of Agriculture; it is approved, I think, substantially by all of the cooperatives of consequence which exist in the country. It has general approval of everybody engaged in the production of perishable goods.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in view of the explanation made by the Senator from California, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY BARTELS

The bill (S. 1432) for the relief of Henry Bartels, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army Henry Bartels shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private, Eightieth Company, United States Coast Artillery Corps, on December 10, 1903: Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

WILLIAM EDWARD TIDWELL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1594) for the relief of William Edward Tidwell, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, to strike out the words, "That no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this Act", and to insert in lieu thereof:

That no pay, pension, privilege, or other emolument shall accrue by virtue of this act prior to its passage, or subsequent thereto.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged officers and enlisted men who have served in the Army of the United States between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, William Edward Tidwell shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service on August 7, 1919: Provided, That no pay, pension, privilege, or other emolument shall accrue by virtue of this Act prior to its passage, or subsequent thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONDUCT OF FEDERAL OFFICEHOLDERS IN ELECTIONS

The bill (S. 1884) to prevent the use of Federal official patronage in elections and to prohibit Federal officeholders from misuse of positions of public trust for private and partisan ends, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, if I may take just a moment, I will attempt to make an explanation.

In the first place, I regret to say that the title of the bill is misleading. The clerk in entering the title upon the calendar reproduced it faithfully enough, but by reason of the fact that the title is misleading, it would lead to the conclusion that the bill is intended to apply to all elections and to all Federal officeholders. That conclusion is not correct.

Examination of the bill shows that the bill applies only to political conventions having for their aim the nomination or election of the President or Vice President, and it applies to nothing else. The bill is also limited to appointive officers of the Government; it has no application to Representatives or Senators, or other elective officials. The purpose of the bill is to prevent appointive officers, of the character of United States attorneys, we will say, or United States marshals, from attending political conventions as delegates, and in some cases misrepresenting the will of the constituency or the State from which they come.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I desire to have an opportunity to make a further study of the bill, and I shall ask that it go over.

Mr. STEIWER. The bill is of some little importance, and I think it proper that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE W. HESS

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 90) to retire George W. Hess as director emeritus of the Botanic Garden was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That George W. Hess, Director of the United States Botanic Garden, is hereby retired from active service in such position, and shall hereafter be carried on the rolls of the legislative branch of the Government with the title of Director Emeritus and Consultant of the United States Botanic Garden, and shall receive a salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum, payable monthly out of funds appropriated for expenses of the Botanic Garden.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO SETTLERS OF HOMESTEAD LANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2568) granting leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the years 1932, 1933, and 1934, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "himself", to strike out the word "and" and insert the words "and/or", and, on page 2, at the end of the bill, to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any homestead settler or entryman who, during the calendar years 1932 or 1933, found it necessary, or during 1934 should find it necessary, because of economic conditions, to leave his homestead to seek employment in order to obtain the necessaries of life for himself and/or family or to provide for the education of his children, may, upon filing with the register of the district his affidavit, supported by corroborating affidavits of two disinterested persons, showing the necessity of such absence, be excused from compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws as to residence, cultivation, improvements, expenditures, or payment of purchase money as the case may be, during all or any part of the calendar years 1932, 1933, and 1934, and said entries shall not be open to contest or protest because of failure to comply with such requirements during such absence; except that the time of such absence shall not be deducted from the actual residence required by law, but a period equal to such absence shall be added to the statutory life of the entry: Provided, That any entryman holding an unperfected entry on ceded Indian lands may be excused from the requirements of residence upon the conditions provided herein, but shall not be entitled to extension of time for the payment of any installment of the purchase price of the land except upon payment of interest, in advance, at the rate of 4 percent per annum on the principal of any unpaid purchase price from the date when such payment or payments became due to and inclusive of the date of the expiration of the period of relief granted hereunder.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCE OF LANDS TO NEBRASKA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2566) authorizing the conveyance of certain lands to the State of Nebraska, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That there is hereby granted to the State of Nebraska for institutional purposes the property known and designated as the "Genoa Indian School", located at Genoa, Nebr., such grant to include the land and buildings and such equipment as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That this grant may be effective at any time prior to July 1, 1934, if before that date the Governor of the State of Nebraska on behalf of the State files an acceptance thereof with the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That the right is reserved by the Secretary of the Interior to retain until July 1, 1934, dormitory and other space needed for the housing and care of Indian pupils now accommodated at said school: Provided further, That as a condition precedent to this grant Indians residing within the State of Nebraska will be accepted in State institutions on entire equality with persons of other races, and without cost to the Federal Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL CREDIT UNION SYSTEM

The bill (S. 1639) to establish a Federal Credit Union System, to establish a further market for securities of the United States, and to make more available to people of small means credit for provident purposes through a national system of cooperative credit, thereby helping to stabilize the credit structure of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this bill has just recently been reported; it is quite an important measure, and I suggest that it go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have no objection to that course; but in order to perfect the bill, I desire to move the adoption of an amendment on the part of the committee. It would provide for the elimination of section 16, the section exempting the credit union from Federal taxation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14 it is proposed to strike out lines 2, 3, and 4, reading as follows:

TAXATION

SEC. 16. Federal Credit Unions, but not the members thereof, shall be exempt from all Federal taxation except taxes upon real property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter addressed to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, in favor of the bill, signed by a prominent credit-union official.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., March 18, 1934.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Committee on Banking and Currency,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned respectfully petition that your Committee on Banking report favorably and that the Senate enact Senate bill 1639. If this bill is enacted, it will authorize the organization of credit unions anywhere in the United States and will give credit unions in a given State the right to set up their own central credit union for their mutual protection in time of industrial depression, which will supply them at all times with a central credit union for purposes of rediscount. We respectfully call to the attention of your committee the immediate and outstanding importance of Federal legislation on this subject, which importance is based on the following considerations:

(1) The credit union is concerned with a national problem. It is the only agency capable of creating credit resources for wage workers and small farmers at normal interest rates. This small-loans business is now carried on by usurious money lenders; it totals in a single year more than $2,000,000,000, with the result that usurious money lending constitutes one of the primary factors in the destruction of cash buying power. Credit unions, developing nationally and rapidly, would quickly be able to solve this problem, saving for their members hundreds of millions of dollars annually now dissipated in usurious interest overcharges. The return of prosperity depends on the buying power of average people—the sort of people who belong to credit unions.

(2) The credit union development is interrupted by the fact that there are no credit union laws in 10 States, and by the further facts that in some States, State taxation is already excessive, while the organization State fees are so high as to discourage from organizing credit unions in many States the sort of wage workers and small farmers who greatly need this service.

(3) The credit unions are deserving of the cooperation of your committee. Operating under the same supervision as State banks in 38 States, subject to the same rules, 2,350 credit unions with 450,000 members have come through the depression without any involuntary liquidations, and have established an extraordinary record for honest and efficient management. We are justified, on the record, in urging rapid national credit-union expansion.

Representing credit-union members in the States hereinafter indicated, thoroughly familiar with credit-union problems and the potential capacity of credit unions to perform, if rapidly extended nationally, a major service in the matter of industrial recovery, we respectfully urge that Senate bill 1639 be reported and enacted. Thanking you for your cooperation in this matter.

Respectfully submitted.

FEES IN NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 3521) to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there are certain committee amendments which should be adopted in connection with this bill. Let me explain the bill very briefly.

At the present time an alien who came into the United States before June 23, 1921, of whose arrival no record is found, must pay $20 for a certificate of registry, in order to have his admission legalized so that he can apply for citizenship. By the provisions of this bill this fee is reduced to $10.

The fee for a certificate of arrival under this bill will be reduced from $5 to $2.50; the fee for receiving and filing a declaration of intention and the issuing of a duplicate thereof would be reduced from $5 to $2.50; the fee for making, filing, and docketing a petition for citizenship and for final hearing would be decreased from $10 to $5.

The fee for the issuance of new certificates of citizenship or declarations of intention in place of those lost, mutilated, or destroyed, would be reduced from $10 to $1.

At the present time it frequently costs an alien from $75 to $100 to get naturalized. Everyone agrees that these fees are exorbitant, and both the Department of Labor under the previous administration and the Department of Labor under this administration agree that these fees should be reduced. For years citizens and organizations interested in the problems of our aliens have been urging these reductions, and I have introduced bills to accomplish this for several years.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator whether the committee report is unanimous?

Mr. WALSH. The committee report is unanimous, and I ask to have the report of the committee printed in the RECORD in connection with the discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

[S.Rept. No. 556, 73d Cong., 2d sess.]

REDUCTION OF IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION FEES

Mr. COOLIDGE, from the Committee on Immigration, submitted the following report (to accompany H.R. 3521):

The Committee on Immigration, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 3521) to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill be passed with the following amendments:

Wherever in the bill the words "supp. VI" occur, substitute therefor the words "supp. VII".

On page 2, line 5, in the word "Subdivisions", strike out the letter "s"; also in the same line strike out "(a) and".

On page 2, line 9, at the end of the line, strike out "(a)".

On page 3, line 1, after the word "amended", insert the following new matter: "as follows: Wherever in said subdivision the words 'a fee of $10' occur they shall be amended to read 'a fee of $1'; and".

On page 3, after line 11, add a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. Subdivision (b) of section 1 of the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1513), as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 8, sec. 106 (a) (b)), is amended as follows: Whenever in said subdivision the words 'a fee of $20' occur they shall be amended to read 'a fee of $10'."

On page 3, in line 8 and in line 11, strike out "$10" and substitute therefor "$25".

The bill as reported is an embodiment of S. 2638 and S. 2639, introduced by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], designed to reduce by 50 percent the present fees required under the naturalization and immigration laws for the naturalization and registry of aliens. The committee have considered these two bills together with H.R. 3521 and have incorporated the essential provisions of all three bills into the amended bill.

At the present time an alien who came into the United States before June 23, 1921, of whose arrival no record is found, must pay $20 for a certificate of registry, in order to have his admission legalized so that he can apply for citizenship. By the provisions of this bill this fee is reduced to $10.

In addition, the present fee required for certificate of arrival would be reduced from $5 to $2.50; the fee for receiving and filing a declaration of intention and the issuing of a duplicate thereof would be reduced from $5 to $2.50; and the fee for making, filing, and docketing a petition for citizenship and for final hearing would be reduced from $10 to $5.

Also, the fee for the issuance of new certificates of citizenship or declarations of intention in place of those lost, mutilated, or destroyed would be reduced from $10 to $1. As to alien veterans, who served in the military or naval forces of the United States at any time after April 5, 1917, and before November 12, 1918, it is provided they shall not be required to pay this fee.

H.R. 3521, as it was reported (H.Rept. No. 289) and passed by the House of Representatives, was endorsed by the Labor Department. The two Senate bills, S. 2638 and S. 2639, whose main features are incorporated in this bill, as reported, were approved by the Secretary of Labor in a letter addressed to the Chairman of the Committee on Immigration dated March 9, 1934, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Washington, March 9, 1934.

Hon. MARCUS A. COOLIDGE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR COOLIDGE: I desire to refer to your letters of February 9, forwarding S. 2638 and S. 2639, and requesting the Department's views on these bills.

I wish to advise you the Department endorses both the bills. S. 2638 is similar to H.R. 3521, except that the House bill also includes the reduction of fees for the issuance of certificates for the purpose of obtaining recognition as a United States citizen by the country of former allegiance, and for certificates of derivative citizenship. The House bill likewise exempts veterans from the payment of fees for the issuance of duplicate naturalization papers. That bill has received the endorsement of the Department.

Very truly yours,

FRANCES PERKINS.

In connection with efforts to reduce fees for naturalization, the following excerpts from the report of the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship, printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 6, 1934, are of special interest:

FOREIGN LANGUAGE INFORMATION SERVICE,
New York City, January 20, 1932.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator from Massachusetts,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I have been asked to forward to you a report from the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship dealing with the subject of naturalization fees and the effect of the increased fees. I think you will find in this report a wealth of important material on this subject. We are all hoping that you can make effective use of it in support of your bill to cut naturalization fees 50 percent.

You are privileged to use this report or the material it includes in any way that you feel will be effective. I may say that the report as sent you is a first draft which the committee in charge has rushed in order that you might have the material at the earliest possible moment. The National Council hopes to be able to print the report. Before this is done some minor changes may be made, but it will stand substantially as I am sending it.

With assurances of our cooperation, I am

Sincerely yours,

READ LEWIS, Director.

FOREWORD

The National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship is composed of member organizations and of individual men and women affiliated with national and local civic bodies representing every part of the United States. Its purpose is to promote coordinated effort in behalf of assimilation of the alien and education for good citizenship. It is designed to be of practical help to agencies interested in prospective citizens by assembling information and acting as a clearing house.

The large decrease in the number of persons applying for citizenship following the passage of the amendment to the naturalization law which increased the fee for naturalization caused the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship to undertake a Nation-wide study to determine the effect of the increased fee.

The report now presented has been prepared with much care and thought. The evidence gathered shows that the present fee of $20 seriously discourages the naturalization of our alien population. After a review of the data secured, the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship at its annual meeting held in 1931 unanimously adopted a recommendation that the high fee for naturalization be reduced.

Thanks are due the many civic agencies throughout the country who have assisted in assembling material for this report. Let us hope their efforts will aid in the correction of a situation which works a disadvantage to the alien and to the entire country, and that the emphasis in the requirements of citizenship will be transferred from a monetary to a more idealistic plane.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBT. C. DEMING,
Chairman Executive Board.

CONCLUSIONS

The data submitted in this report show that there had been a steady growth of progress in the naturalization of aliens up to 1929.

There were more aliens naturalized in 1929, before the new law went into effect, than the admission of new aliens over 21 into this country. Since the passage of the new amendment increasing the fee, there has been a definite decline in the process of incorporation of the alien throughout the country.

Whereas since the passage of the Cable Act in 1922 women were becoming naturalized in increasing numbers each year up to 1929, the high fee has affected them very markedly and fewer women are now being naturalized.

Practically all observers agree that the present fee for naturalization is entirely too high.

Many civic agencies agree and insist that the present fee is responsible for the decrease in naturalization.

Many observers believe that the present economic situation undoubtedly aggravates the detrimental effect of the high fee on aliens who desire to become citizens.

The present cost of administering the naturalization law has increased by only 11½ percent more than the cost in 1929. The excess in receipt of fees amounts to 1,052 percent more than in 1929. There is, therefore, no need for the high increase in fee to balance the Budget.

COMMENTS

Naturalization is in a sense a part of the educational and assimilation process of the alien in this country. The effort to make a citizen out of an adult alien is analogous to the education required in teaching civics and citizenship to a native child. We do not expect any revenue from the education of the child who is to be our future citizen. Why should we require revenue for incorporating the alien into our community life?

One of the most potent arguments that made restriction of immigrants acceptable to the country was that we would be able to assimilate the alien already within our gates. The economic argument for restriction of immigration was by itself a debatable one and by many considered fallacious. The World War had taught us that there were great groups of unassimilated aliens in our country, and a great post-war Americanization movement was inaugurated to hasten the assimilation process of the aliens.

Now, are we going to retard the assimilation of the very alien whose bulk loomed large and whose future assimilation was planned when our Government adopted the restricted-immigration program?

We have a bloc of aliens in this country amounting to over 5,000,000 people. At the rate we are going at present, it will take more than a generation to naturalize them. Economically, socially, and culturally they are isolated. Are we going to put greater obstacles in their path than they experienced before?

We have cut their cultural bridges to their old fatherlands behind them by our restrictive immigration measures. Shall we at the same time build a Chinese wall around them here so that the new fatherland is closed to them? It must not be forgotten that the effect of alienage is not confined to the actual 5,000,000 but to their immediate descendants as well. Particularly grave hardships are imposed in making naturalization difficult for those aliens whose families are still abroad.

There can be only one effect in this increase of cost which with unemployment is deterring many aliens from becoming naturalized. That effect is the perpetuation of a permanent body of noncitizens who will constitute an alien bloc of the population, which history shows has always led to a serious social problem.

The high fees should be reduced.

Respectfully submitted.

CECILIA RAZOVSKY,
Chairman Subcommittee on Effect of Increased Fee on Naturalization, National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship.

Additional facts are to be found in House Report 289, Seventy-third Congress, second session, as follows:

Prior to March 2, 1929, the total amount of fees for entire naturalization procedure, from the filing of a declaration of intention to the issuance of a certificate of citizenship, was $5. Since March 2, 1929, and at present under existing law, this total amount has been increased to $20. This bill adjusts the required total to $10.

From the annual reports of the Commissioner of Naturalization, it is established as a fact that the increased fees fixed by the act of March 2, 1929, operated as a deterrent to naturalization, although revenue received from fees did increase.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, the excess of net receipts from naturalization fees as compared with the cost of administering the naturalization law was $192,911; whereas, during the next year ending June 30, 1930 (the first year increased fees were required during a full fiscal year), the excess of net receipts from naturalization fees as compared with the cost of administering the naturalization law rose to the large sum of $1,648,101. This is an increase of over 749 percent in 1 year.

On the other hand, the number of aliens seeking naturalization was radically reduced when these 2 fiscal years are compared, to wit:

Fiscal year	Intentions filed	Petitions filed	Certificates issued
June 30:
1929	260,645	254,799	224,197
1930	62,138	111,209	167,637
	Percent	Percent	Percent
Decrease in 1930 as compared to 1929	[1] 76	[1] 56	[1] 24

[1] Over.

There seems to have been a growing tendency to discriminate much against the alien in the matter of employment during these days of vast increase of unemployment, while on the other hand Congress increased the financial requirements for naturalization, thereby making it more difficult for an alien to become a citizen.

Your committee feels that a sound public policy would be to help deserving aliens to become citizens by reducing the financial burdens in the form of excessive naturalization fees rather than subjecting these same deserving aliens to the continued discrimination because they are aliens when they seek to remain self-supporting by honest employment. It has been said that as a class the unnaturalized aliens in our midst are the worst sufferers from our economic depression today.

The Department of Labor has expressed no objection to this bill.

Numerous representatives of welfare organizations and workers in Americanization activities appeared before the committee to express their conviction that the present rate of fees charged by the Government is acting as a deterrent to the proper rate of assimilation of aliens here into citizenship and they all urged that this bill speedily be enacted into law. There was no opposition to this bill expressed during public hearings before your committee.

DON C. FEES

The bill (S. 2863) for the relief of Don C. Fees was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow in the accounts of Don C. Fees, disbursing clerk, Department of Justice, the sum of $446.16, paid by him under authority and direction of said Department for the purchase, repair, maintenance, and operation of one motorcycle with side van for transportation of freight, which was disallowed by said Comptroller General.

EAST BAY MUNICIPAL DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2084) granting and confirming to the East Bay Municipal District, a municipal utility district of the State of California and a body corporate and politic of said State, and a political subdivision thereof, certain lands, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with amendments, on page 3, to strike out lines 10, 11, and 12; on page 3, line 21, to strike out "Lot 4, the north half, and the north half south half southwest quarter" and insert "All the unpatented portion of the west half"; on page 4, line 6, to strike out "The south half northeast quarter southeast quarter, the south half" and insert "The southwest quarter"; on page 4, line 17, to strike out after the words "as to", to strike out "said last-mentioned lands" and insert "the lands described in section 2 hereof"; in line 19, after the word "claims", insert a colon and the following proviso: Provided further, That there be reserved to the United States all coal, oil, gas, and other minerals, together with the right of the United States, its grantees or permittees, to prospect for, mine, and remove the same; on page 5, line 3, to insert a new section as follows: SEC. 4. That the rights hereby granted shall revert to the United States if abandoned or transferred to any person, association, or corporation other than to the State or to another municipal corporation; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the East Bay Municipal Utility District, a municipal utility district of the State of California and a body corporate and politic of said State and a political subdivision thereof, the following described lands of the United States situate in the counties of Amador and Calaveras, State of California, to wit:

The southeast quarter southeast quarter section 22; the northeast quarter southwest quarter, and the south half southeast quarter section 23; the northwest quarter northeast quarter, and the north half southeast quarter section 24; the southwest quarter, the south half northwest quarter, and the northwest quarter northwest quarter section 26, all in township 5 north, range 10 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian.

All the unpatented land in the east half northwest quarter section 15, containing approximately 47.36 acres; the south half northeast quarter, and the north half southeast quarter section 17; and all the unpatented land in section 18 (the same being a fractional portion of the southeast quarter northeast quarter, and a fractional portion of the northeast quarter southeast quarter, and containing approximately 15.58 acres), all in township 5 north, range 11 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patent to the said district for the same.

All of the above-described land is now held by said district by virtue of that certain license no. 567, heretofore issued to said district by the Federal Power Commission. Upon this grant becoming effective said license is terminated and the parties thereto relieved of all obligation by reason thereof, and the fee title of the district to its dams, spillways, conduits, tunnels, power house, power lines, and other structures now constructed in whole or in part on said lands and the right to maintain and operate the same is fully confirmed.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby further granted to the said East Bay Municipal Utility District the following-described lands of the United States situate in the counties of Amador and Calaveras, State of California, to wit:

The northeast quarter southeast quarter, and the south half southeast quarter section 1; all the unpatented portion of the southwest quarter southeast quarter section 3, containing approximately 20.90 acres; and all the unpatented portion of the northeast quarter southwest quarter section 10, containing approximately 4.60 acres, all in township 5 north, range 11 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian.

All the unpatented portion of the west half northwest quarter section 5, containing approximately 72.16 acres; lot 1, the south half northeast quarter, the south half northwest quarter, and the north half southwest quarter section 6 (the same being all the unpatented land in said section 6 and containing approximately 281.13 acres), all in township 5 north, range 12 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian.

The southwest quarter southeast quarter, and the south half southwest quarter section 32, all in township 6 north, range 12 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patent to the said district for the same: Provided, That as to the lands in this section described, this grant shall in no way operate to interfere with the right of any settler or other claimant under the mineral or public-land laws to complete a claim to any portion of said land heretofore lawfully initiated and now valid and subsisting, and as to the lands described in section 2 hereof the title of the district shall be subject to any such valid and subsisting claims: Provided further, That there be reserved to the United States all coal, oil, gas, and other minerals, together with the right of the United States, its grantees or permittees, to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

SEC. 4. That the rights hereby granted shall revert to the United States if abandoned or transferred to any person, association, or corporation other than to the State or to another municipal corporation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from California state the purpose of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON. The East Bay Municipal Utility District, which is publicly owned, furnishes water to the city of Oakland and the various cities adjacent thereto. In counties adjoining Calaveras and Amador, I think they are, there are certain lands over which the utility district has to pass to get the water. They are endeavoring to acquire those lands from the United States Government. The lands in question are valuable, in reality, for no other purpose. All mineral rights are reserved under the terms of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is the object of the bill to secure or complete the water supply?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; the purpose is to provide a right-of-way for water.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting and confirming to the East Bay Municipal Utility District, a municipal utility district of the State of California and a body corporate and politic, of said State, and a political subdivision thereof, certain lands, and for other purposes."

LOTTIE W. M'CASKILL

The bill (H.R. 6084) for the relief of Lottie W. McCaskill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lottie W. McCaskill the sum of $271. Such sum represents the amount paid by the said Lottie W. McCaskill to the United States to cover the shortage in her accounts as postmaster at Cassatt, S.C., caused by the theft in the year 1928, on the night of December 29, of postal funds and stamps, etc., from said post office.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CITY OF NEW YORK FOR TRANSPORTING TROOPS

The bill (S. 1694) for the relief of the city of New York was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Lewis in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Charles A. Lewis had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILDRED F. STAMM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2233) for the relief of Mildred F. Stamm, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words "That the sum of $2,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated", and to insert the words, "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay"; on page 1, line 7, after the word "Columbia", to insert the words, "the sum of $1,000"; on page 2, line 3, after the word "Stamm", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mildred F. Stamm, of Washington, D.C., the sum of $1,000 in full compensation for injuries, permanent and otherwise, resulting from a driver of a United States Naval Air Station truck negligently running into and upon Mildred F. Stamm while she was in an automobile at Sixteenth Street and Constitution Avenue NW., Washington, D.C., on the 12th day of February 1932, and said injuries resulting from no fault of the said Mildred F. Stamm: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the call of the calendar.

PRESENTATION OF FALSE WRITTEN INSTRUMENT

Mr. ASHURST. Some time ago the Senate passed Senate bill 2686, but previously the House had passed a companion bill thereto, H.R. 8046. I ask that the House bill be laid before the Senate, because I am going to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the House bill and the indefinite postponement of the Senate bill if it may be recalled from the House. First, I ask that the House bill, which I ask to have laid before the Senate, be read by title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 8046) to provide a penalty for the knowing or willful presentation of any false written instrument relating to any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the Government with intent to defraud the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill to which the Senator from Arizona has referred?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the House be requested to return Senate bill S. 2686.

The motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. COUZENS. When Calendar No. 571—Senate bill 2527—was reached I entered an objection because there was no one here to explain the bill. Since then I have read the report, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2527) to amend the act of May 29, 1930, for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let the report be read.

Mr. COUZENS. I asked that it go over, but I have since read the report. It is a bill that has been passed several times in both Houses.

Mr. McKELLAR. It really ought to be passed.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 29, 1930, for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and in certain positions in the legislative branch of the Government, is hereby amended to include all other employees in the legislative branch.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

Mr. FESS obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Ohio yield for a moment?

Mr. FESS. For what purpose?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there seems to be some confusion respecting the program. I was very hopeful that this afternoon we might begin consideration of the tax bill and proceed for a while. There are a good many amendments concerning which there is no controversy and we could get those behind us. I thought we could probably get along far enough so that we might take a recess until Monday. I know Senators are tired. I realize there is a pretty strong sentiment in favor of taking some rest. If I may call up the bill, I will ask unanimous consent to make a brief explanation of it. I do not think the explanation will take at the outside more than 10 minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I regret very much that I can not yield. If I am to do what I desire to do today, I do not want to defer the time of beginning later than 4 o'clock.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will permit me, I will ask unanimous consent that House bill 7835, being the revenue bill, be taken up for consideration with a view to its being made the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and lays before the Senate House bill 7835.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

CANCELATION OF AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I feel like apologizing to the Members of the Senate for rising so late in the afternoon to discuss a subject which has been before us with more or less intensity of interest for several weeks. I have been awaiting an opportunity for this discussion so as not to interfere with the business regularly before the Senate and not to be guilty of the practice of dragging something into the debates which would be out of order.

The proceedings of the Senate have been so crowded that up to this moment I have not had the opportunity to pay attention to some of the statements which were made in reference to the air-mail situation when the subject was discussed by the leader of the majority side of the Senate, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I desire to do so now only because of the announcement which was made by the Postmaster General yesterday, the release of which I have before me, to the effect that steps are being taken to make temporary contracts for carrying the air mail under certain limitations. I have also just observed that the Chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], has submitted a report on permanent legislation dealing with this subject. I have not had an opportunity carefully to examine that report, but only hastily have read it since it was sent to the desk.

The announcement of the Postmaster General includes this statement:

> No air-mail company whose contract has been annulled for fraud and collusion may bid for a temporary contract, and no company will be eligible to bid which has as any of its officers or directors any person who has entered into or proposed to enter into any combination to prevent the making of competitive bids for carrying the mail or who has made any agreement or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person not to bid for any other mail contract.

Mr. President, that is the offensive item of the announcement of the Postmaster General. Of course, I am not resisting the plan of the administration to return air mail to the commercial companies. There never should have been a change from commercial to Army operation of the air mail. There is not anyone who is fair-minded who does not admit that that was a dismal blunder; and the sooner it can be corrected, whether it be done on a basis of saving somebody's face or not, the better it will be, and any effort to do the obviously proper thing ought to be commended by everyone.

I have hastily examined the report submitted by the Chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads relative to the new proposal for permanent legislation. I am in accord with the purpose of new legislation not because we could not make improvements under the present law but because there would be greater facility in accomplishing improvements in the mail service if in some aspects the law were liberalized. For that reason I would give my assent to such a proposal as has been discussed in the House of Representatives. The bill which has just been reported does not include all the offensive provisions contained in the announcement of the Postmaster General, in that the limitation it proposes is to the effect that no company whose officers attended the meeting in the Postmaster General's office May 19, 1930, or June 4, 1930, shall be eligible to bid, but opens the way for such a company to make a bid by eliminating such officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will examine section 7 of the bill as reported by the committee, he will find that the inhibitions are practically the same as the inhibitions in the Post Office Department's advertisement.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator from Tennessee refer to section 7?

Mr. McKELLAR. I refer to section 7 of the bill, which covers the matter entirely.

Mr. FESS. I must confess, Mr. President, that I did not have an opportunity to examine it carefully, as I saw the bill as reported only about 20 minutes ago, and was not able to read it all. If the bill as it has been reported is, as the chairman of the committee states, the same in substance, as the Postmaster General's statement, then, of course, the bill should not be enacted; and it cannot be enacted until there shall be a complete discussion of what it involves.

The kaleidoscopic movement of the last few weeks in reference to the air-mail business is quite interesting to the American public. Contracts were canceled upon the basis, as announced, of information which had been brought to the Department through a special committee which was investigating the air-mail situation. That committee, however, has not been an investigating committee; it has been a prosecuting committee. That committee has proceeded on the basis of making allegations and then proceeding to get only testimony that could confirm those allegations, and avoiding all testimony that would be against those allegations. So far as the committee has gone, it has been ex parte, and no opportunity has as yet been given for subpenaing witnesses whose testimony might refute the allegations which have been made. In the testimony which has been adduced there has not been any more definite information along that line than the testimony itself which is now of record.

Mr. President, the Postmaster General announced in a letter to the chairman of that committee that the basis of the cancelation of the air-mail contracts was that it was alleged that they were illegal; and the first element of illegality specifically mentioned was the extension for 6 months of five contracts which were expiring. That position has been abandoned after it was clearly understood that Postmaster General Brown operated under the law and in specific pursuance of the statute giving authority to extend, not beyond 6 months, any contract made by the Postmaster General for carrying the mails.

Another allegation that has later been abandoned is that the procedure was illegal on the ground that competitive bidding was not had and that contracts were let without such bidding. The truth about the matter is that the only two new contracts that were let by the preceding Postmaster General, nos. 33 and 34, were let by competitive bidding. Therefore, the allegation that the contracts were not let by competitive bidding falls because of the simple fact that they were, in fact, let by competitive bidding.

A further allegation is that the contracts for extensions were let without requiring competitive bidding. The contracts that were let in the form of extensions were let in order to give to passenger lines not carrying mail mail contracts and to require mail contractors not carrying passengers to equip their planes for the purpose of carrying passengers. The principle of making contracts by negotiation was adopted in order that passenger lines, many of them short and not able to keep out of the red, and, perhaps, not able to continue, should get the additional aid of a mail contract so as to increase their revenue.

That was done not by competitive bidding, and never was intended to be, because it was not a subject of competitive bidding. It involved a line owned by a company carrying passengers between two cities, and the only question was whether that line should be given the additional help of a mail contract or whether it should be refused. It was not a subject of competitive bidding. That would have been out of order at that time, because most of the lines were owned by one company.

That provision was written in the law specifically for that purpose, and consequently the contracts which were made by negotiation were in direct pursuance of specific law. So that argument has not only fallen but it has been totally abandoned by those who were alleging fraud.

The next point that Mr. Farley announced in his letter to Chairman BLACK was that the law was violated in the granting of extensions. Even the distinguished Democratic leader in this body contested that point on the ground that extensions were so much longer than the original base, and argued that it was not in pursuance at least of the spirit of the law.

The facts are that there were extensions made that were longer than the original base, and the very one the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] mentioned is a concrete example. I refer to the Northwest Airways. The basic line was from Chicago to the Twin Cities. They wanted to extend to Duluth and Winnipeg. They wanted to extend also to the coast. If it should be extended to Mandan, the distance from the Twin Cities to Mandan would be longer than the distance between Chicago and the Twin Cities, but the basic line in which the investment was made and where the values were found was the line between the second largest city of the country and the largest center of population in the Northwest. So it was a substantial, profitable line, and the only question was whether that line could be extended toward the West. When the Senators from Minnesota and the Dakotas and Montana requested the Postmaster General to exercise the power, under the extension privilege written into the law, to extend the line, there was only one line that could be extended, there was only one company operating in that area, and that was the Northwest Co., and the extension was made.

There is a line from the far West, from Seattle eastward to Spokane. There is only one broken link that has yet to be filled in, and that is from Mandan across Montana to Spokane, Wash. The Department of Commerce right now is undertaking to complete that link. To complete it, of course, means that airways must be established, together with lights and stations. A man cannot start out in a plane over country like that and fly it without having ground organization.

The Commerce Department and the Government would not permit it. When the Commerce Department shall have completed that link, which ought not to be unduly delayed, they will have from Chicago to the Twin Cities and on through the West to Spokane and Seattle a full transcontinental line. There was no violation of the spirit of the law or the letter of the law in that extension. When it is made perfectly clear that there is law for it and that the preceding Postmaster General operated under the law then that position is abandoned.

The allegation that the Postmaster General had no authority to extend for 6 months no longer holds. The same thing is true about negotiations. The same thing is true of competitive bidding, and also of extensions. All those charges having been abandoned, now comes the distinguished Democratic leader in this body, for whom every man in the Chamber has admiration, and assails the Postmaster General on the one last line that has not yet been abandoned.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], speaking for the administration on March 13, alleged that the contracts were canceled because of violation of section 432 of title 39, United States Code. That section reads as follows:

> Combinations to prevent bids: No contracts for carrying the mail shall be made with any person who has entered, or proposed to enter, into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mail, or who has made any agreement, or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person not to bid for any such contract; and if any person so offending is a contractor for carrying the mail his contract may be annulled; and for the first offense the person so offending shall be disqualified to contract for carrying the mail for 5 years, and for the second offense shall be forever disqualified.

That is the final reliance. All the other charges are abandoned. This is the only one left; and so it is alleged that there was fraud through collusion leading to agreements to prevent bids on the one hand, and agreements not to bid on the other.

Those are the two items which, if they are true, would make the parties guilty.

Mr. President, what are the facts touching the charges made by the leader of the Senate relative to contracts and their cancelation under the authority conferred by section 432 of title 39 of the United States Code?

That section authorizes the annulment of a mail contract held by a mail contractor who, first, has entered or proposed to enter a combination to prevent the making of a bid for carrying the mail; or, second, who has made an agreement or given or performed or promised to give or perform any consideration to induce any other person not to bid for a contract for carrying the mail.

Those two items are the only ones that are offered as a basis for this charge.

No charge of misconduct on the part of any air-mail contractor has up to date been made in respect to bidding or refraining from bidding on any contracts except the two covering service on routes nos. 33 and 34, known respectively as the southern and central transcontinentals. It is, therefore, pertinent to inquire who were the air-mail contractors on the 25th of August 1930, when the bids were received for air-mail services on routes nos. 33 and 34, and in what respect, if any, such air-mail contractors offended against the provisions of section 432 of title 39, cited by the Senator from Arkansas.

On August 25, 1930, the following were the holders of air-mail contracts, together with the routes held by them, respectively:

No. 1: National Park Airways, Salt Lake City to Great Falls. When Mr. Brown was asked why there had not been an extension of National Park Airways, his reply was, "There was no place to which it could be extended." National Park Airways ran from Salt Lake City up into the central portion of Montana.

No. 2: United Aircraft & Transport Corporation, a famous line touching the great centers of population, operating from San Francisco to Chicago, Seattle to San Diego, Salt Lake City to Portland, New York to Chicago, Chicago to Kansas City, Kansas City to Dallas and Fort Worth. That company was operating those lines at the time these bids were opened on routes 33 and 34.

No. 3: Northwest Airways, operating from Chicago to the Twin Cities.

No. 4: What is known as the "Thompson Aeronautical Corporation", operating from Cleveland to Detroit, Detroit to Chicago, Detroit to Bay City and Grand Rapids.

No. 5: Eastern Air Transport, operating from New York to Atlanta originally, and then its route was extended on down to Miami. That is the company that in operating in 6 years had but two losses, while the Army, operating over the same route, had two losses in 63 days.

No. 6: The Clifford Ball Line, which ran from Cleveland to Pittsburgh. Mr. Ball was anxious to have an extension of his line from Pittsburgh on to Washington; and it was over that line that there was so much confusion because Mr. Brown would not allow a person of the character of Mr. Ball to undertake the traffic from the Capital City across this center over the Allegheny Mountains into Cleveland, tapping the lines from the East to the West.

No. 7: The Western Air Express. That was the very profitable line of Mr. Hanshue, which ran from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City.

No. 8: The Aviation Corporation, which has come in here for such bitter denunciation, apparently because it was well financed, and picked up 20 or more short, disconnected lines, poorly managed, without financial ability, and made them into a complete system which could serve the country.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I understood the Senator to say that the Aviation Corporation had been bitterly denounced, apparently because it was well financed. May I ask the Senator if he is familiar with how it was financed, and how much it paid to be financed?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will permit the chairman of the committee to make his speech in his own time.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has made a certain statement, and I assumed that he knew what he was talking about. Evidently he does not.

Mr. FESS. I do; and the Senator from Alabama can have all the time he desires in replying to what I am saying.

The Aviation Corporation has been a target for attack, not only in the committee—which is little but a smearing committee, and that was its purpose—but it has been attacked here on the floor, evidently because it represented in its stockholders the strongest financial men in a great center. It never could have done what it did if it had not been so substantially supported by the adequate funds that were necessary to furnish a successful service.

Yet there are men here who are going to assail a corporation which could carry out a contract let to it by the Government because somebody who was irresponsible and without ability to carry out a contract could not get it.

In the discussion of this very corporation, Mr. Letson's name has been bandied here and there. Mr. Letson stated not 10 days ago before the Post Office Committee that he did not have adequate resources and was not sufficiently competent and responsible to perform a contract of this kind, and told the Postmaster General that he could not do it. That was said less than 10 days ago before the Post Office Committee; and yet men in this body will quote Letson against himself, and say he was discriminated against because the Aviation Corporation was allowed to have a contract that it is said he ought to have had.

That corporation, Mr. President, had the line from Boston to New York. That was an important short line. It had the line from New York to Montreal. That was not so important. It had the line from Albany, Buffalo, Cleveland, Columbus, and Cincinnati to Louisville. That was rather an important line. It had the line from Chicago to Cincinnati, and the line from Chicago to St. Louis. That is the line upon which Lindbergh got his training. It had the line from Evansville to St. Louis, and from Kansas City on to Omaha. It had the line from Chicago, Evansville, and Nashville to Atlanta. It had the line from Atlanta and Mobile to New Orleans, and the line from New Orleans to Houston, and the line from Fort Worth to Galveston, and the line from Fort Worth to San Antonio on to Brownsville.

Take the air map I have here on my desk and look at that corporation's lines. Before the corporation was formed, there was a hodge-podge of these short lines, on none of which air service could be successful. When this corporation was organized, sufficiently backed by adequate finance, a different situation existed.

We have an air map that ought to be the pride of the country. The individual maps are too small to be seen at any distance; but I have all of them here, showing the lines of every one of these companies before the contract was made, and showing also the lines of the companies after the contract was made.

This is the eighth company I have named of those which were in existence at the time contracts nos. 33 and 34 were let. They were let after competitive bidding.

It should be noted that the Pittsburgh Industries Corporation, which subsequently acquired Clifford Ball's line from Cleveland to Pittsburgh, and a 5-percent interest in Transcontinental and Western Air, to which the contract for route no. 34 was sublet, and Transcontinental Air Transportation, which subsequently acquired a 47½ percent interest in Transcontinental and Western Air, had no mail contracts on August 25, 1930. That must not be overlooked. These short lines, which were made up into a complete system, were passenger lines without mail contracts, and the purpose was to aid the passenger service by mail contracts, not merely for the convenience of the people in the mail business but to build a great aviation industry in the United States; not alone to employ our own labor and have American capital invested but to put us in such a position that in case of war we would be the equal of any nation on earth in the air in national defense. That was the purpose of the leader who builded out of these disjointed and disconnected short lines the great system which became finer than any other air system in the world.

At the time this contract was let, on which there were bids, this company, of which I am speaking, had no mail contract. While there has been much loose talk about a conference of air-mail operators held at the Post Office Department May 19, 1930, it is clear from the memorandum made by the superintendent of air mail, who was present, and the report of the chairman made to the Postmaster General, that the conference dealt solely with suggestions for additional air-mail service proposed to be authorized by sections 7 of the Watres Act providing for the extension of existing air-mail routes without competitive bidding, and that no consideration whatever was given by the conference to any additional service which might be authorized under the contract feature of the Watres Act providing for competitive bidding.

I mean by that statement that the conference, which has been denominated "the spoils conference", had nothing to do except to determine how, in the recognition of pioneer equities in existing lines, there might be given to them mail contracts, and that was the only thing they were called together to contemplate or to discuss.

Mr. President, I spoke a few days ago about the preceding meetings in 1929 with the Postmaster General, three in number, in the Post Office Department, of all of the operators who were under contract under the law of 1928. They had been called into three meetings, which represented a period of 3 months, for the purpose of ascertaining whether they could find a common yardstick upon which a change in the cost of carrying mail could be made. Instead of having the poundage basis, with $3 a pound for a service of 125 miles, they wanted to know how they could arrive at some other more equitable basis at a cheaper rate for the Government, and, at the same time, put the service on a basis that would insure, in time, that it would be self-sustaining, when a subsidy would not be needed.

There never was any suggestion that these meetings were the result of any conspiracy, or that there was collusion, or that there was any element of fraud. It was thought perfectly proper; it was the only sensible thing to do; and everyone not animated by a desire to bring disrepute to someone who differed from him would admit it was a perfectly legitimate and proper course to pursue.

As soon as the law was enacted which had been worked out immediately following these meetings in order to grant the Postmaster General the authority necessary to build an air service, the most reasonable thing would have been to have these men immediately called into a conference. The law was passed in April, and the conference was held the next month, within a month of the enactment of the law. It was the most reasonable thing to do; it was the proper thing to do.

Mr. President, the Postmaster General was dealing with 25 different companies, all of them holding contracts, which he knew he was going to require to equip themselves to carry passengers when they did not want to carry passengers, because they did not, first, want to run the risk of fatalities and the heavy insurance expense, the liability of fines, and the cost of equipment; but the Postmaster General had insisted that a mail carrier must take on a passenger service so that he could recoup the expense of the operation, and as he recouped it by getting passenger revenue the cost to the Government would be reduced until the company would be self-supporting.

They did not want to do it, but he required them to do it. Of course, the lines which were carrying passengers wanted mail; that was a foregone conclusion. But in determining upon giving a mail contract to a passenger carrier they would necessarily encounter some obstacles, especially where two cities were connected by two routes. He would not be inclined to give contracts to both of them unless he could give one three contracts, say, and allow it to sublet to the other one of the three. He could do it in that way. That, in fact, was one of the things he had in mind in carrying out the law, the only purpose of which was to enable the passenger-carrying companies to find a basis on which they could have mail contracts. With these conflicting ideas, two or three claiming they had pioneer rights, any company, wherever it touched a city through which mail went, would claim it had an equity in the right to carry the mail.

Mr. Brown did the only sensible thing to do—he called these people into conference with the purpose of finding on what basis they could reach an adjustment that passenger carriers could be given, on a basis of safety to them and proper recognition to the Government, the additional revenue that would come from carrying the mail.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. It appears in the proof which was offered before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that 30 gentlemen were invited to the conference; that each of the 30 got a mail contract; and that none of those who were not invited and who were not present got a contract.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, that is the sort of thing that we have heard all the way through in the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the testimony of the witnesses who appeared before our committee.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, there was no one invited who could not qualify. The Postmaster General did not exclude anyone who could not qualify, but evidently no one was so arrogant as to want to come in there when he could not qualify. In the face of that, one of them said that he could not qualify, but he did not think that there was any reason why he should not come in, and he was there. So Mr. Brown——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FESS. Just a moment, Mr. President. Mr. Brown states that anyone who wanted to come in could have come in. There were no closed doors. There was no secrecy. Everything was in the open. The qualifications under the law were specified. Anyone who could qualify was invited. The Postmaster General had no way of knowing whether there were people there who could not qualify, because he could not know all who were there. If every man who was in there got a contract it was not because there was a conspiracy or collusion. It was because of the fact that there was justification for the contract that the contract was allowed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is it not true that the representative of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, Inc., which company had never flown a route a mile, was there and got a contract?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation is a holding company which had purchased short lines and some long ones, all of them qualified to bid. The company was the possessor of different lines that were qualified to bid.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at that time. That was afterwards.

Mr. FESS. Oh, yes, they were.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at that time. They were separate companies.

Mr. FESS. No; Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Pittsburgh Aviation Co. had no contract.

Mr. FESS. That is the difficulty. The Senator from Tennessee has joined the group of those expecting to have proof made by ex parte testimony, and refusing to bring in those who can give all the facts. Why are those people not brought in?

Mr. Letson was brought in, and the Senator from Tennessee was embarrassed in his questions of Mr. Letson when he asked him whether he was very badly or very well treated. Mr. Letson stated that he had been fairly treated. When Mr. Letson was expected to testify against Mr. Brown on the ground that he was not included, Mr. Letson stated that he was disqualified because he could not have bid on that contract. He said that in the Senator's own committee, and I have his testimony here.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know the Senator does not want to get his facts wrong.

Mr. FESS. No, Mr. President; I do not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Or to do me an injustice.

Mr. FESS. I would not do the Senator from Tennessee any injustice.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that.

Mr. FESS. The Senator knows that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Therefore I want to correct the statement he makes, because I know he has been misinformed about it.

When the hearings were held before the Post Office Committee, I invited by telegram or by direct invitation every one who was even suggested as a witness. I sent telegrams to all the companies which had representatives at the meetings. I wrote them letters asking them to come. I sought in every way to get testimony on all sides. Mr. Letson was one of the few who came. He testified that he formed a company while here in order to get a contract. He did not get one just at that time, but afterward he testified that the Postmaster General, though finding that Letson was the lowest bidder by 39 cents on a transcontinental contract, did not allow Mr. Letson's lowest bid, although it was backed up by cash and by a company and by property.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment.

Mr. FESS. I will read the testimony of Mr. Letson.

Mr. McKELLAR. The then Postmaster General did not allow that, but afterward he required the American Airways Co. to sublet a contract to this man, and, as I recall, he was the thirtieth man in the meeting who received a contract.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee does not mean to commend Mr. Brown, but he has done so in that last statement. Mr. Letson had a short line. He had to fly it within certain limits of the day. It made a very fast trip every hour. The Senator from Tennessee asked him why it was that he was put under the pressure of flying so rapidly, and he stated that he could not do night flying; that he had to do it in the daytime. That in order for his line to be of any value he had to get his mail to Denver in time for the Transcontinental to pick it up at a certain time in the afternoon, and that required him to fly at terrific speed, which was the subject of some criticism.

The Letson Co. was not capable, and admitted the incapacity, to bid on either one of lines 33 or 34. At the same time when Mr. Letson came in to Mr. Brown, as shown by the testimony that was given before the committee of which the Senator from Tennessee is chairman, Mr. Brown told him that he could not be given the contract because he did not have the necessary equipment. Mr. Letson said, "Then I suppose I am through", and Mr. Brown said, "No; you are not through. I will arrange, if I can, to have the Aviation Co., or any other company that gets the contract, sublet to you so that you will be a part, as a feeder, of the system, and you in that way will be given an air-mail contract."

But he could not be a bidder on the Transcontinental Line when he operated a route covering but the short distance from St. Louis to Denver. It was simply impossible for him to be a bidder under those circumstances, and he was told so frankly. He admitted that he could not do it. Mr. Brown took care of him by seeing that there was given to him a contract by subletting. That is not a subject of condemnation. That is a subject of commendation, because the then Postmaster General did it in order to avoid injury to Mr. Letson.

Mr. President, after a recognition of this situation it is apparent that no combination was made or proposed at the conference of May 19, 1930, to prevent the making of bids on routes nos. 33 and 34, advertised by the Post Office Department 10 weeks later; nor did the conference by any agreement promise or attempt to induce any person or persons not to bid on routes nos. 33 and 34. That is the charge that has been made on the floor of the Senate as the last resort after all the other allegations have been abandoned.

It is pertinent to ask, What evidence is there that after the conference of May 19, 1930, all the operators who held domestic air-mail contracts on the 25th of August 1930, the day when the bids were received for services on routes 33 and 34, offended against the provisions of section 432?

It must not be overlooked that the cancelation affected 34 contracts. The charge that there was a conspiracy not to bid, or to prevent bidding, is not limited to nos. 33 and 34; it is extended to 34 contracts, and includes every one from 1 up to 34, including 33 and 34.

What evidence is there that 32 contractors were in a conspiracy to agree not to bid, or to prevent bidding? All of them are now charged with fraud. On what basis? The only basis now alleged is that there was a conspiracy to agree not to bid, or agree that they would induce others not to bid for a consideration. I think it is the most un-American thing that has ever occurred in our history to charge all those people with fraud.

The sole evidence of such conspiracy is the fact that none of the companies bid on routes numbered 33 and 34, except the Aviation Corporation through its subsidiary, Robertson Aircraft Corporation, on route 33, and Western Air Express on route 34.

Will any sane person allege that merely because other companies refrained from bidding they were therefore in a conspiracy, the existence of which is supported merely by allegation and loose testimony, which the companies in question have never been given an opportunity to refute?

It must be borne in mind that when bids were received on routes nos. 33 and 34, 10 months after the stock-market collapse of 1929, it was absolutely impossible to obtain capital from the public for any aviation enterprise. There was no market for aviation securities. Moreover, the Postmaster General had announced that the air-mail operators would be required to carry pasesngers in order to obtain substantial revenues from sources other than the Post Office Department. The specifications for services on routes nos. 33 and 34 for the first time in the history of the air mail required the furnishing of passenger-transport equipment. The Watres Act just passed by Congress set up a new and untried method of payment for air-mail service. The operators all realized that if the Postmaster General's plans for developing a passenger-transport industry worked well they propably already had plenty of mileage to fly, and that if those plans worked badly every operator probably already had more than enough route mileage.

Properly to serve route no. 33 required permanent and working capital of not less than $3,000,000. Properly to serve route no. 34 required permanent and working capital of not less than $5,000,000.

United Aircraft & Transport Corporation, which had absorbed Boeing and National Air Transport, Eastern Air Transport, a subsidiary of North American Aviation, Aviation Corporation, and perhaps Western Air Express, were the only air-mail contractors financially able to undertake mail and passenger operations on either of routes nos. 33 or 34.

Mr. President, we did have 25 or more aircraft corporations or companies, but of all those it is stated in the testimony of Mr. Brown, as recorded in the hearings of the committee, only 4 were equipped to bid or to carry on the service, and only 4 of them were regarded by him as capable. These four were United Aircraft and Transport Corporation, Eastern Air Transport, the Aviation Corporation, and possibly Western Air.

United Aircraft and Transport Corporation already had a coast-to-coast operation. The acquisition of another transcontinental route would probably have been a violation of the antitrust laws. Moreover, the officials of that company were exceedingly reluctant to undertake the transportation of passengers over mountainous territory.

Eastern Air Transport had carried no passengers and was very reluctant to assume that responsibility. To the eastward of its line from New York to Atlanta it had important territory to develop which was subsequently served by an extension from Richmond to Raleigh to Charleston to Savannah and to Jacksonville. It was obliged to provide adequate passenger-transportation facilities to serve practically the entire Atlantic seaboard as well as appropriate facilities connecting with Pan American's Central and South American services at Miami. Obviously, Eastern Air Transport was not interested in any transcontinental operation.

Aviation Corporation had acquired a large number of short lines in both Northern and Southern States. Those disjointed lines, because they required a multiplicity of bases and operating managements, if they were to be saved from bankruptcy, must be welded together into a system having a transcontinental trunk line. Route no. 33 offered such an opportunity.

Western Air Express was the only air-mail contractor financially able to assume the responsibility of service on route no. 34 and interested in acquiring it. Owned entirely in the West and regarding itself as a western company, Western Air Express wished to confine its operations to the territory west of the Missouri River. However, in order to save its large investment in its passenger line from Los Angeles to Kansas City, it joined with Transcontinental Air Transport, which already had an investment of not less than $5,000,000 in the passenger air line from Columbus to Los Angeles, in making a joint bid on route no. 34.

Mr. President, I have taken time to point out the different companies that were carrying passengers at the time these contracts were made, all of which were in the mind of the Postmaster General, who desired to see whether he could add to their passenger revenue the revenue that would be justified by the mail contracts. In addition there were probably only 4 companies that were capable of making bids, and 1 of those companies, the Transcontinental group, would be necessarily avoided because it would not seem reasonable to give to 1 company 2 routes and thus stifle all competition in the carrying of mail between the oceans. That situation had to be considered.

The other one was the Eastern Air that served the Atlantic coast. It did not want this additional service. Consequently when the charge is made that there were agreements entered into, the charge falls as a result of the most simple examination of the facts surrounding the situation.

National Park Airways was a small and struggling enterprise, flying from Salt Lake City north to Great Falls, Mont. It could not take on a contract by bids for carrying mail across the continent.

Northwest Airways, owned largely by St. Paul and Minneapolis bankers, was flying from Chicago to the Twin Cities, and wished to develop northward to Winnipeg to connect with the Canadian air services, and westerly paralleling the Northern Pacific, Great Northern, and Milwaukee railway services.

The Thompson Aeronautical Corporation, the name of which was subsequently changed to Transamerican Airlines, and later was absorbed by the Aviation Corporation, was struggling for existence in southern Michigan, carrying passengers in the summertime from Cleveland to Detroit across Lake Erie, and maintaining a mail service from Detroit to Chicago.

I am mentioning these companies and giving their termini in order that it may be perfectly obvious that they could not have bid on the transcontinental routes about which these charges are made.

Clifford Ball, flying between Cleveland and Pittsburgh, because of unethical practices was unable to obtain a route certificate from the Post Office Department, and could not be considered in any sense a potential bidder on routes nos. 33 and 34.

It thus appears that Aviation Corporation and Western Air Express were the only air-mail contractors on August 25, 1930, who were interested in either nos. 33 or 34 and had the financial resources properly to serve these routes.

When it is understood that Aviation Corporation was not interested in route no. 34, but was vitally interested in route no. 33 because many of its operations were in territory south of route no. 33, and when it is understood that Western Air Express was primarily interested in saving its investment between Los Angeles and Kansas City on route no. 34 and could not properly be interested in two transcontinental operations, it becomes perfectly apparent that the sole bid received on route no. 33, the joint bid of Aviation Corporation and Halliburton—Robertson Aircraft Corporation and Southwest Air Fast Express—and the joint bid of Western Air Express and Transcontinental Air Transport on route no. 34 were without collusion between the successful bidders on routes nos. 33 and 34, and without collusion with any other air-mail operator or operators.

The bidding was limited to the two companies that were capable of making a contract and keeping it; and the only thing left would be to show that these two companies were in a conspiracy against one another. It seems to me that is too silly to claim the attention of any sensible man.

With all the facts before us, the contract between the Aviation Corporation and Halliburton and the contract between the Aviation Corporation and Western Air Express and Transcontinental Air Transport evidence business transactions that were in every respect legal and ethical.

Mr. Halliburton, who operated from Dallas northward through Oklahoma and Missouri, elected to bid on the southern transcontinental route no. 33. He entered into a contract with the Aviation Corporation under the terms of which he might sell out to the Aviation Corporation, he might buy the Aviation Corporation's interest, or the two might conduct a joint operation. The election, so far as Halliburton was concerned, was to sell. It was entirely proper for Western Air and Transcontinental Air Transport to buy from the Aviation Corporation that portion of Halliburton's fixed assets which were useful in connection with the operation of route no. 34, and it was entirely proper for them to acquire from the Aviation Corporation the interest which the Aviation Corporation had in Western Air Express, in view of the fact that the Aviation Corporation and Western Air Express were to become competitors for transcontinental business.

It appears, therefore, that there is no evidence worthy of credit that all of the air-mail contractors engaged in a conspiracy to effect collusion with respect to bidding on routes nos. 33 and 34, or that any two or more of such operators engaged in such a conspiracy. Only conclusive evidence that every air-mail operator engaged in such a collusive conspiracy could justify the annulment of all the domestic air-mail contracts under the provisions of section 432 of title 39 of the United States Code, upon which the Senator from Arkansas based his argument.

Mr. President, I desire to state again that there is absolutely no justification for the charge that any of the air-mail contracts were awarded through collusion among contractors or any other illegal practice.

The facts about the meetings of air-mail and air-passenger operators held at the Post Office Department May 19 and June 4, 1930, are as follows:

I must express regret that in order that this matter may be cleared up it seems necessary that I take some time at this late hour in the afternoon.

The Air Mail Act of April 30, 1930, known as the "McNary-Watres Act", when it was introduced in the House contained a provision designed to assist air-passenger carriers who had no mail contracts, because it was believed that the development of air-passenger traffic was essential to the permanence of the air-transport industry. The language to which reference is made was as follows:

Provided, That when, in his opinion, the public interests shall so require, he (Postmaster General) may award such contracts by negotiation and without advertising for or considering bids. In awarding air-mail contracts the Postmaster General will give proper consideration to the equities of air mail and other aircraft operators with respect to the routes which they have been operating and the territories which they have been serving.

That provision was originally written into the law. Some persons, led largely by Mr. KELLY of the House committee, thought that provision ought not to be retained in the law.

Opposition to the awarding of contracts by negotiation developed in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which this legislation was referred, and the language quoted was finally stricken from the bill, although the last clause, directing the Postmaster General to give proper consideration to the equities of air-mail and other aircraft operators, was given approval in the discussions of the bill in the committee and on the floor of the House.

In lieu of the language above quoted, the following provision was inserted in the act:

Provided, That where the air mail moving between the designated points does not exceed 25 cubic feet, or 225 pounds per trip, the Postmaster General may award to the lowest responsible bidder, who has owned and operated an air transportation service on a fixed daily schedule over a distance of not less than 250 miles and for a period of not less than 6 months prior to the advertisement for bids, a contract at a rate not to exceed 40 cents per mile for a weight space of 25 cubic feet, or 225 pounds. Whenever sufficient air mail is not available, first-class mail matter may be added to make up the maximum load specified in such contract.

When it was decided to strike from the bill the authority to buy mail space in passenger planes by negotiation, believing that it would be impossible to develop commercial aviation through the air passenger lines that had no air-mail contracts, he (Postmaster General) succeeded in inserting in section 5 of the bill, after the phrase: "Orders that may be issued by the Postmaster General for meeting the needs of the Postal Service and adjusting mail operations to the art of flying" the following: "And passenger transportation", having decided that passenger operations essential to permanence of the air transportation industry must be developed, if at all, by compelling the air-mail contractors to carry passengers.

There is the authority to enter into the negotiations. That is written specifically into the law.

The passenger carriers who had no air-mail contracts, but who had been very active in urging the passage of the bill were greatly disappointed that the proviso for their relief had been stricken from the bill. A representative of one of them told the Postmaster General that some of the passenger carriers were complaining that he had not made a vigorous fight for the clause in which they were interested and suggested the propriety of inviting the passenger carriers who had no air-mail contracts and the air-mail contractors to meet together with him for the purpose of advising them with respect to the Department's effort to secure the passage of the bill in substantially its original form and further to see if under the law as it was enacted any relief could be afforded to the passenger carriers who had no air-mail contracts through the cooperation of the air-mail contractors and the Post Office Department. The suggestion was made that relief might be afforded in one or both of two ways:

First. By giving additional daylight mail schedules to air-mail contractors and permitting them to sublet the same to passenger operators who had no air-mail contracts and whose operations paralleled air-mail routes; and Second. By giving extensions under the provision of section 6 of the act to air-mail operators and authorizing the subletting of the same to passenger carriers that had no air-mail contracts.

Mr. President, that is perfectly clear. If one of these companies had but two trips, and they were allowed a third trip, they would be permitted to sublet that third trip to another company which carried passengers but no mail. That is one way by which the Government could protect an air-passenger-carrying company by assuring it a mail contract.

If we examine section 7 of the Watres Act we find this language:

The Postmaster General when, in his judgment, the public interest will be promoted thereby, may make extensions or consolidations of routes which are now or may hereafter be established.

So that when the Postmaster General exercised the power of building an air route by extending another line from a base over a new territory, he did it specifically in pursuance of the law. That was one of the methods by which a passenger-carrying company not carrying mail might secure a mail contract.

The air-transport operators who had no mail contracts and the air-mail contractors were accordingly invited to meet with the Postmaster General on the 19th of May, 1930. In opening the meeting the Postmaster General traced in detail the various legislative proceedings connected with the introduction and passage of the McNary-Watres Act, stressing the Department's effort to preserve the provisions designed to prevent the abandonment of air-passenger operations. It was stated to the meeting the practical difficulties in the way of giving them relief under the provisions of law adopted in lieu of the authority to buy mail space by negotiation, although that language had been written into the act to assist the passenger carriers. The evidence shows that the Postmaster General repeated to the meeting the suggestion made for their relief by the subletting of operations from the air-mail contractors, without approving the same, however, as he had serious misgivings with respect to its practicability and soundness. The judgment of the operators was invited with respect to the plan suggested, and they were told in a general way the ideas of the Department so far as they had been formulated for extending the Air Mail Service throughout the country and their opinions were invited as to what air-mail and other aircraft operators in the language of the original proviso of the McNary-Watres bill had equities with respect to any of the routes then in existence or under consideration. The meeting was then turned over to the operators. Later in the day the Postmaster General was informed that they had recessed for the purpose of consulting their counsel and executives. Mr. Earl Wadsworth, Superintendent of Air Mail, who was present at the meeting, made a memorandum of the proceedings as follows:

The Postmaster General invited representatives of passenger air lines to meet with him in conference at 2 p.m. on May 19 for the purpose of discussing the provisions of the Watres bill insofar as it offered aid to the passenger lines.

The following persons were present: Messrs. Russel, Hanshue, Wooley, and Bishop, of Western Air Express; Messrs. May and Patterson, of Stout Airlines; Messrs. Maddux Sheaffer, Cuthel, Furlow, of T. A. T. Maddux Air Lines; Messrs. Coburn and Hinshaw, of Aviation Corporation; Messrs. White and Johnson, of United Aircraft Corporation; Messrs. Doe and Elliott, of Eastern Air Transport; Mr. Henderson, of National Air Transport; Messrs. Marshall and Denning Thompson Aeronautical Corporation; Messrs. Robbins and Hahn, of Pittsburgh Aviation Industry; Mr. Van Zant, Mr. Lou Holland, of U.S. Air Transport; Mr. Ted Clark, representing Earl Hilliburton; and Lawrence King, from Detroit.

The Postmaster General opened the meeting by discussing the general provisions of the Watres bill and invited suggestions from those present as to the ways and means of assisting the passenger operators, inasmuch as it is understood none of the so-called "strictly passenger lines" are breaking even and it is apparent that they will need some assistance if they are to continue. The Postmaster General expressed the desire to know whether it is going to be possible for the so-called "pioneers" to agree among themselves as to the territory in which they shall have the paramount interest. He outlined certain prospective routes that were in contemplation somewhat as follows: A southern transcontinental route from Los Angeles to San Diego, thence to Fort Worth and Dallas; also a route from New York to St. Louis and Kansas City and Los Angeles; from St. Louis to Tulsa and Fort Worth; from St. Paul to Winnipeg; possibly from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Omaha; possibly a route south from Cheyenne; and possibly one from Albany to Boston. He referred to the plan mentioned below.

Colonel Henderson said: "I believe it is quite possible for this group to work out a plan." He asked for instruction from the P.M.G. as to some policy. He mentioned extensions and then assigning such extensions to some operator who has no mail contract. He indicated the air-mail contractors would be willing to agree to such a plan.

Mr. Maddux feels that if they do not receive an air-mail contract they could not live, and he hoped the bill would take care of this. He would rather see the plan worked out as mentioned above than competitive bidding. He said "That is the view of T.A.T."

Mr. Mayer said: "I think the suggestion is a good one rather than to have competitive bidding." He thinks the routes we have worked out with the directors on their certificates are fair, etc.

Mr. Clark said: "I would prefer the plan suggested rather than competitive bidding."

Mr. Lou Holland said: "I think it should be worked out by agreement, as I am afraid that competitive bidding will result in wild promotions."

Mr. Hanshue said: "We are willing to do anything within reason to work out the plan rather than to go into competitive bidding."

Mr. White: "I feel sure that the entire group would be delighted to go into such a conference and work it out along the lines suggested."

Mr. Coburn: "I believe there is a community of interests among the operators in the Department, and they are ready to cooperate and find out how to do it."

The Postmaster General asked everyone to speak if there were any objections to the plan suggested and said that this was the appropriate time to express their opinions or objections thereto. No one rose in objection to the plan.

Mr. MacCracken suggested grouping the representatives together according to locality in order to work out the details of the plan or any other plan that might be gotten up, suggesting they might even have four committees, or an eastern and a western committee.

Colonel Henderson thinks those who have air-mail contracts should be organized into one committee and those who have no air-mail contracts should be organized into another committee.

Mr. Cuthel suggested that certain members of this group present to the Postmaster General a grouping of companies to deal with southern and mid-transcontinental routes.

The Postmaster General decided to permit the operators to use the room in which the meeting was held for the purpose of organizing themselves into such groups as may be agreed upon and to report back to the Postmaster General when they had reached a conclusion with regard to the suggested plan. He suggested that they stick to the routes outlined.

The Department on May 19 gave the following statement to the press:

In order to acquaint themselves with the provisions of the Watres bill, recently made a law through the signature of President Hoover, representatives of every large passenger- and air-mail-carrying concern throughout the country conferred today with Postmaster General Brown, Assistant Postmaster General Glover, and other officials of the Department in charge of the Air Mail Service. This is the first time that operators of the large passenger lines have had an opportunity to talk with the Postmaster General and exchange views with him since the Watres measure became a law.

A general discussion of air-mail and passenger-carrying business, together with prospects for their future development, took place at today's meeting. The Postmaster General explained to those who attended the conference the limitations placed on him under the terms of the Watres Act, which fixed the maximum that can be paid for carrying the mails to $1.25 a mile and a charge of 40 cents a mile for each passenger transported.

Before the close of today's session it was agreed that the operators present should prepare a map of the United States, which will show in detail plans for a network of passenger and air-mail routes to cover the country and which will be determined at future conferences with the Postmaster General.

The companies represented at today's conference were Western Air Express, Aviation Corporation, National Air Transport, Thompson Aeronautical Corporation, Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, Ford Co., United States Air Lines, Earl Haliburton, United Aircraft Corporation, Curtiss-Wright, Transcontinental Air Transport, and Eastern Air Express.

The evidence shows that on the 4th of June the air-passenger operators who had no mail contracts and air-mail contractors reassembled either in a body or by a committee and submitted to the Postmaster General a report of their deliberations, which is as follows:

Hon. WALTER F. BROWN,
Postmaster General of the United States,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. POSTMASTER GENERAL: Pursuant to your invitation, representatives of the air-transport operators met on Monday, May 19, to formulate recommendations for the extensions of the Air Mail Service, with a view to the participation in this service of air-transport operators now engaged exclusively in passenger and express service.

This committee has held numerous sessions during the time which has intervened since the first meeting, and a list of those attending one or more of these sessions is hereto attached.

The committee also submits with this report a map indicating its recommendations as well as the problems which remain unsolved.

The committee has made a study of 12 routes, and has agreed upon recommendations as to 7 of these; while as to the remaining 5 there are still some matters in controversy.

RECOMMENDATIONS

No. 3. Omaha to St. Paul and Winnipeg—Northwest Airways, now flying entire route.

No. 4. Albany to Boston—Aviation Corporation.

No. 7. Denver to Kansas City—United States Air Lines, now flying route.

No. 8. Pueblo to Fort Worth and Dallas—Western Air Express, now flying route.

No. 9. Pueblo to El Paso—Western Air Express, now flying route.

No. 11. Great Falls to Lethbridge—National Parks Airways, only party in interest.

No. 12. Seattle to Vancouver—United, first schedule; Varney Air Lines.

Second schedule

ROUTES WHICH ARE STILL THE SUBJECT OF NEGOTIATION

No. 5. Pittsburgh to Washington and Norfolk: Final terms not yet arranged.

No. 1. Los Angeles, San Diego, El Paso, Dallas, to Atlanta.

No. 6. Dallas to Louisville: Atlanta to Dallas—Eastern Air Transport and Delta Air Service; Louisville to Dallas—Aviation Corporation and Curtiss Flying Service; Los Angeles, San Diego, El Paso to Dallas—Western Air Express and Aviation Corporation.

No. 2. Los Angeles, Albuquerque, Kansas City, St. Louis, Columbus, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and New York.

No. 10. Amarillo, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, and St. Louis (Tulsa cut-off).

Kansas City to New York—Transcontinental Air Transport and Pittsburgh Aviation Industries; Los Angeles to Kansas City, Amarillo, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, to St. Louis—Western Air Express and Transcontinental Air Transport; Amarillo, Oklahoma City, Tulsa and St. Louis cut-off—Western Air Express, Southwest Air Fast Express, Transcontinental Air Transport.

Because the line of N.A.T. (United) south of Kansas City seemed to stand in the way of a proper solution of several of our problems, United has suggested that it abandon its line south of Kansas City and take over some other line of equal value; such line to be one that might be properly operated in connection with United's other lines. This would permit the clearing of the mid-Transcontinental of its N.A.T. contract between Wichita and Kansas City, and would open the N.A.T. line south of Kansas City and Wichita for proper disposition in harmony with the Postmaster General's ideas. The suggestion has been made that Southwest Air Fast Express might operate the service on C.A.M. 3 south of Wichita and south of Kansas City.

The operators interested in the routes under controversy have all agreed to submit the issues to the Postmaster General in the hope that a satisfactory solution may be reached. They request that an opportunity be afforded them to present their claims for consideration on the respective routes in such manner and at such time as may be designated by the Postmaster General.

That is the report to the Postmaster General by the chairman of the meeting on June 4, 1930.

Mr. WADSWORTH'S memorandum of the proceedings of the June 4 meeting is as follows:

At 3:15 p.m. on June 4 the representatives of passenger air lines met in conference with the Postmaster General here in the Department.

Mr. McCracken, who had been named as chairman of the operators' committee, presented to the Postmaster General a report together with a map indicating the result of the deliberations of these gentlemen.

The Postmaster General stated he would carefully consider this report and he would inform them of any results that might be reached. Thereupon the Postmaster General, Mr. Glover, and Mr. Wadsworth retired from the room to the office of the Postmaster General and the report was carefully read.

After reading over the report several times, it was decided to submit to the Comptroller General the question of just how far the Department could go in granting extensions to existing routes. It was thought best to do this before we took any further action with reference to this matter. The Postmaster General indicated that he would take the matter up with the Comptroller General himself and seek to obtain a decision with regard thereto.

In a short while Mr. Glover informally returned to the room where the operators were waiting and informed them that the Department was somewhat disappointed in their report, inasmuch as they had in effect "taken all the meat and left the bones". They were told, however, that the report would be carefully studied and any decisions reached would be indicated to them.

As a result thereof, the operators indicated they were preparing a supplemental report and would submit the same.

This report of the operators was placed on file and no further consideration was given to it, for the reason it was shown that the Postmaster General had reached a definite conclusion that the plan previously suggested of affording aid to the passenger carriers who had no mail contracts was impracticable and unsound, and if passenger operations were to be developed by the Post Office Department in order to lighten the burden of the air-mail services and ultimately create an economically independent transportation industry, the air-mail contractors themselves must be forced to develop a passenger and express business.

The only extensions suggested by the report quoted which the Department subsequently authorized were extensions which the Department had under consideration before the meeting of May 19, and which would have been made whether the industry approved or disapproved the same.

There is no evidence that any suggestion of dividing air-mail operations among the companies represented at the May 19 and June 4 meetings was ever made, and the Postmaster General declared was never contemplated, and no suggestion with respect to bidding on air-mail contracts or refraining to bid on air-mail contracts was made at either of those meetings or at any other time.

The facts are that the only air-mail companies of major importance, the central and southern transcontinental operations, were awarded under the provisions of the law relating to competitive bidding to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. President, I stated in the outset that I regret that this investigation has been conducted on the basis of making a charge and then undertaking to prove it. It is not an investigation. It is a prosecution. We now hear it said that a criminal angle has been given to the whole procedure as if that is to be complained of, when under the statute under which they claim these contracts should be annulled it would not be a criminal matter but only a civil matter. If there is any criminal tinge given to this matter, who is responsible for it? How has this investigation been conducted? Who has gone on the radio and what has been said over the radio in all this matter of dealing with the aircraft industry?

Mr. President, a distinguished woman walked into the editorial rooms of a great newspaper of America and announced that a report of the proceedings of the investigation was not reaching the people of the country; that the only thing that reaches the public is that which is news suggesting something that ought not to have been done. In the language of Victor Hugo:

To those whose noses are tuned to the stink of scandal, this is news.

That is what the American public has been fed in all this investigation. That little woman made the statement that the report is not being made, and evidently she was asked her opinion. She said:

THE CANCELATION OF THE AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

Mr. Lippmann questions whether the air-mail "blunder" marked the turn of the political tide in the minds of any but "partisan Republicans." He believes that "the public is certain to conclude that the error was due to an excess of zeal, and that no sinister purpose was involved", and that "it will not be easy to make very much political capital out of a patently honest mistake."

It must be admitted that the press has not reported the hearings of the Black and Post Office Committees of the Senate, and that the public so far has been kept in the dark as to the evidence in the case. Were it possible to conceal the facts indefinitely, then perhaps Mr. Lippmann's estimate of public opinion would prove correct. But the truth will out, and the record is there for all who seek to read.

It goes without saying that no political capital should be made of the deaths of the Army flyers, but those few Democrats who still dare call their soul their own, as well as Republicans, and indeed all fair-minded Americans, realize that it is not a partisan question, but an American question, and that such utter lack of justice strikes at the most basic law of our land, namely, the inalienable right of every American citizen to be considered innocent until proved guilty, and to receive a fair trial. The cancelation of these contracts is the most important of all the many arbitrary actions taken by this administration, because by it is revealed the attitude of the administration toward the people, the mental processes by which it reaches decisions, and its standards of justice and honor.

In this case of the Government versus the people, the conviction preceded the trial. The trial has been unique in legal annals because the offense became the defense, and the defense has been sitting as its own jury. The victims—innocent or otherwise—have not been heard. To date the Government has failed either to justify its action or to sustain a single charge. In its attempt to do so it has retreated step by step. Another retreat from Moscow. The testimony of Mr. Letson, president of the United States Airways, before the Senate Post Office Committee was illuminating because it shattered the contention of the Government that his line should have been allotted the contract instead of T.W.A. on the ground that he was the lower bidder. Mr. Letson told the committee that he had himself admitted to Postmaster General Brown that his bid had been on a "fradulent premise." He further told the committee that he could not have qualified in any way, nor could he have complied with the provisions in the contract had it been granted to him.

As for the charge of "collusion", the hearings show that the shoe is on the other foot. Collusion there was, but to bring about the cancelation of the contracts, not to obtain them originally. I refer Mr. Lippmann to the testimony of Mr. Harry P. Williams, of the Wedell-Williams Air Service (T.R. 7823), in which he informed the Black committee that, with Mr. Cord as its "moving spirit", the Scheduled Independent Air Transport Operators was formed with the objective of getting "the ins out and the outs in" on mail contracts. To create an investigation in order to get the old contracts canceled, and then by new legislation substitute themselves. Legislation containing the clause—now in dispute—"no person shall be eligible to bid for or hold an air-mail contract if it or its predecessor is asserting or has any claim against the United States because of a prior annulment of any contract by the Postmaster General", would undoubtedly help keep the fellows out who had contracts and let those in who did not.

Before the Senate Post Office Committee appeared Mr. W. I. Denning, who, at the request of Senator O'MAHONEY, provided the Senate with a list of companies which had operated 6 months or more and which have no mail contracts: Braniff Airways, Rapid Airlines, Bowen Airways, Hanford Airlines, Pacific Seaboard Airlines, Inc., and Robertson Airplane Service Co. Mr. Denning represented the Scheduled Independent Air Transport Operators' Association. Three other lines could qualify on this list: Reed Airline, Wedell-Williams Air Service, Wyoming Air Service; but they were excluded by Mr. Denning. Mr. Denning expanded on Senator O'MAHONEY's request, and, though clearly outside his rights, with no member of the committee present, dictated and inserted into the record a statement by way of amendment which, if adopted, would mean that the only lines eligible to bid on the new contracts would be those listed by Mr. Denning. The statement definitely shows that although they have claimed to have been "squeezed out", they want to squeeze out anyone else who might try to start in the same manner they did.

Thus the finest air service in the world, and the $500,000,000 investment of thousands of innocent investors, none of whom have received any dividends, but who had faith in the future of the enterprise, and the courage to pioneer, has been damaged and scrapped by a stroke of the pen. By the freedom with which the Government disregarded all laws in the annulment of these contracts, the public is warned that all Government contracts are but a scrap of paper. No industry or business is safe if by a sudden whim the Government should decide to eliminate it or confiscate it. There is nothing to prevent the Government from repudiating its bonds if it is actuated by the principles applied in this case.

It is not the "legend of its infallibility" which is impaired, but the confidence of the people in the justice and integrity of their Government. It will not be on a merely political basis that men will fight for their constitutional rights. I for one do not believe that the American people are so dense as to require a surgical operation on their brains to realize the crass injustice of the cancelation of these contracts, when the underlying "sinister purpose" is finally revealed.

VIRGINIA MURRAY BACON.

WASHINGTON, D.C., March 22, 1934.

Mr. President, this is the thing that cannot be condoned. This is the wrong that cannot be forgotten. If the Postmaster General wants to do the only decent thing, if he desires to follow the only proper American procedure, he should renew all these contracts with the companies whose contracts have been canceled, and then notify them that they will be given a certain period within which to show that they are not guilty of the charge he has made. Then in a proper court procedure where the Postmaster General is not only given an opportunity to prove his case but the party charged is also given an opportunity to be heard in his own right, if he is found guilty there is not a single fair-minded person in the United States who will not say that anything the Postmaster General may do in the way of annulling these contracts will be approved. It cannot be done, however, on the basis on which it has been done; and I regret that we have gotten into a state of mind here where we are not willing to do the only proper and fair thing.

The administration has already admitted that what was done was a dismal mistake. As I stated the other day, while, of course, the President would have to be held responsible for the acts of any Cabinet officer——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Ohio from time to time has made a number of statements which I have not asked him to give me time to deny. He has said that the administration has abandoned certain contentions, and has admitted that it has made mistakes in connection with this matter. I merely wish to state that that is incorrect. It has done no such thing.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, of course I accord to the Senator from Arkansas the same right to make any statement upon the basis of his own judgment that I claim for myself. I claim that the administration has abandoned every single allegation except the one that was made by the Senator from Arkansas the other day; and I also claim that in all the steps taken thus far there is an opportunity to undo the wrong, to get out of this unfortunate situation, to get the Army out of the air-mail business. It ought to be done, and there is an effort to do it and to get the air mail back to private enterprise; but the manner in which it is being done is a pitiable procedure. Notwithstanding the fact that it may be merely a face-saving procedure, it is not even that.

The only proper thing to do would be to proceed to renew the contracts that were canceled, and then proceed in court, and give everybody a chance to be heard. When the men who have been thus charged, without a right to be heard, shall have been heard, if it shall have been proven that the allegation is true, nobody will have anything further to say.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that he is in favor of the bill which has just been reported from the Post Office Committee?

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. I judge that the Senator is, if he feels that way about it.

Mr. FESS. No; I am not in favor of the provision which the Senator says is the same as the action of the Postmaster General, which prohibits bidding on the part of companies that had any representative in the meeting of May 19.

Mr. President, it is hard to say these things, because it is not my nature to make statements of this kind; but notice the language "the spoils conference." Where was that expression coined? That is not judicial language. It never was born in the chambers of a court. That is the language of high command of partisan politics. That expression was born in the precincts of political strategy. Every adverse paper carries the headlines, "the spoils conference." I am not so silly as not to know where that language came from. It is seized upon as having the force of a label. Friendly newspapers would say, "The so-called 'spoils conference'." The purpose of the other phraseology is, without proof and without trial, to carry conviction to the people of the country that this was a fraudulent performance.

Not only that, but the Senator from Arkansas—I can understand why he did it—took a playful expression found in a letter from Mr. Glover, where he said, "We must all hang together, or we shall all hang separately", and the Senator sees in that collusion and an expression about a transaction that he claims was fraudulent.

Mr. President, the Postmaster General was in Nova Scotia when these bids were opened. He was on his vacation. Under the last administration there were three men who were always consulted in reference to any contract that was let in connection with the carriage of the mail. If it was air mail, one of those men was the Second Assistant Postmaster General, under whose jurisdiction the air mail was. Another was the Superintendent of Mails. The third, in this case, was Mr. Gove, a civil-service employee of long standing in the Post Office Department.

Mr. Glover was going away. These bids were being opened. Reports from the heads of divisions were always laid before the Postmaster General for approval or disapproval. Mr. Glover, about to go away, addressed a note to the other two saying, "We must get together and see what our report will be, so that when the Postmaster General comes back one of us shall not be for this, and another for that, and another for that"; and then he used the playful expression of Benjamin Franklin in the convention which adopted the Declaration of Independence, "We must all hang together, or we shall all hang separately."

It is suggested that that is an evidence of fraud. Of course, one who is suspicious, and is on the scent of something that he thinks exists, might use an expression like that as corroborative of what he is trying to prove; but there is no real proof in a phrase of that sort.

Mr. President, I assert again that there is not a scintilla of evidence that is corroborated that there was anything wrong or illegitimate in the meetings of May 19 or June 4.

I intended to back up the statements I have made by reading the testimony before the committee. I desire to present, and I am going to present, the contrast between the testimony given by Mr. Brown and the testimony given by Mr. Farley, in order that the country may know whether Mr. Brown knew anything about the air-mail business, and that the country may know how much Mr. Farley knows about the air-mail business. I shall not do that tonight, however. I shall suspend my remarks now until a later time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute air-mail bill reported today from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Omit the part in black brackets and insert the matter printed in italic]

TO REVISE AIR-MAIL LAWS

Be it enacted, etc., [That the act of April 20, 1930 (46 Stat. 259, 260; U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, secs. 464, 465c, 465d, and 465f), is hereby repealed.

[SEC. 2. The term "person", as used herein, is defined so as to include within its meaning all persons, firms, partnerships, corporations, or associations.

[SEC. 3. The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by airplane between such points as he may designate, and for periods of not exceeding 3 years, to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guaranty for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement at fixed rates per airplane-mile, with a definite weight basis of 1 cubic foot of space being considered as the equivalent of 10 pounds of air mail: Provided, That where the Postmaster General holds that a low bidder is not responsible, such bidder shall have the right to appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall speedily determine the issue, and its decision shall be final: Provided further, That such rates in no case shall exceed 30 cents per airplane-mile for the first 300 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, and not exceeding 6 cents per airplane-mile for each additional 200 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, computed at the end of each calendar month on the basis of the average load for the route for such month: Provided further, That in no case shall the rate exceed 40 cents per airplane-mile: Provided further, That no contract or interest therein shall be sold, assigned, or transferred by the person to whom such contract is given, to any other person without the approval of the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission; and upon any such transfer without such approval, the original contract, as well as such transfer, shall become null and void: Provided further, That, if, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the public interest requires it, he may grant an extension of any route, for a distance not in excess of 100 miles, and only one such extension shall be granted to any one person, and the rate of pay for such extension shall not be in excess of the contract rate on that route: Provided further, That the Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary and secondary routes and may include four transcontinental routes, extending to termini, as nearly as practicable, on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, as primary routes. All other routes shall be secondary routes. The character of the designation of such routes shall be published in the advertisements for bids, which bids may be asked for in whole or in part of such routes.

[SEC. 4. The Postmaster General shall cause advertisements of air-mail routes to be conspicuously posted at each post office that is a terminus of the route named in said advertisement, for at least 30 days, and by publication at least once a week for 4 consecutive weeks in some daily newspaper of general circulation published in the cities that are the termini for the route, before the time of the opening of bids.

[SEC. 5. After the bids are opened, the Postmaster General may grant to a successful bidder, a period of not more than 6 months from the date of award of the contract, to take the steps necessary to qualify for mail services under the terms of this act: Provided, That, at the time of the award, the successful bidder executes an adequate bond with sufficient surety, guaranteeing and assuring that, within such period, said bidder will fully qualify under the act faithfully to execute and to carry out the terms of the contract: Provided further, That, if there is a failure so to qualify, the amount designated in the bond will be forfeited and paid to the United States of America.

[SEC. 6. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed to fix and determine, within 6 months prior to the expiration date of any and every contract made under this act, and at all events at a period not later than 4 years from the date of the passage of this act, the public convenience and necessity for all air-mail routes and the fair and reasonable future rates of compensation for the transportation of such mail matter by airplane common carriers and the service connected therewith, but not in excess of the routes herein provided for, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates or compensation, and to publish the same, and orders so made and published shall continue in force until changed by the Commission after due notice and hearing. Said Commission shall have power to grant a 3-year extension of contracts to contractors found by the Commission to be giving good service, or it may advertise for bids as herein provided and for the same term; but new routes shall only be let upon competitive bidding.

[All provisions of section 5 of the act of July 28, 1916 (39 Stat. 412), relating to the adjustment of rates for carriage of mail by railroads shall be applicable to transportation of mail by airplane under this act so far as consistent with the provisions of this act.

[SEC. 7. It shall be unlawful for any company holding an air-mail contract to buy, control, or own directly or indirectly any stock or interest in any other company, which other company is engaged directly or indirectly in any phase of the aviation industry, whether the other company be a holding company, or a company transporting mail or holding a mail contract, or a company engaged in the manufacture or sale of airplanes, airplane parts, or other materials or accessories generally used in air transportation.

[It shall be unlawful for any company or corporation, engaged directly or indirectly in any phase of the aviation industry, whether such company be a holding company, a company transporting mail or holding a mail contract, or a company engaged in the manufacture or sale of airplanes, airplane parts, or other materials or accessories generally used in air transportation, to buy, acquire, hold, or own directly or indirectly any stock ownership or interest in a corporation or company holding a mail contract whether such company buying, acquiring, holding, or owning such stock or interest, does so directly or does so indirectly through subsidiaries, associates, affiliates, or interlocking stock ownerships. No person shall be eligible to bid for or hold an air-mail contract, which has any officer or director in any holding company holding stock, directly or indirectly, in any company engaged in any phase of the aviation industry, or in any other company engaged in the manufacture or sale of airplanes, parts, or other materials or accessories generally used in air transportation; no person shall be eligible to bid for, or to hold, an air-mail contract if at the time of bidding, it has an officer who was a representative at, or in, any meeting held for the purpose of rearranging the air-mail map of the United States in the Office of the Postmaster General, at Washington, in May or June 1930, but any such company alleging to hold a claim against the Government on account of any mail contract may prosecute such claim as it may have against the United States for the cancelation of such contract in the Court of Claims of the United States, provided that such suit be brought within 1 year. No person shall be eligible to bid on or hold an air-mail contract if such person, through its officers, has entered into any combination to prevent competitive bidding for carrying the mails, or has made any agreement, or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any person not to bid for any such contract, or has, as an officer or director, any person who has heretofore entered into any combination to prevent the making of any bids for carrying the mails, or which pays any officer, director, and/or employee as a salary and/or bonus and/or commission, or other compensation whatsoever, a sum in excess of the rate of $17,500 for a calendar year for full-time service.

[SEC. 8. All persons desiring to bid on air-mail contracts shall be required to furnish in said bid a list of the stockholders and directors and a statement covering the financial set-up, including a list of assets and liabilities; and in the case of the corporation, the original amount paid to such corporation for its stock, and whether paid in cash, and if not paid in cash, a statement showing for what such stock was issued, and the financial responsibility of such bidder, as well as the bond offered, may be taken into consideration by the Postmaster General or Interstate Commerce Commission in determining the qualifications of the bidder.

[SEC. 9. All persons holding air-mail contracts shall be required to keep their books, records, and accounts under such regulations as may be promulgated by the Postmaster General, and he is hereby authorized to audit the books of such contractors and to require a full financial report under such regulations as he may prescribe; and the Postmaster General is further authorized to reduce the mail pay rates to any air-mail contractors at the end of each fiscal year if, in auditing the books of such contractor, he is of the opinion that the public interest requires such action.

[SEC. 10. Before the establishment of an air-mail route, the Postmaster General shall notify the Secretary of Commerce, who thereupon shall certify to the Postmaster General the character of equipment to be employed and maintained on each air-mail route. In making this determination, the Secretary of Commerce in his specifications furnished to the Postmaster General shall only determine the speed, load, capacity, and safety features and devices on airplanes to be used on the route, which said specifications shall be included in the advertisement for bids.

[SEC. 11. The Secretary of Commerce shall, and he is hereby authorized and directed to, prescribe the maximum flying hours of pilots and/or copilots on air-mail lines, the minimum pay of pilots and/or copilots on such lines, safe operation methods, and authorized to approve any plans made by air-mail operating companies for retirement or annuity benefits to pilots and/or copilots.

[SEC. 12. The Secretary of Commerce shall have authority to promulgate all necessary regulations to carry out the provisions of sections 9, 10, and 11 hereof.

[SEC. 13. On such air-mail routes as are established, the contractor shall be required, without additional compensation, to carry air pilots of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, or of Reserve Corps as copilots. The advertisements for the routes shall state fully the conditions and requirements, as prescribed by the Postmaster General, under which copilots shall be employed. All commissioned officers who are detailed to the above duty shall receive from the United States, the pay, including flying pay and other allowances now authorized in accordance with their military rank, and while detailed to such duty, shall also be paid the same rate per diem as is now payable to civilian employees of the United States under the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended.

[SEC. 14. The performance by military personnel of duty hereunder shall in no way disturb or change their military status under their respective commissions, warrant, or enlistments in their respective branches of the service, or any right, privilege, benefit or responsibility growing out of said military status.

[SEC. 15. All persons awarded air-mail contracts, and who may employ civilian pilots and/or copilots, who now hold, or who may hereafter hold, commissions in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps Service, shall, upon request of such pilots and/or copilots, grant them leave of absence but not during vacation, of not to exceed 1 month each year, when such pilots and/or copilots may be called to Government training duty with their respective branches of the service, under their respective commissions, for such period: Provided, That all Reserve officers performing Government duty with their respective branches of the service shall be deemed to be in the Government military service, and, if injured or killed while on such active duty, such officer and/or his dependents and beneficiaries shall be entitled to the same benefits as in the case of officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps and/or their dependents and beneficiaries.

[SEC. 17. It shall be unlawful for the contractor of any air-mail route to hold any other contract, or for air-mail contractors competing in parallel routes to merge or enter into any agreement, express or implied, with the object in view of common control or ownership.

[SEC. 18. The Postmaster General may provide service to Canada within 150 miles of the international boundary line, over domestic routes which are now or may hereafter be established and may authorize the carrying of either foreign or domestic mail, or both, to and from any points on such routes and make payment for services over such routes out of the appropriation for the domestic Air Mail Service: Provided, That this section shall not be construed as repealing the authority given by the act of March 2, 1929 (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, sec. 465a).

[SEC. 19. The Postmaster General may cause any contract to be canceled for disregard or failure by the contractor to comply with the provisions of law herein contained and for any conspiracy or acts designed to defraud the United States with respect to such contracts. This provision is cumulative to other remedies now provided by law.

[SEC. 20. Whoever shall enter into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mail under this act, or shall make any agreement, or give or perform or promise to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person or concern not to bid for any contract pursuant to this act, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

["Air-mail postage rates shall be 6 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof."

[SEC. 22. If any person shall willfully or knowingly violate any provision of this act its contract shall be forfeited, and such person shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000 and be imprisoned for not less than 6 months nor more than 5 years.]

That the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 259, 260; U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, secs. 464, 465c, 465d, and 465f), and the sections amended thereby are hereby repealed.

Sec. 2. The term "person", as used herein, is defined so as to include within its meaning all persons, firms, partnerships, corporations, or associations.

Sec. 3. The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by airplane between such points as he may designate, and for periods of not exceeding 3 years, to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guaranty for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement at fixed rates per airplane-mile, with a definite weight basis of 1 cubic foot of space being considered as the equivalent of 10 pounds of air mail: Provided, That where the Postmaster General holds that a low bidder is not responsible, such bidder shall have the right to appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission, under rules and regulations to be established by the said Commission, which shall speedily determine the issue, and its decision shall be final: Provided further, That the base rate of pay which may be bid and accepted in awarding such contracts shall in no case exceed 30 cents per airplane-mile for transporting a mail load not exceeding 300 pounds. Payment for transportation shall be at the base rate fixed in the contract for the first 300 pounds of mail or fraction thereof plus 0.1 of such base rate for each additional 100 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, computed at the end of each calendar month on the basis of the average mail load carried per mile over the route during such month, except that in no case shall payment exceed 40 cents per airplane-mile: Provided further, That no contract or interest therein shall be sold, assigned, or transferred by the person to whom such contract is given, to any other person without the approval of the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission; and upon any such transfer without such approval, the original contract, as well as such transfer, shall become null and void: Provided further, That if, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the public interest requires it, he may grant an extension of any route, for a distance not in excess of 100 miles, and only 1 such extension shall be granted to any one person, and the rate of pay for such extension shall not be in excess of the contract rate on that route: Provided further, That the Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary and secondary routes and may include at least 4 transcontinental routes, extending to termini, as nearly as practicable, on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, as primary routes. All other routes shall be secondary routes. The character of the designation of such routes shall be published in the advertisements for bids, which bids may be asked for in whole or in part of such routes.

Sec. 4. The Postmaster General shall cause advertisements of air-mail routes to be conspicuously posted at each such post office that is a terminus of the route named in such advertisement, for at least 30 days, and a notice thereof shall be published at least once a week for 4 consecutive weeks in some daily newspaper of general circulation published in the cities that are the termini for the route, before the time of the opening of bids.

Sec. 5. After the bids are opened, the Postmaster General may grant to a successful bidder a period of not more than 6 months from the date of award of the contract to take the steps necessary to qualify for mail services under the terms of this act: Provided, That at the time of the award the successful bidder executes an adequate bond with sufficient surety, guaranteeing and assuring that within such period said bidder will fully qualify under the act faithfully to execute and to carry out the terms of the contract: Provided further, That if there is a failure so to qualify the amount designated in the bond will be forfeited and paid to the United States of America.

Sec. 6. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed to fix and determine, within 6 months prior to the expiration date of any and every contract made under this act, and at all events at a period not later than 4 years from the date of the passage of this act, the public convenience and necessity for all air-transport routes and the fair and reasonable future rates of compensation for the transportation of such mail matter by airplane common carriers and the service connected therewith, but not in excess of the rates herein provided for, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates or compensation, and to publish the same, and orders so made and published shall continue in force until changed by the Commission after due notice and hearing.

All provisions of section 5 of the act of July 28, 1916 (39 Stat. 412), relating to the procedure and administrative detail for the adjustment of rates for carriage of mail by railroads shall be applicable to the adjustment rates for transportation of mail by airplane under this act so far as consistent with the provisions of this act.

In fixing and determining the fair and reasonable rates of compensation for such transportation of mail matter by airplane, the Commission shall not include in such rates, or provide in addition thereto, any compensation by way of subsidy or other similar payment.

Sec. 7. It shall be unlawful for any person, or any officer thereof, holding an air-mail contract, to buy, acquire, control, or own, directly or indirectly, any interest, evidenced by stock ownership or otherwise, in any other person, if such other person is engaged, directly or indirectly, in any phase of the aviation industry.

It shall be unlawful for any person, or any officer thereof, engaged, directly or indirectly, in any phase of the aviation industry to buy, acquire, control, or own, directly or indirectly, any interest evidenced by stock ownership or otherwise, in any person holding a mail contract.

No person shall be eligible to bid for or hold an air-mail contract if when operations are begun under the contract, or thereafter, it has an officer, or another, who has theretofore entered into any unlawful combination or conspiracy to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mails by airplane; or which pays an officer, or another, as a salary, including any other compensation, either directly or indirectly, a sum in excess of $17,500 per annum for full-time service.

"Officer" as used in this section, includes a director, trustee, or whoever may individually, or in connection with others, assist in the management of any person as defined in this act.

No person who violates any provision of this section shall be eligible to bid on or hold any air-mail contract.

The prohibitions expressed in this section shall apply to holding companies, air-mail transportation companies, including all such persons or companies as may be engaged in the manufacture or sale of airplanes, parts of airplanes, accessories, or other materials, or articles used in connection with air-mail transportation; and shall also apply to subsidiaries, associates, affiliates, or other persons controlled by interlocking stock ownership or otherwise: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prohibit any persons holding an air-mail contract, buying, leasing, or owning, in whole or in part, a landing field or equipment thereon.

Sec. 8. Any company alleging to hold a claim against the Government on account of any mail contract that may have heretofore been annulled may prosecute such claim as it may have against the United States for the cancelation of such contract in the Court of Claims of the United States: Provided, That such suit be brought within 1 year from the date of the passage of this act; and any person not ineligible under the terms of this act who qualifies under the other requirements of this act shall be eligible to contract for carrying air mail, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3950 of the Revised Statutes (act of June 8, 1872).

Sec. 9. Each person desiring to bid on air-mail contracts shall be required to furnish in its bid a list of all the stockholders holding more than 5 percent of its entire capital stock and of its directors, and a statement covering the financial set-up, including a list of assets and liabilities; and in the case of a corporation, the original amount paid to such corporation for its stock, and whether paid in cash, and if not paid in cash a statement for what such stock was issued. Such information and the financial responsibility of such bidder, as well as the bond offered, may be taken into consideration by the Postmaster General in determining the qualifications of the bidder.

Sec. 10. All persons holding air-mail contracts shall be required to keep their books, records, and accounts under such regulations as may be promulgated by the Postmaster General, and he is hereby authorized to examine and audit the books, records, and accounts of such contractors and to require a full financial report under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Sec. 11. Before the establishment and maintenance of an air-mail route the Postmaster General shall notify the Secretary of Commerce, who thereupon shall certify to the Postmaster General the character of the equipment to be employed and maintained on each air-mail route. In making this determination the Secretary of Commerce, in his specifications furnished to the Postmaster General, shall determine only the speed, load capacity, and safety features and safety devices on airplanes to be used on the route, which said specifications shall be included in the advertisement for bids.

Sec. 12. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to prescribe the maximum flying hours of pilots on air-mail lines, and safe operation methods on such lines, and is further authorized to initiate and approve agreements between air-mail operating companies and their pilots for retirement benefits to such pilots and mechanics. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to prescribe all necessary regulations to carry out the provisions of this section and section 10 of this act.

Sec. 13. It shall be a condition upon the awarding and holding of any air-mail contract that the rate of compensation for all pilots, mechanics, and laborers employed by the holder of such contract shall be not less than the rate of compensation paid by air-mail-line operators during 1933, as modified by decisions of the National Labor Board. This section shall not be construed as restricting the right of collective bargaining on the part of any such employee.

Sec. 14. In order to improve national defense, promote the art of flying, and secure for air-mail and military and naval pilots the benefits of training in both military and commercial aviation a committee of not more than seven members, consisting of representatives of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the air-mail contractors, and of the air-mail pilots, to be designated in such manner as the Postmaster General may determine, is authorized to provide for an interchange of personnel, so that air-mail pilots who hold commissions as Reserve officers in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps may be called into active service with their respective branches, and air pilots who are regular or Reserve officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps may be detailed by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, for training in air-mail flying. Such interchange of personnel shall not operate to reduce the pay, emoluments, or privileges of any pilot of an air-mail contractor, except that any air-mail pilot who is a Reserve officer when called into active service under such interchange shall not be entitled to pay from the air-mail contractor during such active service.

Sec. 15. All commissioned officers who are detailed for training in air-mail flying shall receive from the United States the pay, including flying pay and other allowances, now authorized in accordance with their military or naval rank, and, while detailed to such duty, shall also be paid the same rate per diem as is now payable to civilian employees of the United States under the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended. The performance by military or naval personnel of duty under this act shall in no way disturb or change their status under their respective commissions, warrants, or enlistments in their branches of the service, or any right, privilege, benefit, or responsibility growing out of such status.

Sec. 16. All persons holding air-mail contracts, and who may employ civilian pilots and/or copilots, who now hold, or who may hereafter hold, commissions in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps Reserve, shall, upon request of such pilots and/or copilots, grant them leave of absence but not during vacation, of not to exceed 1 month each year, when such pilots and/or copilots may be called to Government training duty with their respective branches of the service, under their respective commissions, for such period: Provided, That all Reserve officers performing Government duty with their respective branches of the service shall be deemed to be in the Government military service, and, if injured or killed while on such active duty, such officer and/or his dependents and beneficiaries shall be entitled to the same benefits as in the case of officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps and/or their dependents and beneficiaries.

Sec. 17. The Federal Radio Commission shall give equal facilities in the allocation of radio frequencies to those airplanes carrying mail and/or passengers during the time the contract is in effect.

Sec. 18. It shall be unlawful for the contractor of any air-mail route to hold any other contract, or for air-mail contractors competing in parallel routes to merge or enter into any agreement, express or implied, which may result in common control of ownership.

Sec. 19. The Postmaster General may provide service to Canada within 150 miles of the international boundary line, over domestic routes which are now or may hereafter be established, and may authorize the carrying of either foreign or domestic mail, or both, to and from any points on such routes and make payment for services over such routes out of the appropriation for the domestic Air Mail Service: Provided, That this section shall not be construed as repealing the authority given by the act of March 2, 1929 (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, sec. 465a).

Sec. 20. The Postmaster General may cause any contract to be canceled for disregard of or failure by the contractor to comply with the provisions of law herein contained and for any conspiracy or acts designed to defraud the United States with respect to such contracts. This provision is cumulative to other remedies now provided by law.

Sec. 21. Whoever shall enter into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mail under this act, or shall make any agreement, or give or perform, or promise to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person or concern not to bid for any contract pursuant to this act, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

Sec. 22. Section 3 of the act of February 2, 1925 (43 Stat. 805), as amended (39 U.S.C., sec. 463, supp. VII), is amended so as to read as follows:

"Air-mail postage rates shall be 6 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof."

Sec. 23. If any person shall willfully or knowingly violate any provision of this act, his contract, if one shall have been awarded to him, shall be forfeited, and such person shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or be imprisoned for not more than 5 years.

THE TARIFF AND THE DEBTS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR ROBINSON OF INDIANA

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on Tuesday evening, March 24, 1934, the able senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] made an interesting address over the National Broadcasting Co. network on the subject, The Tariff and the Debts, which I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF SENATOR ARTHUR R. ROBINSON MADE OVER NATIONAL BROADCASTING CO. NETWORK TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 27, 1934

Americans are opposed to cancelation of the war debts and would justly condemn any Congress that would give to one man the autocratic power to release our foreign debtors from their obligations to the American people. Yet that vast authority would be accorded the Chief Executive by enactment of the pending administration bill to empower the President, without check of Congress, to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements with foreign countries. And there is much evidence indicating that the administration leans strongly to cancelation or at least reduction.

In this bill Congress faces one of the most momentous pieces of legislation yet presented. The implications of the measure are so far-reaching that, if the bill is passed, the President will not only be authorized to do as he pleases about the debts but he will also have the absolute power of life and death over American industry and agriculture.

The purpose of a tariff levy is to protect American labor, industry, and agriculture from the undermining influences of foreign goods and agricultural products produced by cheap labor abroad, working under much lower standards of living than our own people. Thus if we had no import duty on manufactured goods, the land would be flooded with products of European and oriental manufacture. We place a duty on commodities, representing the difference between the cost of production here and abroad, in order that our own producers may compete on a parity with the imported goods. We want our own factories to run and our own toilers to have work. We must protect the American wage earner in order to uphold the American wage scale and the American standard of living. Only thus can we get out of the depression. A tariff is our first line of economic defense. Shattering this economic defense is as dangerous as depriving our people of the security of adequate national defense against foreign aggression.

We have a tariff on agricultural products to protect the American farmer. If there were no protective duty, we would find foreign wheat and other commodities pouring into our metropolitan centers. We would see great areas of the beet-sugar States made barren. Into our seaboard regions would come butter and other dairy products from Europe and the range lands of South America; Australia and South Africa would send us wool and hides to the detriment of American sheep and cattle raisers.

Free-traders claim that admitting goods without a tariff permits the city wage earner to be supplied with the necessities of life at a low price. The free-trader forgets, however, that when we turn the American market over to foreign goods which undersell the commodities made by the American wage earner, there is no demand for the latter's product; he loses his job and the net result is increased unemployment.

That would never aid recovery; it would have the opposite effect. With decreased purchasing power the wage earner would be unable to buy the products of American industry and American agriculture and the depression would only be aggravated. In short, a lowering of tariffs would mean extending an invitation to foreign nations to dump their cheap products on our shores, thereby bringing our living standards down to those of alien lands.

Passage of the bill now pending would deal one of the most dangerous blows to the Constitution which has been threatened in the entire administration program. The Congress has abdicated much of its constitutional power to the Executive under the guise of emergency. With disturbing swiftness since last March we have seen our liberties vanishing to the point where it is now fair to question whether or not we are still living under a representative form of government. If this bill passes, there will be no question. The journey toward Executive dictatorship will be virtually ended—so far have we gone from government of, for, and by the people to a government by Executive fiat and unchecked bureaucracy.

Under the Constitution the tariff-making authority is lodged in the Congress, which is in turn responsible to the people. Now, however, Congress is directed to give the President absolute power to effect trade agreements without knowing what kind of pacts will be made, without knowing what industries will be sacrificed, without knowing anything at all beforehand. Regardless of the action taken by the Executive, Congress would be helpless. Nor is this vast delegation of power considered as emergency legislation. It is to be a permanent innovation.

It has been the policy of the administration to hold out glittering promises of prosperity to gain support for its measures. The trade-agreement arguments now advanced are in line with this practice. We are told that our export trade will go far toward restoring prosperity, notwithstanding the fact that not more than 6 to 7 percent of our total production is sold abroad. Ninety to ninety-five percent of all American production is sold in the American market, and that market must be preserved for the American people. Otherwise there can be no return to prosperous times. We have been witnessing the rise of dictatorship and the decline of constitutional government, step by step, with the passing of legislation clothing the Executive with autocratic power. Unless a halt is called on such procedure, representative government in America will soon have perished.

The methods pursued in this proposed legislation give rise to grave suspicion. The bill was drawn by someone in the executive department of the Government and sent to the House of Representatives for introduction—although the constitutional and traditional procedure is for Congress to initiate and to pass legislation. On March 5 it was announced that hearings would be held beginning March 8—the hearings to last 1 week. The administration had a year to prepare for these hearings, while those who might be opposed to the plan were given only 3 days' notice.

While the hearings were being conducted, Mr. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, who is reported to have drafted the bill, appeared. He was asked if he could give the committee some idea of the bargaining that would be undertaken. He said:

"* * * I don't feel that it is quite possible to reveal the approaches the foreign governments made in confidence to the State Department. I think, really, sir, it would not be politic or wise or fair to reveal such approaches as have been made."

Here we have a member of our own State Department admitting that foreign approaches have been made to our Government, yet he refuses to disclose the slightest information as to the character of those approaches, even to the direct representatives of the people.

The bill would empower the President to enter into reciprocal agreements without advising with or consulting Congress either before or after the agreements are made. This vast authority would not only be given to the Executive but he would be permitted to exercise it secretly and as he alone saw fit. The constitutional power of the Senate to ratify treaties would then become a dead letter.

Thus the administration takes another step forward in bureaucratic control; authority is to be placed in the Executive, who in turn must delegate much of it to subordinates and bureaucrats who are not selected by nor responsive to the electorate.

The pending legislation is inconsistent with the President's own recovery program which is in itself nationalistic. This proposed measure in its purpose and scope would be another step toward internationalism, whereas the present recovery effort must be essentially nationalistic. Efforts have been made to raise the wages of labor and to shorten the working week. To do this, employers have had to face increased costs and the result has been a rise in prices to the consumer. It would seem that the logical concomitant of the recovery program would be an increase rather than a decrease in tariff rates for the adequate protection of the American wage earner.

We are living in a world replete with rabid nationalism. Quotas, embargoes, and trade limits are the order of the day. The more progressive countries of the world are becoming more self-contained. They are manufacturing more goods which they formerly had imported, and are producing agricultural commodities formerly brought in from other lands. How can we, with prudence and safety, embark on a policy which directly controverts our own recovery program and which is out of tune with the times?

The alleged purpose of the contemplated agreements is to increase our export trade. But in order to augment this trade, we would be compelled to make certain concessions—such concessions would be in the form of lower duties on now dutiable products. This would in effect, of course, be letting down the bars for foreign dumping. It naturally follows as an inescapable consequence that some of our industries would have to be sacrified.

But what industries are to be scrapped or guillotined for the sake of this burst of export trade? No answer has been made to this question, although it has repeatedly been propounded by objectors to the bill. Under the proposed measure an industry would not know its fate until the newspapers announced that a trade agreement had been secretly consummated. It would not know the provisions of any proposed agreement until the matter was signed, and then it might perchance be forced to dismantle its plants and discharge its employees.

Under this iniquitous proposal factories would be closed and farm lands in many sections laid waste by the dumping of foreign goods on our shores. Thus every American industry and great sections of our farm areas are subjected to the threat of being arbitrarily condemned to death without a hearing, without a trial, without recourse or appeal from the verdict of the executioner. Such practice would be un-American and opposed to the American tradition of fair play.

It is said by the President that "no sound and important American interest will be injuriously disturbed." But this assurance is not convincing. We cannot hope to make great gains in the export market unless some American industries and the American farmer are sacrificed. The bulk of our principal imports is now on the free list and hence not available for the purposes of tariff bargaining.

Accordingly it would seem to be better policy to use this free list as a lever to force or threaten duties in return for concessions from foreign governments rather than to reduce the duties which form a bulwark of protection to our people.

The internationalists forget that the greatest market in the world is our own American market. Real recovery lies in the path that will develop fully this market and put the millions of unemployed to work. From 90 to 95 percent of our total trade is in the domestic market—the rest is in the export field. The importance of the home market is such that we should not allow ourselves to be placed in the position of having the tail wag the dog. Let us face the facts. Our foreign trade will decrease in comparison as foreign countries become more and more self-contained through added development of their own manufactures and increased production of their own agricultural commodities. The fact is that the heyday of foreign trade is past—we must look to the American market and develop our domestic trade to the utmost.

One of the most pernicious effects which would undoubtedly follow passage of this bill is cancelation of the war debts. Of course, such a step is directly opposed to the sentiment and the wishes of the American people. It has been widely reported in the press, and not denied, that Europe expects reciprocal trade pacts to be the first step to reduction or cancelation of their obligations to the American people.

Europe demands two things in return for trade concessions—lowering of our protective barriers and cancelation or drastic reduction of the war debts. That the administration has given the debtor nations considerable encouragement in this direction is not seriously disputed.

It has been reported by the press throughout the country, and not denied, that Europe was given to understand that the President intended to ask for power to negotiate trade treaties in order that the final settlement of the war-debt problem would be taken out of the hands of Congress. The advocates of cancelation aver that no settlement can be made of the debt problem until we alter our trade and tariff policy—they say that the debt question will be settled when the Executive gets complete authority to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements. This bill provides such power; and if enacted, we might as well bid goodbye to the billions of dollars due the American taxpayers from Europe.

To summarize briefly, the pending bill should be defeated because:

It is one more step toward absolute dictatorship.

It is not consistent with the traditional and constitutional practices of representative government.

It contains a potential death threat to American industry and American agriculture and can only mean the inevitable lowering of the American wage scale and the American standard of living.

It is not consistent with our own recovery program or with the trend of world affairs.

It would mean drastic reduction and perhaps cancelation of the war debts.

It is our business to get out of the depression and back to prosperous times. Passage of this proposed measure would only add to our difficulties.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none.

The question is on the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Frazer. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The calendar is in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. The remainder of the nominations on that page should be confirmed; and on page 3, those in New York and North Dakota should be confirmed, and those in Oklahoma and Oregon should remain on the calendar. My reason for this request is that by mistake one of the Senators from each of the States where the nominations are held over was not consulted.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 1934

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, draw near to all who need wisdom and direction; throw Thy light upon all the scenes of our lives and give good cheer to any who may sit in darkness. Heavenly Father, Thou dost call us to a life of service without pride or fear, without self-will or murmuring, and it requires obedience to Thy holy will and law. Do Thou arm us with the might of conviction, with the sternness of principle, and with constancy of purpose. O help us to seek and to strive for the supreme gifts of life, namely, a peaceful conscience, a pure heart, and a clean character. Blessed Lord, we rejoice that behind Thee there is supernal glory and with Thee there is all the fullness of beauty, mercy, and love. O God, we wait; we pray in reverent humility as we approach the dark of Calvary's Cross. Oh, may we bow down and feel the sovereignty of the uttermost depths of divine love. At this altar of heaven's and earth's utmost sacrifice, every sin of human experience is condemned and every inspiration that saves flows from our Savior's breast. O Immortal Love: it tempers the fiery law, in it faults are forgiven, sorrows are borne together, and struggles are shared. Oh, let the whole earth move toward its majesty and power. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H.R. 6663) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes," returned by the President of the United States to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with his objections, and passed by the House on a reconsideration of the same, it was

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7599) to provide emergency aid for the repair or reconstruction of homes and other property damaged by earthquake, tidal wave, flood, tornado, or cyclone in 1933 and 1934.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7478) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle as a basic agricultural commodity, and for other purposes.

SUGAR CONTROL

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture, I ask unanimous consent that that committee may be allowed to sit during sessions of the House today and tomorrow and that it may file not later than midnight tomorrow a report on the bill H.R. 8861, to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman referring to the bill H.R. 8861, introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] on yesterday?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. And are we to understand that the Committee on Agriculture will conclude hearings on this important legislation in 2 days?

Mr. KLEBERG. The hearings have been concluded.

Mr. KNUTSON. Are not the sugar people to be given an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. KLEBERG. I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota that the hearings on the bill have been concluded; and my pending request is submitted by the unanimous direction of the entire committee, now in session.

Mr. KNUTSON. Over how long a time did the hearings extend?

Mr. KLEBERG. I cannot give the gentleman the exact number of days, but the hearings extended over the past 2 or 3 weeks.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Do I understand the gentleman from Minnesota, who has shown interest in the sugar-beet question, wants to prevent a committee of the House from considering this important question?

Mr. KNUTSON. I want to know whether or not this matter has had proper consideration in the committee; and I am asking for information.

Mr. KLEBERG. I assure the gentleman that it has.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to get the opinion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, is the bill under discussion H.R. 8861, the bill introduced yesterday afternoon by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

Mr. KLEBERG. While I cannot give the gentleman the exact number, that is the bill.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the committee has given this bill the proper amount of consideration?

Mr. KLEBERG. I may say that the committee has given it full and complete consideration for 2 or 3 weeks.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I read this bill this morning, and I shall be greatly surprised if the gentleman assures me now that every member of this committee has even read this bill.

Mr. KLEBERG. I may suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that this bill is the actual result of over 3 weeks' exhaustive study and hearings on this matter.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Do I understand the gentleman from Texas to say that the bill has the approval of the members of the House Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. KLEBERG. I am asking permission now for the committee to sit during the sessions of the House today and tomorrow in order that the committee may go over the bill again and see whether it should be changed or amended in any detail.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of the fact the committee is inclined to give this bill further consideration than it has already received, because it could not already have received much consideration inasmuch as it was introduced only yesterday afternoon, I do not intend to press my objection but would like some information.

Mr. KLEBERG. I may suggest to the gentleman that the bill to which he refers happens to be in accordance with the procedure of representative government, and the committee joined in ordering my request today by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Does the gentleman go so far as to assure the House that the provisions of this bill meet the approval of every member of the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. KLEBERG. I might suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that the unanimous consent I have sought is asked by direction of the committee and for the purpose of giving the committee time in which to go over this subject again, although it has already been gone over in great detail. In addition, may I say to the gentleman from Michigan, it is important to all interested in sugar production and the sugar industry of the United States to have this bill passed as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I do not agree with the gentleman. I still reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let us have a little more information.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think perhaps we can expedite business if the gentleman will be a little patient. The gentleman having said that the members of the Committee on Agriculture desire more time, not having given this particular bill the consideration they wish to give it, I shall not object.

Mr. KLEBERG. I have previously made the statement that the bill is the result of a most complete and exhaustive study. Hearings were held on this question and I am here representing the committee in making this request.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman has addressed himself to me.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. KNUTSON. The regular order would be a no quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. If the gentleman wants to oppose what the sugar-beet representatives want he may make a point of no quorum.

Mr. KNUTSON. I want to get some information. I have looked this bill over and it is a drastic piece of legislation. May I ask the gentleman from Texas if this bill was drafted by the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. KLEBERG. I repeat that this bill is the result of exhaustive hearings and the bill we have under consideration we are anxious to report not later than tomorrow night.

Mr. WOODRUFF. This bill was not drawn by the Committee on Agriculture, it was drafted in the Department of Agriculture and sent up here to be introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. KLEBERG. I can only speak for one member of the committee, so far as the gentleman's statement is concerned, but I represent the committee insofar as this unanimous-consent request is concerned.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman how long the hearings were?

Mr. KLEBERG. I could not give the gentleman the exact number of days, but at least 2 or 3 weeks.

Mr. McGUGIN. The committee has had it long enough to reach the determination that the ax is to be laid to the American sugar industry.

Mr. KLEBERG. The gentleman is, of course, entitled to his unsupported opinion. He will oppose relief, I am sure.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

NAZI PROPAGANDA INVESTIGATION

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report on House Resolution 199 (Rept. No. 1103) from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 199

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by H.Res. 198, incurred by the special committee appointed to investigate Nazi propaganda activities in the United States and related questions, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $25,000, including expenditures for the employment of experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts; and the head of each executive department is hereby requested to detail to said special committee such number of legal and expert assistants and investigators as said committee may from time to time deem necessary.

With the following amendments:

In line 5, strike out the figures "$25,000" and insert the figures "$10,000", and at the end of the resolution add the following: "that the official committee reporters shall be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this resolution is presented with the full approval of the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. KRAMER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And nothing is said about the number of investigators to be employed?

Mr. KRAMER. No.

Mr. SNELL. Of course the Committee on Accounts is justified in bringing this resolution in because the House itself authorized the investigation, so I do not see that there is anything else to be done about the matter.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendments and the resolution.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE SO-CALLED "SOLDIERS' BONUS"

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a radio address which I made over the radio last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by myself over the General Broadcasting System's network March 28, 1934, at 9:30 p.m., on the subject The so-called "Soldiers' Bonus":

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, March 12, 1934, the House of Representatives by a vote of 295 for, to 125 against, passed the bill H.R. 1, providing for the full and immediate payment in cash of the adjusted-service certificates. This bill is now pending in the United States Senate, and it is not known when that body will act upon it.

NOT A BONUS—A DEBT

This proposal is often referred to as the "bonus bill." An adjusted-service certificate does not represent a bonus; it represents a debt that has been acknowledged by Congress to a veteran of the World War for services rendered. Three million six hundred thousand World War veterans hold these certificates; the average value is $1,000. About 85 percent of the certificates have been pledged for loans; there is a remainder due at this time, after deducting prior loans and interest to October 1, 1931, of about $2,200,000,000.

The term "soldier bonus" is a misnomer; it is a soldier debt.

If you favor paying these certificates never use the word "bonus." You condemn the cause you advocate if you do. The words "adjusted-service certificate" should be used instead.

In order to persuade the Congress of the United States to enact a law providing for the full cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates the burden is upon us to show (1) that the face value of each certificate is really past due, although payable in 1945, and (2) that the Government can pay the debt at this time without detriment to the general welfare. We made that showing in the House of Representatives on March 12, last, when the bill received the approval of that body. We showed further that the payment of the debt at this time would benefit all the people of the Nation and promote the general welfare.

CERTIFICATES DUE OCTOBER 1, 1931

When the war was over bills were introduced in Congress providing for the adjustment of the pay of those who were in the military service. The private soldier drew $30 a month during his service. From this pay deductions of from $10 to $20 a month were often made for his dependents, $6.60 a month was deducted for a life-insurance premium; he also paid for altering and mending his clothing and shoes, as well as other incidental expenses. After thorough and deliberate consideration Congress declared that the lowest paid civilian laborer during the war received between $1 and $1.25 more per day for services than the veteran received. Congress, on three different occasions passed bills confessing a debt to the veterans for adjusted pay. The amount agreed upon was $1 additional for each day one served in the United States and $1.25 a day additional for each day one served overseas. The last bill which passed Congress became a law, but instead of making the payment in cash an adjusted-service certificate, or an I O U, marked "negotiable", payable in 20 years, was given to the veterans; the ones who were entitled to receive $50 or less were paid in cash. In this bill we are not asking for the 25-percent increase for waiting, which Congress said was reasonable. That part is eliminated. If a veteran is given the $1 and $1.25 a day as of the time the services were rendered, with a reasonable rate of interest from that time, he was entitled to an amount equal to the face or maturity value of his adjusted-service certificate October 1, 1931. Therefore the certificates were really due October 1, 1931, although made payable in 1945.

GOVERNMENT'S MONEY PLANT

We have in Washington, D.C., a modern, up-to-date manufacturing plant employing 4,500 people. It is the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Each day the Bureau of Engraving and Printing turns out new bills—paper money, the same kind of money you are using. Eighty percent of all the money is paper money. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing turns out each year between three and five billion dollars of new crisp greenback money.

It is true that a large amount of this money is to replace old worn-out bills, but a substantial part of it is new additional money that is being printed for the national banks and Federal Reserve banks when they deposit Government bonds with which to get that money.

I wish somebody would explain to me how it is safe and sound, and you are not jeopardizing the gold standard or gold-reserve standard or the sound-money system for the banks to take Government bonds, deposit them with the Secretary of the Treasury, and get money in return for them, and yet it would be unsound and unsafe for the veterans holding Government obligations to do the same thing.

SAME KIND OF MONEY NOW IN CIRCULATION

This bill H.R. 1 provides that United States notes shall be issued to pay these certificates. That is the same kind of money that is in circulation today. It will be just exactly like the money you use every day. It will be backed in identically the same manner as the present United States notes. The Gold Standard Act of 1900 will apply to this money. This means that every dollar of the money that is issued will be backed by all the gold in the general fund of the United States Treasury, and we have in the general fund of the Treasury today $3,126,000,000. You will recall that a while back, in connection with revaluation, as one witness expressed it, the Government reached out into thin air and drew down almost $3,000,000,000 in free gold. This money is in the Treasury of the United States, unallocated, unencumbered, and unobligated. You can lay $2,000,000,000 aside for the stabilization fund and still have enough remaining to back this money with a 40-percent gold reserve and still have plenty of gold left.

So, having the gold to back the money to pay, and the debt can be paid without a bond issue, without increasing the taxes, without incurring any other obligation in any fashion, do not you think that we are fortunate that we can put the money into circulation in this manner where it can benefit everybody?

HOW DOES MONEY GET INTO CIRCULATION?

The Government, under existing law, sells a bank a thousand-dollar bond drawing 3⅜-percent interest, or $33.75 interest for a year. The bank immediately redeposits the bond with the same United States Treasury that sold it to the bank, and receives in return therefor $1,000 in new money. Fifty dollars of the money is left on deposit with the Treasury. The bank gets the use of the money and also gets interest on the bonds deposited. There is a small charge of one half of 1 percent against the bank for expenses in connection with the issuance and reissuance of the money. Therefore, banks can take Government obligations due in 1945 and receive new money in return for them, and at the same time get interest on the obligations. Why is it not fair to let the veteran take his obligation, made payable in 1945, and receive money in a similar manner? There is no difference in the two obligations. They are both made payable in 1945; they are both backed by the credit of this Nation; they are both obligations of this Nation. Money purchased one, services purchased the other. If it is fair for the bank, it is fair for the veterans.

IF THIS BILL IS ENACTED

First. It will save the Government more than a billion dollars, or $112,000,000 a year for 12 years. It will not cost the taxpayers one cent, but will save them over a billion dollars.

Second. It will save the Government more than $10,000,000 in administration expenses of the Adjusted Compensation Act between now and 1945.

Third. It will pay a debt heretofore confessed by the Government to the veterans for services rendered.

Fourth. It will be granting to the veterans the right to deposit a Government obligation and receive in return therefor new currency, the same right that is now enjoyed by Federal Reserve banks and all national banks.

Fifth. It will prevent the veterans from losing a valuable equity by releasing them from the payment of compound interest on their loans. Veterans who have borrowed 50 percent under the present law will have very little remaining in 1945. It is not right for the Government and the banks to consume these valuable equities by requiring the veterans to pay compound interest on their own money.

Sixth. It will require no bond issue, no increase in taxes, no additional interest payment by the Government. The debt must be paid some time. Everybody will be helped if it is paid now.

Seventh. The Treasury holds in the general fund $3,126,000,000 in gold. It is unencumbered. This does not include the gold owned by the Federal Reserve banks. This is sufficient gold to issue $8,000,000,000 in new currency without reducing the gold reserve less than 40 percent. No nation on earth has ever claimed that more than a 40-percent gold reserve as a reserve for issuing money is required.

Purchasing power must be placed in the hands of the masses. In this way it can be distributed quickly without the possibility of graft or favoritism. It is the best plan that has been proposed to be used as a vehicle to convey additional money into the hands of those who will buy goods. It will start the country back on the road to recovery.

EVERYBODY BENEFITED

The money will go into every nook and corner of the Nation. It will increase the per capita circulation of money about $18. Every community will get a share. It will go to every class, race, and creed; every occupation, avocation, and trade will be benefited; it will be deposited in the banks, which will increase the reserves of the banks and make credit easier to obtain. This money will be spent, thereby causing an expansion of consumption; it will not be hoarded but will immediately go into the channels of trade and production. It will benefit the general welfare as well as the veterans. It will provide buying power for the people.

Do not overlook these facts:

First. The question of buying power is the greatest question confronting us.

Second. Our problem is not so much overproduction as it is underconsumption. If the people of America and the world had the buying power to purchase what they actually need of the comforts and necessities of life it is very doubtful that we would have overproduction of any commodity.

Third. Therefore any proposal that will distribute buying power should receive serious consideration.

Fourth. Ex-United States Senator Robert L. Owen of Oklahoma, a former national banker and framer of the Federal Reserve Act, recently pointed out in a letter to Senator FLETCHER, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in the Senate, that there has been a shrinkage and contraction of the currency of $1,600,000,000 during the past 12 months; there has been a contraction of commercial checking deposits of $20,000,000,000 since the depression begun; that the effect of this contraction has been to destroy the value of property in terms of money and to give money a very extraordinary value in terms of property; that banks, under these conditions, are apparently unable or unwilling to expand these deposits by loans and to restore the volume of credit which we previously had; that the Government alone can expand the currency money to replace the check money contracted. I hope you read Senator Owen's statement in full. It appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 22, at page 5090.

THE REAL REASON FOR OPPOSITION

Let me tell you the real reason the payment of these certificates in new money is opposed. The ones who oppose it will tell you that $2,200,000,000 is not too much money to put into circulation at this time; they will also tell you that the method of payment is sound and is not in violation of governmental policies, but they tell you that if Congress ever commences to issue money in this way, it will probably continue to issue money instead of tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds—that it would be a bad precedent—that bonds instead of money should be issued so that the interest burden will act as a check on the issuance of Government obligations. Further, that banks, insurance companies, and other concerns need interest-bearing, tax-exempt Government obligations to keep their surplus funds invested in. This argument is as imbecilic as our present policy of issuing and distributing money is idiotic.

ACTUAL MONEY INSTEAD OF BONDS

One of these days the American people will consider the question of Government bonds and Government currency at the same time. When they do, as Thomas A. Edison said, there will be no more tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds issued by the Government. Money will be issued instead. Any government that can issue a dollar bond, interest bearing, that is good, can issue a dollar bill that is not interest bearing that is good.

The banks of the Nation are loaded to the brim with Government bonds. What incentive have they to loan money to industry when the Government is keeping them up? If they need more money to buy more Government bonds they can deposit a part of the Government bonds on hand and get it.

DIEHARD REACTIONARIES

I know the argument made by the diehard reactionaries against a proposal to issue currency instead of bonds. They will say that the issuance of so much money will cause wild inflation. We can control that feature. Under the present system banks can issue 10 credit dollars to every one actual dollar in its possession. As we increase the money supply we can change the banking requirements so that they cannot issue so many credit dollars to every dollar. If we were to gradually pay off the national debt with new money we could change the banking laws so that the banks could not issue more than two credit dollars to every one dollar and thus avoid undue inflation. These same reactionaries will tell you that it is perfectly safe and sound for them to issue credit dollars to the same amount. There is a considerable difference to the people in credit money, bankers' money, and money issued by the Government. Someone is paying interest on the bankers' money or credit every day it is outstanding; no one is paying interest on money issued directly by the Government while it is outstanding. In 1932 our people's interest burden was 10 billion dollars out of a national income of only 40 billions.

IDIOTIC MONEY SYSTEM

Most of the currency in actual use and circulation today is Federal Reserve notes. They are issued to the 12 Federal Reserve banks by the Government. I have in my possession a Federal Reserve note issued to the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, Va. It is for $10; it was made at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing here in Washington; it looks like what is known as a "greenback." Did this bank pay the Government anything for this note? Yes; about 26 cents a thousand dollars worth, the cost of printing. It also deposited some of the bank depositors' gold and eligible paper as security. Does this bank agree to redeem this note? No; the Government printed on it this language, "The United States of America will pay to the bearer on demand $10." Therefore the Government agrees to redeem it; it represents a blanket mortgage on all the property of all the people of this Nation, and further it represents a first mortgage on the incomes of all the people. Does the Government charge this bank anything for the use of this great privilege? Not a penny; section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act states that the bank shall pay an interest charge—seems to be mandatory—but the Federal Reserve Board set the zero rate of interest which is the prevailing rate at this time. These institutions are also exempt from all taxes except on their real estate. Who owns Federal Reserve banks that have this great privilege? The member banks own them; not a penny of stock is owned by the Government or the people.

Every dollar of money acquired in this way may be used by these banks as a reserve for the issuance of 10 additional credit dollars to the people who pay interest on it every day it is outstanding. The Federal Reserve bank of New York has purchased $796,755,000 of Government interest-bearing tax-exempt securities. It paid Government credit for these securities. The Government continues to pay interest to this bank on these securities although they have been purchased with Government credit. If you were to give someone the money to pay off the mortgage on your home would you continue to pay interest on the mortgage after your agent had fully paid the amount due the holder? That is what the Government is doing. All 12 of the Federal Reserve banks hold $2,431,895,000 of Government securities purchased in a similar manner.

The Constitution of the United States says that Congress shall coin money and regulate its value. This great privilege has been farmed out to a few large bankers. We want Congress to regain and exercise this power. The issuance of the $2,200,000,000 to veterans in payment of this debt will be a long step in that direction.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 8687, with Mr. PARSONS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, tomorrow happens to be Good Friday, and I suppose it would be apropos to preface what I have to say with an allusion to the story of the Good Samaritan. You will remember the gentleman who went down the road from Jerusalem to Jericho. The priest passed him on one side and the Levite on the other. Then came the Good Samaritan, and if I remember my scriptural language correctly, it says, "He came where he was". There were no brass bands. There was no heralding. He just came where he was. I want to approach my consideration of this matter in the same fashion by coming right where it is.

After all, this is nothing more than an effort to find an outlet for our surplus agricultural commodities. I live right in the heart of the Corn Belt, where we market corn by the bushel and by the gallon, and therefore I am vitally interested. I am also interested in the industries in my district. May I point out what I deem to be some of the weaknesses of this bill which seeks to confer so much power upon the Chief Executive, with the possibility of prejudicing such industries in my district as might be deemed inefficient. This may seem like a sectional appeal, and yet I believe that both industry and agriculture in all other districts in the Nation are affected in the same manner and in the same proportion as in the Sixteenth District of Illinois.

First, let me reaffirm my interest in agriculture and say that prosperity begins with the soil. I yield to no man in my desire to increase farm prices and bring prosperity to the land.

This bill seeks to bring about higher prices by finding a foreign demand or outlet for surplus agricultural products. Create a demand which approximates supply and prices will rise. That is elemental.

So academically stated, the matter is simple enough. However, in practice it is not so simple. There are obstacles. First, I believe the potentialities of foreign outlets are highly overrated. Look at the report released on Monday of this week by the A.A.A. a formidable 400-page report, and note on page 46, how wheat production since 1895 has increased 80 percent. This does not include China or Russia. Population has not kept pace with production of foodstuffs. Note that our exports have decreased in direct proportion to the increase of production in Europe and other continents. Note the comment that other nations have and still are expanding production to acquire a condition of self-sufficiency. Precisely what hope have we of finding much of an outlet under such conditions?

On page 99, note that German hog production doubled since 1921 and in 1934 was the highest on record. Note also that Denmark increased hog production to nearly 5 times the post-war level. This dissipates all mystery as to what happened to our export trade in lard and pork. What advantageous bargains can we drive under such conditions with other countries for agricultural surpluses. None that I can envision. But we can open to them the greatest free market in the world and take a chance on imperiling our own living standards.

Let us assume that there are some substantial outlets. Then what? Manifestly other nations will ask us to accept manufactured goods in return. Mr. Wallace, who bulks large in administration matters and for whom I cherish nothing but respect, states the case succinctly enough. In his brochure on "America Must Choose" he states that his leanings are toward internationalism, that international planning calls for adjustments in factories, and that some factories must be retired. Which shall be retired? He says those that are least efficient. Who is to determine? Obviously, the President by the power conferred in this bill will determine. I do not say he would consciously prejudice or sacrifice any industry but think of the uncertainty created by conferring such power.

In my district is a wire mill which suffers from competition by Belgium wire manufacturers. In fact, low wage scales and inadequate duties make it possible for Belgium wire producers to pay the duty, sell through mail order outlets and considerably undersell the factory in my district.

In that same district is a corn products plant which, as a reward for complying with the N.R.A., and doing its utmost to create a market for American corn, must suffer from competition with millions of pounds of imports of sago, arrowroot, cassava, and tapioca starch which can be so cheaply raised and processed in Java and Santo Domingo. Are they to be retired?

Distillers who seek to aid the farmer by processing corn into spirits are at the mercy of heavy imports of blackstrap molasses and find it difficult to compete in price. Are they to be placed on the block?

A pottery in my district suffers from Japanese competition despite the fact that they comply with the N.R.A. and seek to create more employment in their plant. I might interpose at this point that General Johnson, the sergeant of recovery, indicated in the pottery code, when transmitting it to the President, that pottery was not a major industry because it did not employ over 50,000 persons. One might cherish some misgivings about the entire pottery industry in view of that statement. Are they to be harmed or aided by higher tariffs? Particularly, when pottery imports from Japan increased by 69 percent in 1933 over 1932.

Just how will agriculture be benefitted by taking away one domestic customer in the person of an American worker and substituting a foreign customer. It would be an intriguing performance but not very salutary, or helpful. Unless they are given proper protection, the time will come when such industries can no longer exist against cheap foreign competition and those now gainfully employed will cease to be purchasing consumers of farm products in the same proportion as they now are.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. For a brief question; yes.

Mr. MAY. Then, I take it, the gentleman is in favor of giving the President the power to exclude these products by raising the tariff on them under the power conferred in this bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; if it were so used but the traditional policy of the party is against such use. There will be no danger of raising rates. The danger lies in lowering rates. It will be on the side of lowering rates to find benefits to agriculture, which I favor, but which I am convinced cannot be found.

I am as much if not more interested in the farmer than in industry because of the emergency condition of the farmer and because of the need of rebuilding his purchase power. We have heard so much speculation as to what is wrong. Some say overproduction. Others say underconsumption. I incline to the latter view. I am like the little colored boy who sat among a pile of watermelons, with distended stomach, unable to eat any more. Some kindly gentleman came along and asked, "What's the matter, too much melon?" The little boy said, "Nope, too little nigger." [Laughter.]

That is it. Too little consuming capacity. What has happened to it during these last 20 years? For one thing a decrease in the per capita consumption of wheat amounting to 1 bushel per person or around 120,000,000 bushels per year. A decrease in the per capita consumption of meat of about 13 pounds per person per year. That is another outlet for grain taken away. A slowing up of population increase. In 1920 the excess of births over deaths per 1,000 was 10.6; in 1931 it was but 6.9. There has been greater efficiency in the feeding of livestock so that it requires less feed to achieve the same market weight as in previous years. Finally, there is the frightful displacement of horses and mules by trucks, tractors, and cars so that 35,000,000 acres with a production potentiality of 875,000,000 bushels of grain, which formerly raised fuel for farm and draft animals, now goes into surplus. Supply has increased, demand has decreased, and prices have fallen. It is not a mystery.

Foreign trade can help us but very little, and for that little we are willing, if we pass this bill, to invite them to send manufactured goods into our market and further aggravate conditions. It will retard instead of aid recovery.

Now it is only fair to suggest that I should offer some alternative unless I believe in the philosophy of defeatism and resignation to the inevitable. That is a fair and proper suggestion. Here is my suggestion:

First, stop imports of such products as are in competition with the farmer. Imports of corn are practically nil. But that is not the difficulty. The trouble lies in imports of starch, which is a derivative of corn. As much as 180,000,000 pounds per year has been imported, equal to 9,000,000 bushels of corn. Think of it, and it comes in duty free. Now this bill does not permit the transfer of free items to the dutiable list or of dutiable items to the free list. Therefore the farmer gets no benefit so far as starch importations are concerned.

Next, embargo all blackstrap molasses except such quantity as is necessary to supply manufacturers for mixing with feeds. As much as 300,000,000 gallons have been imported in a single year for conversion into alcohol, both for commercial and beverage purposes, thereby replacing corn. Assuming that feed manufacturers require 100,000,000 gallons, the other 200,000,000 gallons at the rate of about 6 gallons being equivalent to a bushel of corn would displace 33,000,000 bushels of corn. Think of that. Talk about foreign markets! Let us first save our own market. In 1932, out of 146,000,000 gallons of alcohol produced in this country, 124,000,000 was produced from blackstrap molasses. It is time that kind of hoodwinking of the American farmer was stopped.

Finally, let us convert corn and other grains into anhydrous alcohol and compel its use in gasoline as motor fuel. A 5- or 10-percent mixture would be sufficient to take care of all the agricultural surplus of this Nation and constitute a steady market for years to come. It is time we were recognizing the fact that agriculture is a chemical industry. Instead of telling the farmer what he cannot raise, let us be a bit more positive and tell him what he may raise. If we must have professors in Government, let us have scientific professors, like the chemical professors who gave this country rayon, soap, paint, lacquer, films, artificial ice, alkalies, corn products, explosives, perfumes, dyes, and what not. Let us swap chemical test tubes and formulas for textbook theories and on the fallow lands which result from crop reduction show farmers how to raise long-leaf pine for pulp purposes, tung trees for oil, china grass for long fiber, artichokes for sugar, and a lot of other things. Such a program could be evolved in short order and would be durable and permanent.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield the gentleman 1 minute.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am sorry, but 1 minute does not permit of anything in the nature of an exhaustive discussion of this matter; so, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD and yield back the 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to clear up any misunderstanding that may have resulted from the speech delivered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. IMHOFF] a few days ago.

The gentleman represents the district in which is located the headquarters of the pottery manufacturers of this country. The gentleman in his speech indicated clearly that he expected to support this bill and gave as his reason the fact he thought it would be for the best interests of the pottery industry that he vote accordingly.

As I stated in my speech a few days ago, the pottery industry has its headquarters in that district. It is the largest pottery district in the United States. Ninety percent of the pottery manufactured in the United States comes from the association that has its headquarters in that district.

I have made an investigation to find out how this industry stands on the question. I have in my hands a telegram which I propose to read. It is addressed to me and comes from the president of this great association, and here is what he states:

SEBRING, OHIO, March 28, 1934.

Hon. THOMAS A. JENKINS,
Member of Congress:

The membership of the United States Potters' Association, which comprises about 90 percent of all the active potteries in the United States, is opposed to the new tariff bill for the reason that it believes there is great danger in it to our industry. The pottery industry as a whole is in deplorable condition due to inadequate protection on imports from Japan and other countries having the benefit of Government subsidies and also operating with pauperized labor. About 7,500 pottery workmen are without employment. This represents about 35 percent of total number employed. If reasonable import quotas are soon established, this unemployment situation should soon be cured, and a great number of pottery workers taken off the relief and C.W.A. work. We respectfully beseech you to work against the enactment of this bill.

C. L. SEBRING,
Vice Chairman Executive Committee United States Potters' Association and President Sebring Pottery Co.
F. A. SEBRING,
President Limoge China Co.

I also have a telegram signed by James M. Duffy, president of the National Brotherhood of Operative Potters. This is an organization affiliated, I presume, with the American Federation of Labor; in other words, it is an organization of the pottery workers of that district and the telegram states:

EAST LIVERPOOL, OHIO, March 29, 1934.

CONGRESSMAN THOMAS JENKINS,
House Office Building:

President Roosevelt's plan for authority to negotiate reciprocal-trade agreements for foreign nations in my judgment would not be in the interest of American pottery workers. Please accept my thanks for your efforts in behalf of justice to the people whom I represent.

JAMES M. DUFFY,
President The National Brotherhood of Operative Potters.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, these telegrams are a sufficient proof to show exactly how the pottery industry, both as to the owners and as to the workers, stands on the proposed tariff bill. There need be no further discussion with reference to how the pottery industry in Ohio and in the United States stands on this unreasonable and unnecessary and un-American bill.

In the remainder of my remarks I should like to give you some important facts which I received this morning. The great trouble now with the pottery industry is importation of cheap pottery from Japan.

In last January, all the countries of the world sent into this country 1,209,152 dozen of pottery. Pottery is reckoned by the dozen and not in dollars. Out of that 1,209,152 dozen Japan sent 1,093,555 dozen.

In the last month, February 1934, the world sent into this country 955,924 dozen, and out of that Japan sent 810,422 dozen. I want to direct your attention to two of the methods by which goods enter into the commerce of this country: One is known as a "consumption entry" and the other known as a "warehouse entry." The consumption entry is used when the duty is paid at once, possession taken of the goods, and the goods enter into the markets of trade. The warehouse entry is used when the importer does not wish for any reason to pay the duty at that time, so the goods go into a Government bonded warehouse to be held there subject to the duty's being paid and the importer's taking possession of the goods. As coming events cast their shadows before them, it seems a very significant fact that during the months of January and February of this year there were 617,225 dozen, or 7,406,700 pieces of competitive ware from Japan placed in the warehouses. If this is continued month by month, you can readily appreciate the immense stock on hand there will be from which to fill current and future orders, thus offsetting for many months to come any remedial relief the pottery manufacturers of the United States might get.

The pottery industry of Japan is subsidized. It uses all the pauper labor it can procure. The Japanese Government furnishes the pauper labor, with the result that the labor employed in the industry in that country, as compared with the labor in this country, is like comparing $1 to $1,000. Here in the United States 60 percent of the cost of pottery is represented by labor. In the year 1929 labor drew $20,100,000 from the pottery industry. In 1933, owing to the influx of this foreign pottery unrestricted, the industry is disorganized and discouraged. [Applause.]

As I have previously indicated, the wages of the American potter are some 1,000 percent higher than the wages of the Japanese potter. The Japanese manufacturer profits by his pauper labor, by the 40-percent depreciation of the yen, by the subsidy received from both the Imperial Government of Japan, and from the prefecture in which the manufacturer is located. To compete against such a situation it is certainly obvious that American labor—the highest paid in the world, enjoying the highest living standards in the world—must inevitably gravitate toward the impossible coolie standard of living. No tariff on Japanese ware can reconcile these conditions. The only effect of a higher tariff would be to exclude completely the products of England, France, Germany, and so forth, and make a gift of all the American market to Japan. Only a quota, a limitation of the imports of this ware from Japan not to exceed that of any other country of the world, or an absolute embargo would give the proper relief. The pottery industry must have relief if it is to endure and if the thousands of idle men are to find work. It is unthinkable that this administration, in its efforts to rehabilitate industries and put men to work, acquiesces in the market of this important industry to be controlled by fully 40 percent by the foreigner, and about 90 percent of that by the products of pauper Japanese labor.

I believe comment on some remarks made by the able Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in his discussion of this bill, as reported on page 5259 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 23, is pertinent. Mr. DOUGHTON stated as justification for this bill:

> Numerous acts delegating such powers have been enacted, and, as a matter of fact, sections 337 and 338 of the present Hawley-Smoot-Grundy Tariff Act contains provisions delegating powers to the President equally as broad, if not more so, than those proposed by this bill.

That is far from the facts. There is no analogy that can be drawn. Section 337 is a reprisal section against unfair practices in import trade—the unfair acts in the importation of articles into the United States, the effect or tendency of which is to destroy or substantially injure an industry. Condition precedent to action by the President is the investigation and recommendation of the fact-finding body created by Congress—the United States Tariff Commission. The President does not act of his own initiative and without obtaining the facts adduced before this Commission by open hearings of the interested parties. Entirely different from the secret manipulations permitted by this bill.

Section 338 is for the protection of our commerce against the discriminations of foreign countries and whenever the President finds that any foreign country imposes any unequal imposition or discrimination he is authorized to take the necessary prescribed steps in retaliation. Action under this statute is also predicated upon the investigations and reports of the Tariff Commission. So you see, gentlemen, how fallacious is the chairman's statement.

However, to follow Mr. DOUGHTON's argument to a logical sequence, if the President has the power "equally as broad, if not more so, than those proposed in this bill"—why the bill? You cannot paint the lily. You cannot emphasize the powers he claims the President already possesses by a repetition, of legislation conferring that power. No, my friends; the intent and purpose of this bill is away beyond that.

I quote again from Mr. DOUGHTON's testimony on the same page stating:

> During the hearings we were told that many times in recent months cargoes of American products at sea were recalled because of some new overnight restriction. That shows how other nations change their laws to the detriment of the United States.

The gentleman made a very unhappy reference there. He puts forward as one of the controlling reasons why the President should be given this vast power in this quoted reference. As a matter of fact, if in any of these alleged instances an overt act has been committed; if there has been any discrimination against the commerce of the United States; if there has been any unfair trade practice, sections 337 and 338 of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act clothes the President with full and ample powers to act in the premises. If the President has not acted to correct these conditions complained of when he already has full congressional authority to act, why may it be assumed that under some other bill conveying the same authority he will be better able to act? It is a ridiculous inference.

The truth of the matter, gentlemen, is that the foreign countries are nationalistic and protect their industries to the fullest against the foreign competition. In order to give this full measure of protection they have established quotas. Twenty-two European countries adopted the volume or quantitative limitation of imports through quota or license system, which was done as a means of putting their unemployed to work, to rehabilitate and develop their industries. So, after a given quantity of merchandise in a given period of time enters the country, the doors are closed and no more can come in until the new quota goes into effect. No such care and attention is paid to the American industries in protecting their products and in keeping their labor supplied with work. On the contrary, our markets are thrown wide open to the dumping of foreign-made goods while our own workmen walk the streets and while we appropriate and expend hundreds of millions of dollars to create artificial employment so that some of the thousands of idle can be fed. In the face of all this, in face of our factories either closed or working half time, this bill seeks to increase this dumping and actually bankrupt industries for some illusory benefit that may be derived in increasing our 5- or 6-percent export trade at the sacrifice of our 92- or 95-percent production and consumption.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to have printed in the RECORD the following statistics:

	1929		1931		1932		1933
	Dozens	Value	Dozens	Value	Dozens	Value	Dozens	Value
Czechoslovakia	773,765	$908,047	264,857	$274,210	218,460	$220,458	130,615	$156,083
France	423,293	863,662	76,518	210,652	43,411	104,413	28,841	72,414
Germany	3,356,500	3,987,348	1,135,991	1,409,322	719,450	867,399	633,997	879,353
United Kingdom	1,935,806	3,786,939	959,807	1,545,317	804,119	844,332	813,779	982,463
Japan	7,231,829	4,523,390	4,612,928	1,900,430	4,935,226	1,145,109	7,138,571	1,904,919
All other countries	940,759	954,448	218,243	287,560	145,386	172,362	129,426	158,758

NOTE.—While the imports from Japan were approximately the same for 1929 and 1933, the value of the 1933 imports was but 45 percent of the 1929 values, due to depreciation of the yen.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I take this opportunity of saying a few words with reference to what I read in the RECORD this morning from the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK] in his speech on yesterday.

The gentleman from California read into the RECORD and commented on a telegram he received from the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce in support of this bill, and from the gentleman's remarks the deduction could be fairly drawn that the agricultural interests of the State of California were in favor of the enactment of this legislation.

I do not believe that is a correct deduction in any sense of the word. The facts are—and I know this, because I have received hundreds of letters and telegrams from different sections of California—urging the defeat of this legislation. Many of these letters and telegrams were from agricultural interests.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. My colleague will recollect that it was testified by one of the witnesses before the Ways and Means Committee that one of the things that could be done would be to increase the importation of wines from France. That would be at the expense of California, would it not?

Mr. EVANS. It would be the ruination of the wine-producing interests if the restrictions on the importation of wines were permanently or even temporarily lifted. The grape growers of California are having a life-and-death struggle to rehabilitate themselves, so that they can compete with foreign competition with the protection they now have.

Mr. KNUTSON. If your people in California would be willing to live on the same level that they do in France, where they keep cattle in the house and wear wooden shoes, I think they could compete all right.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; I yield to my good friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman think there is any likelihood of any such situation arising as that expressed by the gentleman from Minnesota under any President of the United States, whether Democrat or Republican, if such power were vested in the President?

Mr. EVANS. I believe the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] might be justified in making at least some of these deductions from what we hear threatened in connection with this legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman believe that the exercise of power would be to the destruction of Californian products? Has the gentleman any fear of the exercise of any such power, and to such an extent?

Mr. EVANS. I am not prepared to say that I have a fear to that extent, but I am prepared to say that I have a very deep and grave fear that California's agricultural interests, wine producers and otherwise, will be seriously and dangerously affected by this legislation.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. As a matter of fact, the newspapers have carried a story within the last few weeks of this administration's giving to the country what might be considered as a forerunner of what is to come, when it entered into an agreement with France and lifted the embargo against the importation of wines and liquors from that country in the amount of $10,000,000, and got as a return the privilege of importing into France $1,000,000 worth of apples and pears, giving France the benefit of a trade agreement at 10 to 1.

Mr. EVANS. Exactly. Then when our apples reached the docks in France, we found that France had put an excise tax on American apples which made them unmarketable in that country.

Mr. Chairman, I must finish now what I rose to say. I do not intend to gainsay the correctness of the telegram read by the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK] from the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce. The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce is reputed to be, and I am sure is, largely made up of men and women who are interested in foreign trade, and that organization is not at all representative of the agricultural interests of California. The president of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, and the man who sent the message to the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK], is Mr. J. W. Mailliard, Jr., a member of the firm of Mailliard, Schmiedell & Co., importers and exporters of San Francisco. Of course, those who are engaged in foreign trade are for the bill. They are against tariffs as a rule. The San Francisco Chamber is dominated by Mr. Mailliard, its president, and Mr. Mailliard is in the foreign-trade business. Those who oppose this bill are endeavoring to protect American trade and American producers. We are more interested in looking after this part of the business, which is 95 percent of the whole, than we are in fostering the 5 percent which goes abroad, and in which the president of the San Francisco Chamber is interested.

There is an organization in California which is quite representative of the entire agricultural interests of the State of California and the industrial interests of the State of California, and all other business and interests of the State, and that is the California State Chamber of Commerce. It is made up of representatives of all the chambers of commerce of the State, including the Chamber of Commerce of the City of San Francisco and the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Los Angeles, and hundreds of other chambers of commerce in the State; and that organization on March 23, 1934, sent the following telegram to me and to other Members of this body:

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., March 23, 1934.

Hon. W. E. EVANS,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

The California State Chamber of Commerce is of the opinion that flexible provisions of Tariff Act of 1930 provide Tariff Commission and President with all necessary means of changing tariff schedules to meet changing conditions. Congressional H.R. 8430 proposes to give President power to change tariff schedules 50 percent by reciprocity treaties with other nations and without hearings. Such power would affect numerous tariff schedules vital to California. California State Chamber is opposed to vesting such broad power in any individual and believes it would result in uncertainty that would be extremely detrimental and disturbing to California agriculture. No changes should be made in tariff schedules without thorough investigation by Tariff Commission with adequate hearings. Proposed legislation would furnish opportunity for political pressure to be exerted in such way as to favor large industries of wide political influence at expense of small industries of less political influence. California State Chamber urges that H.R. 8430 be not passed, in view of fact that Tariff Commission and President already have power for adjustments with provision for full hearing by all interested parties.

NORMAN H. SLOANE,
General Manager California State Chamber of Commerce.

There is the real reaction of the industrial and agricultural interests of the State of California with reference to this legislation. In this connection I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter received by me from the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, of March 24, in opposition to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to follows:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., March 24, 1934.

Hon. W. E. EVANS,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN EVANS:

Subject: H.R. 8430

With the help of several of our committees, we have been giving very careful study to tariff bill H.R. 8430.

Fundamentally, and regardless of the sincerity of purpose of the Chief Executive, we believe that all reciprocal trade arrangements should be subject to open and full public hearings before their consummation is approved.

Undoubtedly, reciprocal trade contracts with foreign countries can only be successfully negotiated if it means that those countries are going to be enabled to find a larger market for their products within the United States in return for a larger market for our products or some other valuable consideration associated with our general trade.

It would seem, therefore, wise and desirable that the Chief Executive should be safeguarded in connection with these matters by the proviso that a proper public hearing should be held; this would bring out any opposition which might exist to the particular arrangement, but at the same time, such opposition would have to be very sincere and worthwhile if it could sustain its position at a public hearing in face of the Government evidence that no real harm would result to any particular group through such a proposed reciprocal treaty.

Certain it is that in the formation of a national tariff policy and incidental legislation, the national code authorities under the N.R.A. and A.A.A. should be directly consulted. These authorities would be in position to provide the administration with much valuable information as to the relative position of various industrial and producing groups here, under such reciprocal treaties.

It seems to be the consensus of opinion all along the line in all groups, agricultural and otherwise, that without full public hearings it would be difficult for the Government to obtain sufficient information on which to base intelligent action for the benefit of the country as a whole.

As further interesting data bearing on this whole subject, we are sending you a memorandum prepared by Mr. Matson, manager of our Foreign Commerce and Shipping Department, dealing with the general question of tariffs, and would call your particular attention to his comments, starting with paragraph 6 on the matter of reciprocal trade arrangements.

We earnestly hope that this important matter will receive careful consideration as to providing proper safeguards in the interest of the country as a whole.

Very truly yours,

LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
A. G. ARNOLL, Secretary and General Manager.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN] in his speech yesterday criticized the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill. He said California products had not been protected. He surely has not examined the rate schedules in that bill. Nearly every rate was increased on California's agricultural products, and California agriculture is now calling for still higher rates. He complains about the failure of a tariff on oil. It was not the fault of the California delegation that a tariff was not placed on oil. We did all we could for it, but we could not get everything we wanted. We certainly cannot rely on the Democrats to give us a tariff on oil. We will never get additional tariffs by wrecking what tariff structures we now have.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has just told me that I am to have 3 minutes to speak. On October 24, 1932, I happened to go to the White House to pay my respects to President Hoover. He greeted me by saying, "Congressman, will you do me a favor?" I have not had many Presidents ask me to do them a favor, and I said right away that I should be glad to. He then said, "Will you answer a telegram just sent me by 180 college professors and economists, and ask them to specify what rates in the tariff bill they consider to be too high?"

I sent the following telegram at the expense of the Republican National Committee—not my own, because it cost two or three hundred dollars—to all the college professors who signed the round-robin petition to President Hoover, calling upon him to "remove world barriers raised by the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act."

WASHINGTON, D.C., October 24, 1932.

You recently petitioned President Hoover asking elimination of "inequalities" 1930 Tariff Act. To determine those inequalities you must have made a painstaking study of all tariff rates and industries affected by them. Consequently, you must be in position to inform me what rates you found to be too high. Your views on the tariff coincide so closely with those of Governor Roosevelt that I ask whether you have conferred with him, and if he intends to generally reduce tariff rates if elected, and especially what his position is regarding tariffs on sugar, oil, lumber, copper, and coal.

HAMILTON FISH, Jr., M.C.

Although I sent that telegram to each one of the 180 college professors I received back only 6 answers, and none of them was able to specify, except in general terms, what rates in the Tariff Act of 1930 were too high. The professors absolutely failed to specify what rates should be reduced. That is exactly the situation before the Congress today. The Democrats have been talking in general terms about the high rates in the 1930 tariff bill; but when they come down to particularize on any schedule or on any item, they fail to specify what rates are too high. American labor declines to compete with the poorly paid labor of Europe or Asia or the forced labor of Soviet Russia. The protective-tariff system has built up the industries of the United States, and the attitude of the President puts in peril the welfare of our workingmen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Is it not a fact that this administration has already reduced the tariff on all specific rates approximately 40 percent by reducing the gold content of the dollar?

Mr. FISH. There is no question about that.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And that reduction in specific rates has already taken place?

Mr. FISH. That is my belief, that is my understanding, and that is my conviction. Furthermore two thirds of the value of our imports come in duty-free. Most European countries have erected tariff barriers considerably higher than our own.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Oh, let me go on a little further, and then I will give gentlemen some questions to ask.

Mr. TRUAX. I have one now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Not just now. We have heard a great deal of talk from the Democratic side about the years 1928 and 1929. Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the House have nothing to apologize for for the high degree of prosperity that existed in this country from 1921 to 1929 under a protective-tariff system and Republican administrations. It is unfortunate that American industry and labor are being assailed and menaced by repeated attacks by this administration on the protective tariff. Back in 1928 Alfred E. Smith, the Democratic standard bearer, came out openly for the maintenance of American protective principle as being in the interest of American labor and industry. There never was a time in our history due to world depression when adequate tariff protection was more urgently needed to keep the wheels of industry turning and labor employed and to safeguard the American market for the products of our own labor.

It is the purpose of the Republican Party—when we emerge from the depression, as emerge we will—to continue to uphold the high standard of wages and living of the American people.

Between 1921–29 we gave to the American people the highest degree of prosperity that was ever known in any country in the history of the world. During those years the American people were the best paid, the best housed, the best fed, the best clothed, and the most contented in the world. [Applause.] We gave the American people an overabundance of prosperity, a surplus of prosperity, and they abused it; they were wasteful and extravagant, and they followed the big international bankers of New York and gambled and speculated and tried to get rich overnight. It was not because we had failed as a party to give the people prosperity or because the protective-tariff system had failed. It was because in those years, under the protective-tariff system and under the sound principles and policies of the Republican Party for three administrations, we had given to the country the greatest degree of prosperity it has ever known. Because that prosperity was abused, the inflation of 1929 was brought on, but that is not the fault of the Republican Party.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman said he would give us something to ask about.

Mr. FISH. I will give you some more.

Now, it was not the Republican Party that caused this inflation. It was the people back home, you and I, who went money-mad, trying to get rich overnight; you and I who bought the bonds and stocks and securities that were fed to us by the international bankers.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is what I want to ask the gentleman about.

Mr. FISH. I do not yield now. I want to give you something to really ask about. I will proceed. The American people bought all those bonds and stocks and securities. What did they buy them with? They bought them with good American money, made under Republican administrations, owing to the prosperity of those times. They were led astray by the bankers, such as Albert Wiggin, of the Chase National Bank, and Charlie Mitchell of the National City Bank, often buying worthless bonds and securities and also foreign bonds, many of which have defaulted. The enormous inflation was caused by the mania of the American people to buy all kinds of securities. Did the Democratic Party at that time point out the menace of that inflation? Oh, no. Your chief spokesman is Professor Fisher, of Yale; on monetary matters, what did he say? He said back in 1929 that the high prices would prevail; that we had not yet reached the peak.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FISH. The American people, because of years of prosperity and abundance, had money with which to buy stocks and bonds and to invest or speculate. This caused a great inflation and the overproduction of factories, the overproduction of goods, and the overproduction of real estate. Naturally, that inflation was bound to crash. It did, and the pendulum swung back; but it did not stop at normalcy. It went down and down into the depths where we have been for a number of years past. There is only one way out of those depths, and that is through sound American policies. What is needed today is not less tariff protection but more tariff protection. What is needed more than anything else are the sound, constructive principles of the Republican Party. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. FISH. Oh, yes; I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman pictured the situation with reference to the hundreds of thousands of people trying to get rich overnight, who lost everything they possessed in 1929.

Mr. FISH. Millions of them.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And the gentleman pictured the situation with reference to the crash and the subsequent developments, and the gentleman knows that the people of the country were robbed by these stock manipulators.

Mr. FISH. I do not deny it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Now, the gentleman knows just what happened. He has demonstrated he knows. In view of that, I want to ask the gentleman if he will support a bill to regulate stock exchanges so that we will not have a recurrence of what happened in 1929?

Mr. FISH. I certainly will support any sound and constructive bill to regulate the stock exchange. I will not support one that destroys legitimate business.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is the gentleman willing to support a bill that will stop such practices as were shown by the investigation held by the Senate committee?

Mr. FISH. I want to do that; yes. You bring in sound, constructive legislation along those lines and I will support it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I mentioned something of the dangers of the so-called "reciprocal trade agreements." It is not my purpose to become hysterical about legislation. What I am interested in is to see this House, on both sides of the aisle, take into consideration some of the practical aspects of things, and to legislate in the same way as if you sat on a board of directors of some business concern in your own district.

The things that we do here are very far-reaching. Once we have legislated away our power, we vest that power in one man or a group of men such as the "brain trust", which has the power of life and death over industries which are the lifeblood of the communities from which we come.

Now, it happens that I have the honor to represent a district that is very much interested, very vitally interested, in the production of grapes. In my section we have something like 30,000 acres of grapes. In Michigan they have a large acreage. In Ohio, in western Pennsylvania, in Nebraska, in Oregon, and in the great State of California thousands upon thousands of people depend for their livelihood upon what they realize from their vineyards. If you will visit western New York, I shall be pleased to show you some of the finest apple country, some of the finest peach country, that can be found anywhere in the United States. You on the Democratic side and you men on the Republican side represent great fruit districts. Those districts mean everything to the people who have invested their money in developing these great fruit orchards.

I want you to get the significance of this, because at the present time some departments are sending their attachés or representatives to various countries to work out a program of goods that can be shipped into this country in competition with our own.

At least two countries in South America are developing fruit growing in a very large way. The purpose of these countries in opening up vast areas to fruit production is for export. Government aid, which is a part of the program, will place these countries in a position to invade our market at a great advantage over our fruit growers. Our farmers ought not to be sacrificed without an opportunity to be heard. This bill, if passed in its present form, will deprive our fruit growers of such an opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time. I may say at the beginning that three other gentlemen asked for recognition, but either they are engaged with committees or did not realize that the House met at 11; were they here, I would yield to them.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my closing remarks on this measure on the Republican side, I wish particularly to bear emphasis on the form of government under which we live. A great deal has been said in the committee and on this floor by the advocates of the measure that other countries have the opportunity to change tariff rates overnight, and, therefore, a very great advantage over our method of procedure. I am glad we have not such procedure. In the first place, this country has prospered under its constitutional form of government. The Constitution recognizes as one of the three coordinate branches of government the legislative branch; and I, therefore, say that it is our duty to retain our established methods of procedure.

Another outstanding reason in my mind why our form of government is preferable from the standpoint of business and the interests of the people is that, if there were any authority in this country for changing tariff rates overnight, business would be upset all the time; there would be absolutely no permanency were business forced to carry on in this country under such a system.

Our opponents frequently urged, when previous tariff legislation was under consideration, the argument that, during the long period of preparation of a measure and its consideration in Congress, business was upset; that nobody knew what the rates were to be; that nobody knew from day to day what was to be the final decision of Congress on a specific rate; and, therefore—if during the period of the year we have been preparing a measure, business has constantly knocked at our door here and said, "We do not know where we are at; there is nothing permanent"—by the same token—if we adopt this idea of foreign governments that we should change our business methods overnight, make a different rate of entry on foreign goods—no business man in this country is going to know just where he is from day to day. This is especially true in view of the fact that all these bargains, trades, and swaps are, through the nature of the bill and the admission of every advocate of the bill, to be made in secret, behind closed doors, with representatives of foreign governments, without a hearing, and without the slightest opportunity of our industries' knowing just where they are.

So if the Democrats, acting under the whip of the administrative leaders and the "brain trust" of college professors (there are some good college professors; we had a speech from one yesterday, a man with whom I am proud to be associated, and I refer to our colleague from Ohio, Mr. WEST; if every college professor were in his class, we would not have as good an argument to oppose their suggestions); if we want to be led by that kind of dictatorship, here is our chance. I, for one, prefer that we go along in the manner in which this country has prospered, with legislation being enacted here in wide-open spaces of congressional halls, rather than behind the closed doors of foreign embassies. I lay this down with all the power of expression I can bring to the subject in these few closing minutes of this debate.

Mr. Chairman, a prejudiced jury under control of party domination is about to bring in a verdict of "guilty" against American industry. There will be an appeal, however, from this verdict to the court of public opinion, consisting of the voters of the country, who will reverse the decision of this House in the congressional elections of next November.

The Republican Party has with great satisfaction accepted the challenge of the administration. As this debate is now closing the evidence as submitted may be reviewed. At the outset, however, a preliminary statement is in order.

For a year Congress, following the mandate of the people, has with considerable unanimity supported the program of the administration. Features of this program were so dramatic and startling and the stage was so well manipulated that the people eagerly grasped the opportunity to travel over uncharted seas, without compass or navigating instruments to guide them to an unknown port. The year's experience has failed to bring the ship of state into harbor, and new experiments are still being offered.

The effect of H.R. 8687, although a new proposition, is much better understood by the people than any previous suggestions of legislation by the administration. The people have known for many years that the tariff is the cornerstone of the foundation of the development of American industry and American standards of living. An effort to overthrow the tariff strikes directly at the homes of the people. More and more as time has progressed have the two parties been coming together, or, to state it more correctly, the Democratic Party, through its platforms, has shown its recognition of the merits of the Republican system of a protective tariff. The first departure from this recognition is contained in H.R. 8687, wherein not only is the tariff attacked but the Constitution of the United States under which this country has developed and prospered for 150 years.

Mr. Chairman, the pending bill destroys the principle of protection of the home market; it would sacrifice domestic industry, agriculture, and labor for the benefit of foreign interests; and it would surrender the taxing power of Congress to the President and his subordinates in violation of both the letter and spirit of the Constitution. As the Republican Party has always stood for constitutional government and the preservation of the home market for our own people, it becomes the duty of the Republican minority to fight for the preservation of these fundamental principles. If it is partisanship to fight for principles, then, by Heaven, we are proud to be partisans.

Our Democratic friends have no principle to fight for in this bill. On the other hand, the bill violates many of the fundamental principles for which they have stood in the past, and they are thus forced to make excuses for it. There is not a single Democratic Member, I venture to say, who would vote to give the authority contained in this bill to a Republican President, and I think I can safely assert that no Republican President would ever ask for it.

Let us now briefly review for the final decision of the jury, before the appeal to the people, the evidence submitted by the administration and by industry before the Ways and Means Committee and before the House of Representatives.

The argument is made that foreign countries are rapidly winning away our foreign trade, and that the bill provides the only method for regaining it. We are told that because Mussolini and Hitler and Stalin have the power to make tariff changes over night, we should set up in this country similar authority of dictatorship. To this I cannot agree.

Mr. Chairman, I strenuously deny that we are called upon to sacrifice our home industries in order to sell small surpluses abroad. Yet the bill places in the hands of one man the power to destroy every domestic industry dependent upon tariff protection. It would give the President the power to sacrifice one domestic industry for the supposed benefit of another, without notice or hearing to the industry affected, and without review of the President's action by Congress, in anticipation that he will sell some surplus products in the foreign markets. This is a superhuman power that only a dictator would ask for.

How absurd it is to say "Can not the President be trusted to exercise this power wisely, and in the best interest of the country?" To that there are two answers: First, that we cannot possibly be benefited by destroying one industry to build up another; and second, that the power thus given to the President must of necessity be delegated by him to subordinates and members of his "brain trust" who hold no elective office under the people and in whom the people have not placed their trust and confidence.

We are asked to place this power in the hands of the President, or those to whom he may delegate it, without the least advance knowledge of how it will be used. We know neither what the administration proposes to sell abroad nor what it proposes to take in return. Doubtless if the Congress knew in advance the domestic industries which would be sacrificed in these secret negotiations with foreign countries, it would not be disposed to grant this authority to the President. I am sure he must have had this fact in mind when he had the bill prepared so as to secure advance congressional approval of the agreements which he proposes to enter into.

During the hearings on the bill the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee tried to obtain some information along this line from the members of the Cabinet who testified before us. In every instance we were told that it would not be possible for Congress to have this information. The Secretary of State said:

> I would prefer not to undertake to lay open to other governments the details of our methods of making bargains and undertaking negotiations.

Similarly, the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sayre, said:

> I do not feel that it is quite possible to reveal the approaches of foreign governments made in confidence to the State Department.

The Secretary of Agriculture was a little more frank in his testimony before the committee than some of the other witnesses. When asked what benefits would come to domestic industries under the bill he said:

> As producers, those who produce for the export market would be beneficially affected by this bill; those which are so inefficient that they cannot meet foreign competition would, in case the powers of this bill were exercised to lower the tariff, be perhaps unfavorably affected.

Asked what industries he considered inefficient, the Secretary named, among others, the beet- and cane-sugar industries of the United States. At page 60 of the hearings he said:

> The sugar-beet industry, as measured from the standpoint of free world competition, is inefficient.

Asked if he would approve of the expansion of the growing of cane sugar in Florida, he replied:

> I would not, unless it is an efficient industry, and it is clearly not; they cannot produce as cheaply there as they do in Cuba.

Apparently the Secretary's test of efficiency is whether an industry can produce its goods as cheaply as the rest of the world. This is evident from the following colloquy of the Secretary with the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]:

> Mr. REED. Would you favor lowering the tariffs on things Germany produces and ships to this country and which we produce here in our own country?
> Mr. WALLACE. If Germany can produce them more efficiently than we can, it would be of benefit to our consumers, and our consumers certainly represent the eventually dominant interest in our population.

It may be of interest to some Members to know that in a report furnished the Senate by the Tariff Commission the following articles, among others, were said to be produced in foreign countries more advantageously than in the United States: Dyes, olive oil, china and porcelain, graphite, marble, manganese ore, pocket cutlery, safety razors and blades, watches, cane and beet sugar, cheese, eggs, winter vegetables, long-staple cotton, cotton handkerchiefs, flax, crin vegetal, straw hats, dolls and toys, hides and skins, women's and children's gloves, and sponges.

In addition to the articles I have named there are hundreds of other articles in this list. The same report also contains a list of articles on which the duty is more than 50 percent, the inference being that any article requiring a duty in excess of that amount is inefficient from the standpoint of world competition. It is significant that this list contains 97 items under the agriculture schedule, including such important products as wheat and butter.

Mr. Chairman, it is a cause of deep regret to differ absolutely in the meaning of words of the English language from my intimate friend and associate, the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. He and other speakers on the Democratic side for this measure have found great comfort in quoting from the speech of a private citizen, formerly a Member of this House, and a very keen debater and an eminent Secretary of the Treasury, the Honorable Ogden L. Mills.

I quote the words of Chairman DOUGHTON, on page 5257 of the RECORD of March 23, when in his speech he used this sentence:

> No more severe condemnation of the Hawley-Smoot-Grundy Tariff Act and the policy of isolation than that expressed by Mr. Mills in the above quotation has ever, in my opinion, been made by anyone high in either party.

If the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] is resting his case on what is conceived by him and other Democratic speakers as a very definite agreement with their viewpoint, let us analyze the language very briefly.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. May I state that we are not resting our case on the assertions of any one man.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think that is probably true, but the gentleman has quoted Mr. Mills as one of his very best authorities.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I did quote his language, and I put a certain interpretation on the language.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have his language right here to quote also. I have the very paragraph that the gentleman quoted.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman has put a certain interpretation on my remarks, which I have no objection to, but I do not agree with his interpretation.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not agree with the gentleman's interpretation of Mr. Mills' language.

This is the language of Mr. Mills to which the chairman was referring:

We will have to abandon the present policy of isolation and intense nationalism and to some extent modify recent tariff practices. I have never understood that a sound system of protection, based on the difference of cost of production at home and abroad, means the erection of impassable trade barriers, the destruction of our commerce with the rest of the world, and the sacrifice of the efficient farmer to save the inefficient manufacturer.

If I understand the English language, what Mr. Mills actually said was that if we maintain a system of sound protection, based upon the cost of production at home and abroad, we are not erecting impassable trade barriers, nor destroying our commerce with the rest of the world, nor sacrificing the efficient farmer to save the inefficient manufacturer.

We who served with him know the efficiency of Mr. Mills' language, and I will put my understanding of the quotation Mr. DOUGHTON made against Mr. DOUGHTON'S understanding of it. Mr. Mills definitely says that in making reciprocal agreements our basis should be the difference in cost of production between the two countries. We have no better argument for our opposition to the bill than Mr. Mills' own words, as quoted by Mr. DOUGHTON.

Mr. Chairman, what does American industry think about this bill? The committee heard two witnesses representing the two great industrial organizations in the United States, namely, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the National Association of Manufacturers. These representatives of industries employing millions of American workers testified definitely in opposition to the bill. I asked Mr. Farrell, representing the United States Chamber of Commerce this question:

Mr. TREADWAY. * * * You are not then in sympathy with the idea that has been expressed here of the possibility of doing away with some of our own industries here in order to get goods in from other countries?
Mr. FARRELL. No, sir.

Mr. Emery, representing the National Association of Manufacturers, evidenced a similar feeling when he said:

I trust the committee will not understand in speaking for our tariff committee that I am depreciating in the least the advantages of foreign trade. But I do wish to insist upon making clear a comparison between jeopardizing the vast domestic trade of the United States enjoyed to such an extraordinary degree by its own people, and the possibilities of foreign trade, which in many directions are limited by the facts of our importation and experience.

Both these organizations placed themselves on record as favoring the maintenance of the principle of protection. Thus, the Chamber of Commerce definitely requested that—

Congress write into the law the definite limitation that no rate be lowered to a point where American industry and agriculture shall be subjected to destructive foreign competition.

Similarly the National Association of Manufacturers asserted its belief in the—Necessity of maintaining reasonable methods of protection where demonstrable foreign competition adversely threatens American industries and their capacity for employment.

Mr. Samuel Crowther, the eminent writer and economist, presented to the committee an unanswerable argument against the bill when he said:

Let us see what foreign trade is. Why do we sell anything abroad? It is to exchange some wealth we have produced for some wealth that someone else has produced * * *. Now, if we produce that same wealth here as the foreigner, should we not buy it at home rather than abroad?

Reference has been made during the debate to past utterances of Democratic Members in which they opposed the transfer of tax- and tariff-making authority to the President, no matter how strictly it was confined or restricted. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is filled with their vehement protestations against the flexible tariff provisions. Now, however, we find these same Democrats deserting their Jeffersonian principles in favor of the centralization of authority in the hands of one man. It will be interesting to recall some of the remarks made by these gentlemen upon other occasions.

Our former colleague from Georgia, Mr. Crisp, said:

Gentlemen, think what a potential power the power to make tariff rates would be in an election year.

Our former colleague from Texas, the present Vice President said:

I want you all to turn over in your minds and see what it means for Congress, representing the people of America, to surrender its rights to levy taxes. Remember this, gentlemen, when the legislative body surrenders its tariff powers and obligations to the Executive—under our system of government, a majority can do that, but you can never recover them except by a two-thirds vote of the House and Senate.

In a joint statement issued on September 29, 1929, the Democratic members of the Senate Finance Committee referred to the flexible provisions of the 1930 tariff bill as "an entering wedge toward the destruction of a basic principle of representative government", and stated that in their opinion, if the provisions referred to were enacted, it would be questionable if there would ever again be a tariff bill originated and enacted by Congress.

Reference was made in the debate the other day to a statement by the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], in which he said that—

We are accumulating about the President of the United States powers so great that no human being in human history has been able, and no human being ever will be able, to possess without their abusive exercise.

That statement was made over 2 years ago, before Congress abdicated practically all of its powers in favor of the Executive.

The Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, both as a Member of this body and of the other legislative body, strongly condemned the delegation of tariff-making powers to the President. He referred to the present flexible tariff provisions as "subversive of the plain functions of Congress" and as an "unjustifiable arrogance of power and authority to the President."

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] stated on this floor just a little more than 2 years ago that he was against the delegation of tariff-making authority to the President. He further said:

We do not advocate autocracy and bureaucracy, yet there are men who permit their growth in the name of expediency. * * * The fathers who wrote the Constitution never contemplated the placing of the power to fix rates in the hands of the President.

The Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. DOUGHTON, in opposing the flexible provisions of the 1930 tariff bill, said:

The fathers who framed the Constitution wisely, in my opinion, left to Congress the initiating and enacting of laws raising revenue. The flexible provision giving the President the power to raise or lower tariff rates to the amount of 50 percent renders nugatory in spirit and practical effect this provision of the Constitution.

In the same speech he viewed with alarm the growing tendency toward centralization of authority in the President, saying:

In my opinion, we have gone a long way too far already in centralization of power in the Executive head of the Government.

Referring to the flexible provisions, he said:

If this bill is enacted into law he will have the power of life and death over industry, all manufacturing enterprises, and complete autocratic power affecting agriculture.

It is the following statement, however, to which I particularly wish to direct the attention of the House:

My friends, this is too dangerous and alarming to contemplate. With all this power vested in the President of the United States, he becomes a colossus. It is too much power and authority to lodge in any man who ever has been, is now, or ever will be President of the United States.

The gentleman then went on to say:

It seems that the more power men are given the more they are obsessed with a morbid gluttony for increased power. My friends, it is time to pause and call a halt, to stop, think, look, and listen before we go over the yawning precipice just ahead of us.

Mr. Chairman, the flexible provisions of the Tariff Acts of 1922 and 1930 delegated to the President no discretionary legislative authority, but that is exactly what the present bill does.

For the purpose of making clear the difference between the President's authority under the flexible tariff provisions and that under the pending bill, I shall paraphrase the language of the two measures and set forth their respective provisions in parallel columns.

FLEXIBLE TARIFF PROVISIONS OF 1922 AND 1930 TARIFF ACTS	RECIPROCAL TARIFF BILL (H.R. 8687)
Under the flexible tariff provisions, Congress lays down the definite legislative policy that tariff rates shall be maintained at such a level as to equalize the difference in foreign and domestic production costs, thus insuring domestic agriculture and industry against destructive foreign competition.	Under the bill, the President is given the authority, "whenever he finds that any existing duties or other import restrictions are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States", (1) to enter into foreign trade agreements with foreign governments and (2) to proclaim such modifications of existing duties and other import restrictions as are required or appropriate to carry out any foreign trade agreement that he has entered into.
When a request is made for a change in rate, the Tariff Commission first makes an investigation to determine the difference in production costs of the foreign and domestic articles, and then reports its findings to the President. The President then proclaims the change in duty recommended if in his judgment it is necessary to equalize such production costs. He cannot modify the Tariff Commission's findings, but must either proclaim the rate recommended by the Commission or leave the statutory rate unchanged.	No proclamation may be made increasing or decreasing any existing duty by more than 50 percent, or transferring any article between the dutiable and free lists.
It is provided that in no case may the Tariff Commission specify an increase or decrease in duty exceeding 50 percent of the rate expressly fixed by statute, nor may any article be transferred between the dutiable and free lists.

It will be observed in comparing the provisions of these two measures that under the flexible tariff the President has no discretionary authority in rate making. He can only proclaim the increase or decrease in duty recommended by the Tariff Commission as being necessary to carry out the legislative rule that duties shall equalize foreign and domestic production costs. Under the pending bill the President has discretionary authority in rate making.

While advocating reciprocity, the Republican Party has never advocated it to the extent that in order to secure foreign trade we should surrender the home market to foreign competitors. Neither has the party advocated giving the President discretionary and final authority in the negotiation of foreign trade agreements.

I deny that the McKinley Tariff Act of 1890 delegates tariff-making authority to the President. The Democrats can find nothing in that act either to embarrass the Republicans or to bolster their case. There the President had no authority to fix rates, since Congress both prescribed the articles which could be used as a basis for negotiation and fixed the rates which should be imposed if the President found the countries exporting any of the specified articles to the United States discriminated against our commerce. Furthermore, that measure did not propose to promote our export trade by reducing the rates on dutiable commodities, but by threatening to place retaliatory duties on articles otherwise free of duty.

The reciprocal trade agreements concluded by the President under the Dingley Tariff Act of 1897 were negotiated under similar authority, with Congress prescribing both the articles which could be used as a basis for negotiation and the retaliations or concessions in duty, as the case might be.

The Tariff Act of 1897 also authorized the President to negotiate general reciprocity treaties with foreign countries, but no treaty negotiated by him could become operative until it had been ratified by the Senate and approved by the Congress. Similar authority was given in the Democratic Tariff Act of 1913. Under the pending bill Congress retains no right of approval or rejection. Therefore, the authority granted is not comparable with that under these prior acts.

Reference has also been made to other acts of Congress as far back as 1794, which it is contended are precedents for delegating discretionary authority to the President. As I have previously stated these prior delegations of authority go not to the making of the law but to its execution. Thus the authority granted is administrative, not legislative. Under the pending bill the President's authority is clearly legislative.

Mr. Chairman, this proposed secret bartering with foreign nations not only permits the President to regulate foreign commerce and to adjust tariff duties, but it also fits into the administration's program of planned economy. The Secretary of Agriculture, in his recent article, America Must Choose, has given the country some light upon this phase of the subject, and unless I miss my guess we are going to hear a lot more about America Must Choose in the coming months, particularly next November.

Both the Secretary of State and the Democratic Members in charge of the bill deny that reciprocity has anything to do with the foreign-debt question, but as was pointed out at the hearings by the eminent economist, Samuel Crowther, these debts have a very direct bearing upon the question. The following colloquy occurred between Mr. Crowther and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], and is found at page 457 of the hearings:

Mr. COOPER. The point is this, the question of foreign debts is in no way connected with this proposed bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. It does not make any difference, you can say heaven is not connected with the stars, but it does not make any difference, and if you say it does you are mistaken.

Again, on page 463, Mr. Crowther says:

Secretary Wallace wrote a pamphlet, America Must Choose, in which he sets forth this problem. That pamphlet was circulated by the Carnegie Foundation and the World Peace Foundation, and they have been the two leading advocates of debt cancelation.

Before thinking too much about weeding out our domestic industries, it would be well for the administration to point out where we are going to sell our surplus products abroad, and what products we will be able to dispose of, and at what prices. What do we have that the world wants which we can sell cheap enough to gain the foreign market from some other country? What does the world have that we want or need aside from the articles we are already importing?

We now import everything we need under the existing tariff act. So far as Europe is concerned, we are practically self-contained, and the articles which we must of necessity import from other countries are for the most part free of duty. We can expand our agricultural exports to manufacturing countries only by importing manufactured goods to the disadvantage of our own manufacturers. Likewise, we can expand our exports of manufactured goods to agricultural countries only by importing farm products to the disadvantage of our own agricultural producers. Therefore, we have nothing to gain by reciprocity.

It must be kept in mind that once we reduce the duties on our manufactured and agricultural products, and allow foreign countries to ship their goods into our rich domestic market, there is no assurance that any of our export industries will benefit by the sacrifice of the domestic producers of these goods. Foreign tariffs are known to be padded for bargaining purposes, and any reductions to our exporters may be wholly illusory. Also, our exporters are not guaranteed a foreign market, but only an opportunity to compete in the foreign market. If they cannot undersell the world, they cannot expect to get world trade. It then becomes pertinent to ask what domestic exports, if any, outside of automobiles and machinery, can be sold at a profit in world markets? Our wheat must compete with that of Canada, Argentina, and Australia. Our cotton must compete with that of Egypt, Brazil, India, and other low-wage countries. With the growth of manufacturing in such countries as Japan and Czechoslovakia, our own manufacturers are faced with ruinous competition in world markets.

Mr. Chairman, the argument is made that we should lower our tariff barriers, whatever they may be, and let the other countries of the world build up their purchasing power by disposing of their surplus products in our markets, thereby enabling them, it is said, to buy more of our surpluses. But, Mr. Chairman, what about the purchasing power of the millions of men who are out of work in this country, and the additional millions dependent upon them for support? Before we take so much interest in the rest of the world, why not build up a little more purchasing power at home, and then our people will be able to buy more of the world's products without the necessity of tariff reciprocity, and without destroying our own industries and throwing millions more out of employment.

Perhaps we are our neighbor's keeper, as the Good Book says, but what has it profited us in the past? We spent millions to save the starving throughout the world; we spent millions to aid those stricken by disaster of one kind or another; we spent both men and billions to make the world safe for democracy; and how has it benefited us? Our past kindnesses have been forgotten, and even the loans we made have been defaulted. Before we destroy any of our own industries, it might be well if we could know how many industries the foreign countries are going to destroy in order that they can take more of our products.

We should not close our eyes to the fact that the domestic policies of all the countries of the world, at the present time, are essentially nationalistic. While the President would have us lead the way toward a reduction of world tariff barriers, we are likely to end up as we did not so many years ago when we sank our battleships in an effort to promote world peace while the other world powers tore up their blueprints. So far as our ability to negotiate is concerned, we have only to recall the recent experience we had in exchanging $1,000,000 worth of our apples for $10,000,000 worth of French champagne. We were bested 10 to 1 to start with, and then France refused to take the apples after they were shipped. As someone has well said, we have a habit of winning all our wars and losing all our conferences, and I know of no reason to think that tariff negotiations are going to be any exception.

Mr. Chairman, we come, then, to decide whether the pending bill, giving the President such broad and unprecedented powers over the tariff, international trade, and the future of every domestic industry, should be enacted. We are asked to vote the President the power to sit down in secret conference with foreign nations and determine the tariff rates which shall apply to foreign imports. We are asked to vote him the power to say what our people shall produce at home and what they shall buy abroad. We are asked to vote him the power to obliterate one industry for the benefit of another, and to do this without notice or hearing, or without reserving to Congress the right to approve or disapprove his action. We are asked to vote him the power to lower tariff rates and admit increased quantities of cheap foreign goods, produced at starvation wages, when our own people are walking the streets in search of work and women and children are crying for food. We are asked to do this when, even in the most prosperous times, our export trade was less than 10 percent of our production of movable goods. We are asked to do this when 94 percent of the national income is from domestic trade. And we are asked to do this when we have at home the richest market in the world, in which is done one half the world's business.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that the prosperity of this country does not depend upon its foreign trade but upon its domestic trade. It does not depend upon the purchasing power of the 2,000,000,000 people in the world outside the United States but upon the purchasing power of the 120,000,000 people within our own boundaries. With us foreign trade is secondary. With other countries it often is more important than domestic trade.

When we set out to raise the purchasing power of the rest of the world we should remember that it can only be done by reducing the purchasing power of our own people. And when we set out to break down world tariff barriers, the result will be not to bring the standard of living of other countries up to ours but to bring our standard down to theirs.

In conclusion, I wish only to say that the decision which must be made upon the issues thus presented is a momentous one. The future of this country and the welfare of our 120,000,000 citizens is at stake. We must now decide between representative government and nationalism on the one hand, and autocracy and internationalism on the other. I am glad to say that the vote of the Republican minority will be upon the side of the Constitution and our own people.

In effect, the issue presented by this bill is a case of the administration versus the American people. The people are the supreme court of last resort, and they will eventually decide the question by their ballots. The Republican Party invites and awaits with expectancy the opportunity to meet this issue before the people in November. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time, 49 minutes, to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein excerpts and tables from certain papers to which I shall refer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, throughout the consideration of this important measure it has been very evident that our Republican friends feel that at last they can take issue with the Democratic administration.

The statement of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], ranking minority member on the Ways and Means Committee, is conclusive that this tariff measure will be in the forefront in the political campaign now approaching. Our friends are always anxious to create fear in the minds of industry and the people, through mysterious ill effect that will follow the adoption of policies sponsored by the Democratic Party. If one thing has been demonstrated in this panic period, it is that the Democratic Party is worthy of the confidence of the people because of its leadership, vision, and courage. There is no chance to place responsibility for conditions upon the Democratic Party as of March 4, 1933. For 12 years our Republican friends were in control of the affairs of this Government. There was not a single day in this period that the Democratic Party could make a single law or determine policy with reference toward its administration. In all the economic history of this country there was never a darker hour than that which dawned on March 4, 1933. The sun was in eclipse. It was unable to break through a single cloud. This national gloom, amounting almost to despondency, was dissipated in the confident voice of that man of action, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, as he gave utterance to that memorable inaugural address. Industry, labor, agriculture, and the people generally of this country responded to his words of courage and his practical efforts to do the job. This bill is a major spoke in the wheel; and even after weeks in which the tom-toms have been sounded, our friends on the left are unable to present any real opposition to the bill.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman who preceded me says that he welcomes the opportunity for the American people to express themselves at the polls upon this issue. In this hope, he must hear the voice of the American people in its last expression, 1932. He may have some hope that a different expression now will be heard; but according to his own statement just made, I am inclined to think that, in his heart of hearts, he is doubtful of any change in American opinion. He has just said that this Congress would not grant the powers conferred upon the present President to any Republican President. I call to his attention the fact that this bill will be in effect after the people speak in 1936, in the election of a President. The President then elected will have such powers. So, in effect, he is conceding that Franklin Delano Roosevelt will be reelected in 1936.

This able legislator refers to the tariff as being the foundation stone of American prosperity and standard of living. If the American people ever expressed their views, if their voice has ever been heard, it was that the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill is not the foundation stone of American industry, prosperity, or standard of living.

OPPONENTS SET UP STRAW MEN

Mr. Chairman, as I see it, fear is the strongest motivating power in the world, with the exception of love. When fear grips the hearts and souls of strong, stalwart people, they become craven, cowardly, and weak. I say here and now, with all the friendliness that exists between individual Members on both sides of the aisle, that this debate shows bitter, partisan, political utterances, speeches made for home consumption, theories adduced that could only come from the minds of men who are overwhelmed with fear. If they are not so overwhelmed, it is a deliberate attempt to create fear in the American people. The whole opposition is one inspired by fear. The most trivial arguments come from distinguished legislators. They could come only from fear. They set up imaginary men of straw in order to knock them down.

For instance, I heard that splendid young statesman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], talk about corn and the effect of importations of corn upon the domestic product. He said he represented a district in the Corn Belt and that it was going to wreck his people and destroy their interests and rights. This is a splendid thing to talk to the folks back home, to say that these cursed Democrats did not have the interests of the corn farmer in their minds when they passed this bill—that it was this tariff bill that affected adversely the price of corn.

Mr. Chairman, when we consider that in 1932 there were only 348,000 bushels of corn imported into this country and that same year the domestic production was 2,900,000,000 bushels-plus; when we consider that the imported corn was only one eightieth of 1 percent of the domestic production, we know it could have no effect on the domestic price, we can easily see what fear will do. It is pure political buncombe.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman was so gracious to me on several occasions in refusing to yield, I know he recognizes my position.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is the present rate on corn, may I ask?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The present rate is 25 cents a bushel, and along about 1931 Canada came along and put on a retaliatory tariff of 25 cents a bushel. We have not benefited by the tariff. The tariff is not effective on corn. Any child knows that. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. May I suggest to the gentleman that Canada does not produce corn?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Of course, it does not in proportion to our production, but they retaliated against our corn farmers because we had this tariff on corn. They put a tariff on corn and prevented our selling corn which we had for sale to the Canadian consumer. That is the very point involved here. This Canadian barrier was there when our corn was selling for less than 10 cents a bushel.

Other countries have set up tariff barriers against our commodities and our products. The Smoot-Hawley bill reached the zenith in protectionism. My friends prate about the glories of America and its prosperity, but it was all prior to the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill of 1930.

Occasionally our friends in their desperation refer to the Democratic tariff policy as tending toward free trade. Since I have been in Congress, I have not seen or heard a free trader. I know of no one on the Democratic side of the House who does not believe that American industry, labor, and agriculture should be protected against a flood of foreign-made goods that would destroy our industries, our wage scales, and the price for agricultural products. But there is a difference between a reasonable tariff upon the articles which would benefit our people and the tariff that has practically destroyed industry, deprived labor of its opportunity to have a living wage, and bankrupted the farmers of America. The facts are that the Smoot-Hawley tariff law was the most important factor in bringing on the panic. It was too much tariff. It seems to me that the tariff question might be likened to the use of salt—no one would deny that a reasonable use of salt on certain edibles is not only pleasant to the taste but necessary to produce the taste. At the same time, no one would suggest that where a few grains of salt were necessary to produce the condition desired that they would douse it with a spoonful of salt.

THE GOLD STANDARD

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Will the gentleman yield on that very point?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I shall have to decline to yield, because my time is running on.

Then the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] comes on and he brings up a new theory, a new idea in economics, that going off the gold standard and devaluing the gold in the dollar have lowered the tariffs in this country; but when attempt was made to question him; he declined to yield.

Mr. Chairman, the record is unquestionable. It caused an increase in the cost of imports from gold-standard countries. The depreciation of our currency had a salutary effect so far as our exports were concerned, so far as the tariff walls of other countries were concerned, but so far as our own country was concerned, it was an added barrier, and it requires this sort of legislation to equalize the situation.

Our friends talk about our being unable to compete with foreign countries because of added cost due to the National Recovery Act. Going off the gold standard and the devaluation of the gold dollar automatically increased costs of imports from gold-standard countries at least 50 percent. This increase is somewhat less when the imports come from countries which have already depreciated their currency. This increase more than makes up any additional cost due to the National Recovery Act. This bill does not change the present tariff rates, except those affected by foreign-trade agreements.

No lesser authority than Hon. Daniel C. Roper, Secretary of Commerce, is presented upon this point. In his testimony before our committee on the pending bill, he met this fallacious argument squarely. We quote from pages 65 and 66 of the Ways and Means Committee hearings on this bill:

* * * with the recent devaluation of the American dollar to 59 cents, it now takes nearly 69 percent more dollars to pay for any particular foreign import shipment than it did a year ago, assuming the foreign price has not changed. There has thus been brought into operation an additional all-around tariff protection or handicap on imports, which has been in only small measure offset by increased costs of production or prices of domestic products resulting from the N.R.A., or other recovery measures. In other words, prices in this country could increase to approximately 70 percent over a year ago before domestic producers would be under any increased pressure from foreign imports, except insofar as the exchange values of particular foreign currencies have also depreciated—and very few have depreciated as much as the American dollar * * *.

Fear, Mr. Chairman, as I have stated, is the most potent thing that moves man save the power of love. Oh, how many years have we heard about the gold dollar, its sanctity and its sacredness. The gold standard was held up to be the cause of our strength and our prosperity even when it had ceased to be of benefit. We did not know much about the mechanics of money back in those days—folks were afraid to think of it. The gentlemen who benefited by having the gold dollar remain in its swollen condition said it would mean wreck, ruin, and havoc to America if we went off the gold standard. Some of us had pulled the curtain aside and were not frightened—we were radicals invading the sacred precincts of the temple of the international bankers.

We went off the gold standard, and from that moment to now we are approaching the prosperity of former days.

The high apostle of industry spoke of that to our committee. James A. Farrell, former President of the United States Steel Co., now connected with the National Chamber of Commerce in this country, when asked by a gentleman, expecting a different answer, said the only trouble about our being off the gold standard was that we had not gone off 18 months earlier.

AGRICULTURE AND INDUSTRY ARE TO BE HELPED—NOT HURT

My friends, there have been some statements made that I know could only come through the heat of debate—statements made on the floor of the House in this debate where the words were not properly chosen.

For instance, one gentleman on the minority side, on Monday last—page 5457 of the RECORD—made the statement that a witness before the Agricultural Committee representing the Department of Agriculture said that "Any industry that needs the protection of a tariff is an inefficient industry." I could not believe that anyone could have made that statement, and I asked the gentleman to insert in the RECORD that part of the testimony.

Before we could get to that, the minority leader and other gentlemen on that side of the aisle had concluded from the words of the Member of the House that the Secretary of Agriculture had made that statement.

The gentleman was quick to admit that it was not the Secretary of Agriculture who made such statement but some representative of the Agricultural Department. The gentleman inserted the testimony. When you look at it on page 5458 of the RECORD, you will not find that such statement was made by the witness.

This is the evidence involved:

Mr. BOILEAU. Do you want to say, then, as a general statement, that those agricultural commodities that require a protective tariff are necessarily economically not justified for production in this country?

Mr. WEAVER. Well, I would like to know what commodities you have in mind. There might be some.

Mr. BOILEAU. Well, for instance, there is a tariff that is rather high on dairy products. It is necessary to have that tariff in order to protect the domestic dairyman.

Mr. WEAVER. I would rather not comment upon that particular tariff. My impression is, as to most agricultural tariffs, that they are of doubtful benefit to agriculture as a whole.

Mr. BOILEAU. I disagree with that, of course.

Then the distinguished and capable minority leader [Mr. SNELL), page 5434 of the RECORD, got "sort of het up" and made the statement that the Secretary of Agriculture announced that all inefficient industries must be destroyed.

Now, my friends, that statement has been made again and again on this floor and in the press; it probably has gone to the country that such is the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture. I ask any fair man or woman to read the hearings before any committee of this Congress, and he will not find that that philosophy is expressed. He did not express it before the Agricultural Committee, he did not express it before the Ways and Means Committee.

He said it would be good policy that inefficient industries should not expand, but nowhere, so far as I can find, did he say that there should be a destruction of such industry or any industry within the confines of this country.

TIME LIMIT FOR BILL

They bring up many reasons for opposition to the bill. They talk about no time limit to the bill. Some have gone so far as to say that if we had a time limit on the measure, they might support it.

Let me say to my Republican friends that you are going to have an opportunity to support an amendment of that character that will be offered by the Ways and Means Committee as a committee amendment.

My very capable colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], moved in committee this morning the adoption of such an amendment, and you will have an opportunity to limit the provisions of this act to a period of 3 years from the date of its enactment. [Applause].

I am glad you are applauding on the Republican side. How many of you will vote for the bill if that amendment is adopted? Not a single one.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I am proposing to offer an amendment limiting it to 1 year. Will the gentleman vote for that?

WAR DEBTS NOT TO BE REDUCED OR CANCELED

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I shall follow the committee amendment. I do not believe a 1-year period is sufficient to get maximum results. I am fearful that the gentleman is proposing something on which he might be able to make a stronger speech to his people than he will be when another amendment will be offered by the Committee on Ways and Means, as a committee amendment. The gentleman is one of the most capable men in the House. He is adroit, he is capable, he is a profound student. He looked down through this bill, and he thought that he could see some political significance in respect to war debts. He made a strong speech on the floor of the House in regard to war debts and their position on foreign-trade agreements. He quoted from the testimony of the witness, Samuel Crowther, in regard to war debts, and he said we could not have any reciprocal tariff agreement unless the war-debt question could come in, and it could come in only through a reduction or a cancelation. I am stating substantially his viewpoint.

This morning I offered in committee the following amendment as a new section:

SEC. 3. Nothing in this act shall be construed to give any authority to cancel or reduce in any manner the indebtedness of any foreign country to the United States.

If and when that amendment is adopted—and it will be adopted—the gentleman will not have an opportunity in speaking to his constituents in Wisconsin to say that reduction or cancelation of our war debt is going to be involved in these foreign-trade agreements.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. That amendment, as drawn, is extremely limited. I have one that is more general, that will cover far more and prevent any opportunity——

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I must decline to yield further. This amendment is limited, the gentleman says, when it states that "nothing in this act shall be construed to give any authority to cancel or reduce in any manner any of the indebtedness of any foreign country to the United States." One could not have broader language than that, I submit.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I suggest a substitution.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman may do that, I say that when gentlemen go back home, they can talk with greater force in respect to amendments offered and not adopted than they can in regard to anything involving war debts. There has never been anything in this bill that gave power to the President of the United States to reduce or cancel war debts, but the intimations in certain speeches of gentlemen, outright charges in others, and certain other things that we have learned, indicated that it was the purpose of our Republican friends to drag that into the political campaign. That is out of it now.

RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS AUTHORIZED UNDER M'KINLEY AND DINGLEY ACTS

Our good friend, the distinguished minority leader, made a profound statement. It was as good a political speech as could be prepared from his angle. It was a splendid speech. On page 5437 of the RECORD, Mr. SNELL said:

Mr. Chairman, while I am in favor of reciprocal tariff agreements such as were contemplated under the McKinley and Dingley tariff laws which would not be disadvantageous to our domestic market but upon terms representing true reciprocity, I am unalterably opposed to opening our markets to foreign-made goods by bartering away our American industry.

If that does not cover the ground, the English language cannot do it. He favors reciprocal-trade agreements, not treaties, that were made under the McKinley Act and under the Dingley Act, where we sought to secure advantage for our products and commodities by taking certain articles from the free list and putting them on the dutiable list—sugar, coffee, tea, molasses, hides (McKinley Act)—a power that is not granted in this bill. He favors doing that in order to get advantage in commerce, but says that under this bill he is not in favor of opening our markets to foreign-made goods by bartering away our industries.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Surely my colleague must be in error. Surely the minority leader did not want to put a tax on coffee.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. He said that he was in favor of reciprocal-trade agreements such as could have been made under the McKinley Act and the Dingley Act. The McKinley Act authorized the President to take coffee, tea, sugar, molasses, and hides from the free list and put them on the dutiable list, thereby raising the cost of these articles to the coffee and tea drinkers and the sugar consumers in this country, articles which we do not produce.

My distinguished friend, Mr. SNELL, favors reciprocal-trade agreements—

Which would not be disadvantageous to our domestic market but upon terms representing true reciprocity.

But he says:

I am unalterably opposed to opening our markets to foreign-made goods by bartering away our American industry.

My friends, if that is not getting on both sides of this proposition, in a little more than six lines of printed matter, it cannot be done. Certainly, the purpose of the reciprocal-tariff agreements contemplated under the McKinley-Dingley tariff laws required our taking foreign-produced goods in exchange for domestically produced goods. Certainly no one contemplated under the McKinley-Dingley tariff laws that such agreement would be disadvantageous to our domestic markets.

So, I say to the capable minority leader that when he favors reciprocal-tariff agreements contemplated, and in fact executed, under the McKinley-Dingley law, he should espouse the passage of this bill, because the purpose of this legislation is to permit of reciprocal-tariff agreements advantageous to our domestic market. There will be the same thought in the negotiation of these agreements that prevailed in the negotiations of the agreements under the Republican legislation—the McKinley-Dingley Acts and that is, that the trade agreements will be of such nature as that advantages will be secured unto American industry and agriculture. Mr. SNELL was willing to open our markets to foreign-made goods under the acts referred to, to secure advantages to our home producers; Mr. SNELL was willing to barter away American industry and agriculture under the McKinley and Dingley Acts. So, I submit that when the gentleman admits favoring reciprocal-tariff agreements under the McKinley-Dingley tariff laws, that he should favor this legislation, or to put it mildly, be less vicious in his attitude toward it because the question of advantage, benefits to American industry and agriculture runs through this legislation, from the first word to its last expression, help rather than hurt is the motivating force behind this legislation.

THIS LEGISLATION BACKED BY MANY PRECEDENTS

My friends, we are proceeding with the legislation today, backed by precedents that began in 1794. This is not a new proposition. This did not develop overnight. This has been in the economic structure of this country for more than 100 years. The platform promulgated at Chicago in 1932, upon which Democrats were elected, upon which the American people gave their expression of opinion, said:

We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding Tariff Commission free from Executive interference, reciprocal-tariff agreements with other nations, and an international economic conference designed to restore international trade and facilitate exchange.

Our Republican friends, some of them, endeavor to carry the words "free from Executive interference" away from the fact finding of the Tariff Commission, and hook them as a limitation upon the next phrase that deals with reciprocal-trade agreements. This language is in cold print—this just cannot be done.

They cannot change the language, they cannot change the punctuation, they cannot make anyone who can read believe that it reads that way. Our present policy, as expressed in this bill, did not start in 1932. Back in 1924 the Democratic platform had something to say about such trade arrangements. Among other things, it said:

We denounce the Republican tariff laws which are written in great part in aid of monopolies and thus prevent that reasonable exchange of commodities which would enable foreign countries to buy our surplus agricultural and manufactured products with resultant benefit to the toilers and producers of America. Trade interchange, on the basis of reciprocal advantages to the countries participating, is a time-honored doctrine of Democratic faith.

When the Democrats and administration forces stand behind this bill, they are simply carrying out another platform pledge that was made to be carried out, and not simply manufactured upon which men could be elected.

In January last the Senate called upon the Tariff Commission to make a recommendation with reference to tariff treatment, and on March 29 they submitted a letter to the Senate that deals with this important subject. Among other things they said:

Congress might frame a law for bilateral tariff bargaining which would authorize the President, when he had arranged a tariff bargain with a certain foreign country, the concession by the foreign country being a reasonable return for a concession by the United States to issue a proclamation stating those facts and naming the reduced rates on specific articles imported into the United States.

It has been thought about longer than that. Here comes the spokesman of industry, the gentleman who appeared before our committee representing the National Chamber of Commerce, which the gentleman from California [Mr. EVANS] said was in existence mainly to promote foreign trade. That is the first time I ever heard such a statement. I know the gentleman said it in good faith, possibly with reference to his local organization, but a chamber of commerce promoted primarily for foreign-trade purposes was a new thought to me. In May of last year this National Chamber of Commerce at its annual meeting favored the initiation of negotiations for agreements like this, as follows:

The safeguarding and advancement of our foreign trade should be the purposes of a vigorous foreign commercial policy of our Government. Adaptation of our American economic structure to present world conditions calls for most careful scrutiny of existing policies. Keeping in mind always the necessity of assuring stability to our internal industrial and agricultural enterprises, through reasonable protection for American industry, our Government should have power to initiate reciprocal tariff arrangements with foreign countries where such bargaining would be clearly in our national interest. Such agreements would complement our existing flexible tariff in establishing for our country a tariff policy fair alike to our home industry and our competitors abroad.

My friends, when you take the Democratic platform of 1924 and of 1928, and when you take the study made by the Tariff Commission under Mr. Hoover, and when you take the utterances of the chamber of commerce, we are following a beaten path with reference to this sort of policy. It is a policy not to harm American industry or American agriculture but a policy to help them.

President Roosevelt will use care and caution in purpose to help domestic agriculture and industry.

I make that last statement upon no lesser authority than the President of the United States. I quote from his message requesting this authority, dated March 2, 1934:

Other governments are to an ever-increasing extent winning their share of international trade by negotiated reciprocal-trade agreements. If American agricultural and industrial interests are to retain their deserved place in this trade, the American Government must be in a position to bargain for that place with other governments by rapid and decisive negotiation based upon a carefully considered program, and to grant with discernment corresponding opportunities in the American market for foreign products supplementary to our own.

* * * * * * *

I would emphasize that quick results are not to be expected. The successful building-up of trade without injury to American producers depends upon a cautious and gradual evolution of plans.

* * * * * * *

The exercise of the authority which I propose must be carefully weighed in the light of the latest information so as to give assurance that no sound and important American interest will be injuriously disturbed. The adjustment of our foreign-trade relations must rest on the premise of undertaking to benefit and not to injure such interests. In a time of difficulty and unemployment such as this, the highest consideration of the position of the different branches of American production is required.

* * * * * * *

Legislation such as this is an essential step in the program of national economic recovery which the Congress has elaborated during the past year. It is part of an emergency program necessitated by the economic crisis through which we are passing.

These quotations make it apparent to all that the policy of care and caution will be followed in the exercise of the powers herein conferred. That its purpose is to "build up trade without injury to American producers"—its purpose is to help rather than hurt, or, as the President so well says:

The exercise of the authority which I propose must be carefully weighed in the light of the latest information so as to give assurance that no sound and important American interest will be injuriously disturbed. The adjustment of our foreign-trade relations must rest on the premise of undertaking to benefit and not to injure such interests. In a time of difficulty and unemployment such as this, the highest consideration of the position of the different branches of American production is required.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Did my friend notice in the morning paper that the textile manufacturers of Poland have entered into a contract to purchase 200,000 bales of cotton from Russia?

CANADA NOW SETTING UP SIMILAR MACHINERY

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But if we had granted this authority to our Executive, we might have been in a position to secure that purchase for the American cotton producer.

I want to call the gentleman's attention to another article that appeared in a newspaper, and I think I should say now it was through the vigilance of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] that I am permitted to bring this to your attention. I know it will have weight with the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]. It is a paper dated March 26, last Monday. It is printed in Montreal. The paper is the Montreal Daily Star.

The headline reads:

Dominion marketing board is set up.

The subheadline:

To control prices and exports.

My friends, even while we were debating this question, our nearest neighbor, our friend on the north, is putting into operation machinery similar to this in order to protect its agriculture and its industries.

Further subheadlines:

Wide powers given under act introduced in Commons. Watch imports.

I read from the paper:

Powers are provided to limit or increase the export from Canada of any regulated product at any time, and to control interprovincial trade as well.

I now read from the paper what purports to be a quotation from the bill itself:

The Government is also empowered "to restrict the importation into Canada of any natural product which enters Canada in competition with a regulated product, and the Governor in Council shall have power to make regulations to provide for the licensing by the Minister of Imports" or otherwise enforce the restrictions.

So we have it brought to us, even during consideration of this bill, that one of our best customers is now considering legislation of like character to this. We must confer this authority to act before we lose all chances to secure our portion of the world trade. We should hasten the day of rehabilitation in this respect.

Since January 1, 1933, there have been 68 foreign-trade agreements entered into by countries in which agreements our country was not a party.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I suggest to my friend that in the political opposition to anything that the Democratic Party might undertake, the Republican Party in the House has diverted itself from its traditional policy and has been forced and has accepted a policy of economic isolation?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I do not know whether that is the policy of the membership on the minority side in this debate or not. Some of them take that position. Some of them take the other position, and some of them take both positions. It is a question of just which part of their speeches they will use for home consumption when they want to keep the home fires burning. In regard to that proposition, we have heard the Secretary of Agriculture attacked as a nationalist and abused because of the curtailment program.

Then we have heard him accused of being an internationalist; but when you read the document quoted "America Must Choose", you will see that Secretary Wallace states that, in his opinion, the American Congress and the American people will take the middle of the road; that they will use the good of nationalism and the benefits that would come from increasing our export trade, or what my friends might be pleased to term "internationalism."

WE ARE LOSING EXPORT TRADE

But, Mr. Chairman, let me call your attention to the fact that something has happened to us; it has already happened; we have got to operate, and it is going to be a major operation, because the official figures tell me that world exports in 1929 were $33,000,000,000 plus; that in 1933 they were $11,000,000,000 plus, a 67-percent reduction.

They tell me that the export trade of the United States in 1929 was $5,100,000,000 plus; in 1933, $1,100,000,000 plus. In other words, while the exports of the world were lowered by a ratio of 3 to 1, those of Uncle Sam dropped by a ratio of 4½ to 1. The story with regard to world imports is $35,600,000,000 plus for 1929 and $12,000,000,000 minus for 1933—3 to 1, whereas the figures on imports for Uncle Sam were $4,300,000,000 plus in 1929 and $1,100,000,000 in 1933, or a ratio of 4 to 1.

When we consider the entire world trade, exports, and imports, it will be found that the reduction in the world's trade is 2½ to 1, roughly, whereas for Uncle Sam the ratio is 4 to 1.

In other words, you might say that it was declining world trade that put us in this condition; but not only did we suffer our proportionate share of the decline in world trade, but we lost 2.9 percent more than our actual percentage of the world trade; and we lost it because foreign countries have entered into these trade agreements and are taking our markets for that which we produce in both field and factory.

They talk about fear of imports. Why, Mr. Chairman, who expressed any fear of imports back in 1929, unless they were tariff hogs? Our industries were thriving, the wheels were turning, the smoke was rolling out of the stacks, men had full dinner pails and something in their pay envelops; they had happy homes and happy families; men were at work, and this country was prosperous. Yet that was a time when our imports were four times their present figure. Then we heard expressed no fear of imports.

Let me say to my friends on the minority side, and I ask them to consider this seriously, that since the beginning of time, since the creation of nations, no country has acquired front rank amongst the nations of its time unless it had developed its commercial possibilities and entered into world trade. Think it over when you talk about nationalism and being self-contained. You can go back to the Phoenicians, the Carthaginians, the Greeks, and the Romans, and from that point follow history right down to the present time and you will find nothing to lessen the force of this statement.

I wonder what makes Great Britain a world power, that little dot in an ocean, that island kingdom which could be lost entirely in any one of a dozen of its possessions! Her success is due because she has applied the lessons of history to her trade relations with her possessions. That is why Great Britain in days gone by occupied and today still occupies its position in world affairs.

CONSTITUTIONALITY

I shall merely touch the argument raised with respect to the constitutionality of the bill because this phase of the matter was ably treated by other gentlemen, particularly the gentleman from Washington, Mr. HILL, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. WEST, our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. DOUGHTON, and others.

Mr. Chairman, I expected to hear a real attack upon the constitutionality of this bill when the distinguished jurist, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BECK, took the floor. I heard every word he uttered, I read every word he put in his prepared statement, but nowhere does he point to a single decision of the Supreme Court that would indicate that this bill was unconstitutional. From his statements I gather he fears it will be upheld constitutionally. He makes a great speech, highly logical and persuasive if it were first impression. I frankly say I took this view from reading general statements respecting delegation of power. But I was wrong. Our Supreme Court has settled this question many times—so clearly and unmistakably that it is not open to serious discussion at this time. He said that Congress could not delegate legislative power to the President. No one disagrees with that statement; we could not do it if we wanted to. The fact of the matter is, however, that for more than 100 years the Supreme Court has been passing upon statutes conferring similar powers; and they have said that this is not a delegation of legislative power; it is by legislation, placing discretion in the hands of the Executive to enforce and execute legislative enactments.

No one would claim this bill was unconstitutional who stopped to think about the Payne-Aldrich bill where power was lodged in the President to determine within minimum rates and maximum rates what tariff should be laid on certain classes of imports. If my memory serves me correctly, there were 134 proclamations put into execution under the authority granted in that bill. The question of constitutionality was raised, but the Supreme Court upheld this placing of discretion in the hands of the Executive. And so with the Dingley Act, and so with the McKinley bill; and we have it in the law today.

My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] referred to section 336 and talked about the Tarff Commission. In it you have a yardstick and the fact-finding body named. However, in section 338 no Tariff Commission is mentioned, and no yardstick is contained; in that section it is a question of the President of the United States determining whether discrimination has been suffered by an American industry at the hands of any foreign country; and that is what this bill does.

In order that there can be no doubt about the powers conferred by section 338 of the Smoot-Hawley Act, I insert it in full herewith:

SEC. 338. DISCRIMINATION BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES

(a) Additional duties: The President when he finds that the public interest will be served thereby shall by proclamation specify and declare new or additional duties as hereinafter provided upon articles wholly or in part the growth or product of, or imported in a vessel of, any foreign country whenever he shall find as a fact that such country—

(1) Imposes, directly or indirectly, upon the disposition in or transportation in transit through or reexportation from such country of any article wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States any unreasonable charge, exaction, regulation, or limitation which is not equally enforced upon the like articles of every foreign country; or

(2) Discriminates in fact against the commerce of the United States, directly or indirectly, by law or administrative regulation or practice, by or in respect to any customs, tonnage, or port duty, fee, charge, exaction, classification, regulation, condition, restriction, or prohibition, in such manner as to place the commerce of the United States at a disadvantage compared with the commerce of any foreign country.

(b) Exclusion from importation: If at any time the President shall find it to be a fact that any foreign country has not only discriminated against the commerce of the United States, as aforesaid, but has, after the issuance of a proclamation as authorized in subdivision (a) of this section, maintained or increased its said discriminations against the commerce of the United States, the President is hereby authorized, if he deems it consistent with the interests of the United States, to issue a further proclamation directing that such products of said country or such articles imported in its vessels as he shall deem consistent with the public interests shall be excluded from importation into the United States.

(c) Application of proclamation: Any proclamation issued by the President under the authority of this section shall, if he deems it consistent with the interests of the United States, extend to the whole of any foreign country or may be confined to any subdivision or subdivisions thereof; and the President shall, whenever he deems the public interests require, suspend, revoke, supplement, or amend any such proclamation.

(d) Duties to offset commercial disadvantages: Whenever the President shall find as a fact that any foreign country places any burden or disadvantage upon the commerce of the United States by any of the unequal impositions or discriminations aforesaid, he shall, when he finds that the public interest will be served thereby, by proclamation specify and declare such new or additional rate or rates of duty as he shall determine will offset such burden or disadvantage, not to exceed 50 percent ad valorem or its equivalent, on any products of, or on articles imported in a vessel of, such foreign country; and 30 days after the date of such proclamation there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the articles enumerated in such proclamation when imported into the United States from such foreign country such new or additional rate or rates of duty; or, in case of articles declared subject to exclusion from importation into the United States under the provisions of subdivision (b) of this section, such articles shall be excluded from importation.

(e) Duties to offset benefits to third country: Whenever the President shall find as a fact that any foreign country imposes any unequal imposition or discrimination as aforesaid upon the commerce of the United States, or that any benefits accrue or are likely to accrue to any industry in any foreign country by reason of any such imposition or discrimination imposed by any foreign country other than the foreign country in which such industry is located, and whenever the President shall determine that any new or additional rate or rates of duty or any prohibition hereinbefore provided for do not effectively remove such imposition or discrimination and that any benefits from any such imposition or discrimination accrue or are likely to accrue to any industry in any foreign country, he shall, when he finds that the public interest will be served thereby, by proclamation specify and declare such new or additional rate or rates of duty upon the articles wholly or in part the growth or product of any such industry as he shall determine will offset such benefits, not to exceed 50 percent ad valorem or its equivalent, upon importation from any foreign country into the United States of such articles; and on and after 30 days after the date of any such proclamation such new or additional rate or rates of duty so specified and declared in such proclamation shall be levied, collected, and paid upon such articles.

(f) Forfeiture of articles: All articles imported contrary to the provisions of this section shall be forfeited to the United States and shall be liable to be seized, prosecuted, and condemned in like manner and under the same regulations, restrictions, and provisions as may from time to time be established for the recovery, collection, distribution, and remission of forfeitures to the United States by the several revenue laws. Whenever the provisions of this act shall be applicable to importations into the United States of articles wholly or in part the growth or product of any foreign country, they shall be applicable thereto whether such articles are imported directly or indirectly.

(g) Ascertainment by Commission of discriminations: It shall be the duty of the Commission to ascertain and at all times to be informed whether any of the discriminations against the commerce of the United States enumerated in subdivisions (a), (b), and (e) of this section are practiced by any country; and if any when such discriminatory acts are disclosed, it shall be the duty of the Commission to bring the matter to the attention of the President, together with recommendations.

(h) Rules and regulations of Secretary of the Treasury: The Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President shall make such rules and regulations as are necessary for the execution of such proclamations as the President may issue in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(i) Definition: When used in this section, the term "foreign country" means any empire, country, dominion, colony or protectorate, or any subdivision or subdivisions thereof (other than the United States and its possessions), within which separate tariff rates or separate regulations of commerce are enforced.

It is evident that no fact-finding commission is set up in this section, nor is there any yardstick, the absence of which in this bill is the cause of such complaints. This power in the President, originally coming into the law in a Republican administration, confers this exercise of discretion upon the President "when he finds that the public interest will be served." The fact-finding is imposed upon the President of the United States, who, of course, may use such agency as he sees fit. There is no measuring rod in this section.

The language of the pending bill, in first part of section 1, sets forth its purpose. The gentleman from Massachusetts

[Mr. TREADWAY] said they were pretty words. They are more than pretty words; they are a legislative expression of conditions, purposes, and intent.

The language, which is so very important, follows:

PART III—PROMOTION OF FOREIGN TRADE

SEC. 350. (a) For the purpose of expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States (as a means of assisting in restoring the American standard of living, in overcoming domestic unemployment and the present economic depression, in increasing the purchasing power of the American public in the present emergency, and in establishing and maintaining a better relationship among various branches of American agriculture, industry, mining, and commerce) by regulating the admission of foreign goods into the United States in accordance with the characteristics and needs of various branches of American production so that foreign markets will be made available to those branches of American production which require and are capable of developing such outlets by affording corresponding market opportunities for foreign products in the United States, the President, whenever he finds that any existing duties or other import restrictions are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States or that the purpose above declared will be promoted by the use of the powers herein conferred, is authorized."

Then whenever the President finds that "any existing duties or other import restrictions are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States or that the purpose above declared will be promoted by the use of the power herein conferred", he may enter into these foreign-trade agreements and issue a proclamation within limits increasing or decreasing the rates that are now on the books by not more than 50 percent.

SUBSTANTIAL AID TO AGRICULTURE AND INDUSTRY

There is no imposition of tariff rates. There is no imposition of tax levies in this bill. The rates remain on the books as is with this discretionary power in the hands of the President.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] talks about 90 percent domestic consumption and 10 percent export production. This looks like 9 to 1. But, Mr. Chairman, when you consider this vast array of articles treated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WEST] and the percentage of their production that goes into the export trade, you will see a vastly different picture. When you think of the proportion of cotton, wheat, tobacco, lard, and rice that goes into the export trade, you will see a different picture; 55 to 60 percent of our cotton production goes to the export trade; wheat 20 percent, tobacco 40 percent, lard 50 percent, and rice 30 percent.

Mr. Chairman, it is estimated here that 7,000,000 American citizens are involved and are dependent in large degree upon our export trade. I think this figure is small. I will tell you why I think it is small. There are 432,000 tobacco farms in this country. If you take the farmer, his wife, and family as an average of 5, and 1 tenant with an average family of 3, you have a total of 8. That is 3,456,000 people right there. Forty percent of the product goes into the foreign trade, which means that practically a million and a half people growing tobacco are dependent upon keeping open to tobacco the markets of the world.

I submit the following statements which I found most interesting:

The value of the exports of the following principal articles in 1932 was the lowest in years, to wit:

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE LIKE ACTION

May I read to you a statement made by ex-President Hoover which, to my mind, is typical of the attitude of the gentlemen on the left. I say that, in my opinion, he did not follow the viewpoint expressed. This is taken from a speech he made at Cleveland, Ohio, on October 2, 1930:

The economic fatalist believes that these crises are inevitable and bound to be recurrent. I would remind these pessimists that exactly the same things were once said of typhoid, cholera, and smallpox. If medical science had sat down in a spirit of weak-kneed resignation and accepted these scourges as uncontrollable visitations of Providence, we should still have them with us. This is not the spirit of modern science. Science girds itself with painstaking research to find the nature and origin of disease and to devise methods for its prevention. That should be our attitude toward these economic pestilences. They are not dispensations of Providence. I am confident in the faith that their control, so far as the causes lie within our own boundaries, is within the genius of modern business.

President Hoover failed to practice what he preached, and it was because of that inaction, because of that lack of leadership, that the American people turned to a man of action and a man of leadership.

Today in this Chamber we are called upon for action. If you are satisfied with the old idea of "let well enough alone", "make no effort to cure the ills which visit us", "make no effort to secure world markets for American commodities and American products", then you ought in good conscience vote against this bill. On the contrary, if you believe in action, if you have the confidence that you claim you have in the President of the United States, if you have faith in the President, who has brought us a long way on the road to recovery, be not afraid, have a little stiffening in the spine, be men of action, and support this legislation which comes into being as the President says, not to hurt industry in this country but to help it. If you have this viewpoint, support the measure. In my judgment, the fears so well expressed will never be realized. The American farmer and American industry will receive benefits. American families will have happier homes, and we will have discharged another obligation placed upon us by the people of the United States in carrying out the platform pledge of our party and the purpose of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, our President. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Tariff Act of 1930 is amended by adding at the end of title III the following:

"PART III—PROMOTION OF FOREIGN TRADE

"SEC. 350. (a) For the purpose of expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States (as a means of assisting in restoring the American standard of living, in overcoming domestic unemployment and the present economic depression, in increasing the purchasing power of the American public in the present emergency, and in establishing and maintaining a better relationship among various branches of American agriculture, industry, mining, and commerce) by regulating the admission of foreign goods into the United States in accordance with the characteristics and needs of various branches of American production so that foreign markets will be made available to those branches of American production which require and are capable of developing such outlets by affording corresponding market opportunities for foreign products in the United States, the President, whenever he finds that any existing duties or other import restrictions are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States or that the purpose above declared will be promoted by the use of the powers herein conferred, is authorized from time to time—

"(1) To enter into foreign trade agreements with foreign governments or instrumentalities thereof; and

"(2) To proclaim such modifications of existing duties and other import restrictions, or such additional import restrictions, or such continuance, and for such minimum periods, of existing customs or excise treatment of any article covered by foreign trade agreements, as are required or appropriate to carry out any foreign trade agreement that the President has entered into hereunder. No proclamation shall be made increasing or decreasing by more than 50 percent any existing rate of duty or transferring any article between the dutiable and free lists. The proclaimed duties and other import restrictions shall apply to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of all foreign countries, whether imported directly or indirectly, except that nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the granting of exclusive preferential treatment to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the Republic of Cuba: Provided, That the President may suspend the application to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of any country because of its discriminatory treatment of American commerce or because of other acts or policies which in his opinion tend to defeat the purposes set forth in this section; and the proclaimed duties and other import restrictions shall be in effect from and after such time as is specified in the proclamation.

"The President may at any time terminate any such proclamation in whole or in part.

"(b) As used in this section, the term 'duties and other import restrictions' includes (1) rate and form of import duties and classifications of articles, and (2) limitations, prohibitions, charges, and exactions other than duties, imposed on importation or imposed for the regulation of imports."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY: Beginning with the word "for", in line 6, on page 1, strike out all the language down to and including the words "United States", in line 9, page 2.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the language that I propose striking out is purely a lot of well-put-together words that mean absolutely nothing. If we are writing law, let us write law. If we are writing professional English, let us write that, but not intrude it in the Halls of Congress. If anyone can show me that any part of the language that I have moved to strike out will in any way add to the efficiency or the efficacy of this law, if passed, I will withdraw the amendment. As was explained in the committee, it shows the purpose of the legislation. The purpose of the legislation is when you enact something. This is just a further illustration that we are being led around like a bull with a ring through his nose. We are being led around by the nose by some "brain trust" professors who are fond of the English language and their powers to express it. There is a page and a half of useless words. They sound well and perhaps might mean something in the right place, but when you are enacting a law they do not mean a continental thing. So why waste good English? Why do they not use their good English in getting up lectures or to address their college classes instead of bringing such language as this into the Halls of Congress and asking us to carry their language into law.

Why, it is the most absurd thing conceivable, Mr. Chairman, that we are expected, like a class in college, to need their well-sounding words. I can conceive of the author of this language on a rostrum before his college class, possibly of freshmen—I think they might be from the way this language reads—and I can see the awe on the faces of these boys when they are looking up at this college professor and thinking what a great man he is because he uses so many fine, high-sounding words. We have graduated from that freshman professorial-teaching group and we are here as Representatives of the people, and let us act as such and not be led around by the nose and told the kind of language we ought to use because some man has a power of expression which should be used for the benefit of freshmen in college rather than for grown men who are Members of the Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] will not be adopted. It is a case of Greeks bearing gifts. Of course, this side of the House is not going to take advice or be governed by those on the other side, who have fought this bill at every turn, who are opposed to every word, line, and every section of it, and their only motive, purpose, and real object is to try to defeat the bill.

I am sure the Membership on this side of the House who favor this legislation and believe it will bring great benefits to the American people are not going to allow its enemies to write the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as the chairman of the committee so well knows, various other measures reported by this and other committees and enacted during this recovery program have carried language which corresponds to the language carried in this bill. It is a very vital part of the bill itself. It sets forth the purposes of the legislation and from a legal standpoint and from the standpoint of construction in the courts it is of the very greatest importance to the legislation.

It is necessary for this provision to be contained in this bill, which sets forth the very purposes to be accomplished by the legislation, and, certainly, the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts should not be adopted. This very language will be looked to by the courts of the country if they should be called upon to pass on this legislation, and it is of vital importance to the measure that this provision be contained in the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], in offering the amendment that he has, clearly evidences that no matter what the Democratic Party might do with reference to the tariff, the gentleman from Massachusetts would oppose it because of political reasons.

There is no question but that throughout the country the thinking press and the fair press are realizing that the opposition of the Republican Party to this measure is purely partisan, without regard to whether or not legislation of this kind is beneficial or might be beneficial to the general welfare of the country.

In one of the cities located near Mr. TREADWAY's district, Springfield, Mass., is located a newspaper, the Springfield Republican, and in an editorial under the title of "Tariff Bargaining Power", it says:

The President's tariff bill is afoul of partisan obstruction and is undergoing, first of all, a major attack as unconstitutional. For this reason, the bill might well place a time limitation on the delegated power, say 3 or 4 years, thus forcing the President to ask for a renewal later on in case he should desire to continue his policy of promoting foreign trade by special agreements without being obliged to obtain in each case the approval of two thirds of the Senate. With a time limitation, the Supreme Court would probably find the law the easier to sustain.

The foreign trade relations of all nations are in such a depressed and chaotic condition that the Executive of our own Government should be empowered to exercise greater freedom from the Senate veto in negotiating commercial treaties. The requirement of a two-thirds Senate majority for any treaty is a serious obstacle to trade development.

Other governments are not thus handicapped. In cases where the approval of a legislative body is still necessary, as in Great Britain, only a simple majority in a body controlled by the responsible ministry is needed, while the numerous dictatorships that have sprung up throughout the world may act without the least hindrance to reach out for foreign markets by special trade bargaining.

Great Britain's economic position would be almost hopeless if the British executive were tied down like the President of the United States in pushing exports. The British revival has been slow, although there has been perceptible improvement. The physical volume of industrial production in the United Kingdom has increased only 3 percent since the rise began as against 20 percent for the United States.

The present British Government banks heavily on its new protective-tariff policy; thus the home market is safeguarded for domestic industries. But the home market cannot begin to consume British production of goods. "Recovery" for Britain means recovery of foreign markets, so far as that is now possible. Sir John Simon's recent laudation of the new British tariff policy was based mainly on the fact that the tariff has not caused a recent decline in exports. But it is through an improved bargaining position that the British Government facilitates better trade relations. Special trade agreements and treaties furnish the method for promoting exports. These treaties require nothing but a simple majority in the Commons for their approval, and the approval could not be denied without throwing the Government out of power.

The constitutional basis for the delegation of a limited tariff power to the President is in the flexible tariff system already sustained by the United States Supreme Court. What President Roosevelt asks for in bargaining authority would in effect place him merely on an equality with other great nations, including Great Britain. If this country wants its exports stimulated, it knows perfectly what it must do.

This is a newspaper located in what was once one of the strongest Republican cities in Massachusetts, but it has now seen the light and reason and the people of this city are now taking the course of the Democratic Party, which they should have taken years ago.

The gentleman from Massachusetts says that the expressions of purposes set forth in the bill are useless. The gentleman is incorrect. This language sets forth not only the purposes which the Congress hopes and intends to obtain by the passage of this legislation but it also constitutes a direction to the President of the United States in the use of the powers conferred upon him. What does the Congress of the United States say? The Congress of the United States says, in the language which the gentleman undertakes to strike out, that one of the purposes desired to be accomplished, constituting a direction to the President of the United States in the making of such agreements, is to "restore the American standard of living", a purpose which we should all desire to see accomplished. Such a direction and such a purpose are of particular benefit to all our people, particularly those living in the industrial areas.

The other purposes therein described constitute a direction and a declaration of purpose; and in the event of this bill's passing and being submitted to the Supreme Court on the question of its constitutionality, the Supreme Court, as it has in other cases, would, in part, look to the purposes which the passage of the legislation sought to bring about.

So this has a legal significance. It is not merely inserting high-sounding words. This language sets forth the definite policy of Congress in the passing of this bill, and it also sets out the direction which the executive branch of the Government should and must take in carrying out the powers necessarily delegated.

So it is not unnecessary language; it is important language, not only to set forth the purposes which we desire but it also constitutes a direction to the President of the United States, and I hope that the amendment injected for partisan purposes will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I am interested in the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts and shall oppose it; but I wish to address myself to a provision which I think should be in this bill; and if it is not included in the bill, I shall vote against it.

I refer to the time limit. I am willing to trust the President of the United States with all the powers embraced in this bill, and they are indeed stupendous, gigantic, unprecedented powers, but I wish that the President shall be limited as to the time he may exercise these powers.

The majority report says that the bill is designed to meet an emergency. If it is designed to do that—and I am sure it is to meet an emergency—when the emergency shall have gone glimmering, these powers should cease. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], a member of the committee, is to offer such an amendment.

Mr. CULLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. CULLEN. I want to say to the gentleman that such an amendment as he has indicated is to be offered to the bill by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CELLER. I just commented on that, and I am glad to have it reiterated by a member of the committee. It is imperative that the amendment should be adopted. We are giving the President great powers under the National Recovery Administration and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and all the other alphabet bureaus and commissions, but I believe it is time to determine our bearings. If we are to grant the powers during an emergency, let it be for an emergency and not a permanent affair. As the bill now reads, it embraces a permanent policy. There is no time limit.

I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts will offer the amendment that the powers granted herein shall be for the duration of 3 years.

Very well and good. I believe and earnestly suggest that the gentleman go one step further, because the President will have the right, if that amendment carries, within 3 years to enter into an agreement with foreign nations or subdivisions thereof, which agreements shall be for a longer period than 3 years, and so I would appeal to the intelligence of the committtee that there be added an amendment or a provision that no agreements shall be made within the period of 3 years which in terms shall be longer than 3 or, say, 4 years from the effective date of this bill. Without such added limitation, the President could enter into an agreement effective within the 3 years for a duration of 50 years. We should not permit that. That goes far beyond emergency.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "finds", insert a comma and the following: "after investigation by the Tariff Commission." And on page 3, after line 22, add the following new subsection:

"(c) In the course of the investigation required under subsection (a) of this section, the Tariff Commission shall hold hearings and give reasonable notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and be heard at such hearings."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is an extremely important amendment. I suggested the idea to my Democratic colleagues in the committee, and they saw fit not to accept the suggestion. It is not in accordance with our "brain trust", but for a long time, in several tariff bills, we have carefully included the right to be heard and the power of investigation of the Tariff Commission. The bill before us takes away all that power, places dictatorial right in the hands of the President of the United States, and gives positively no opportunity for hearings to interested parties. If the Congress of the United States sees fit to adopt star-chamber procedure in dealing with the industries of this country, I suppose very likely the Democrats will vote down this amendment; but I want to have it definitely and positively understood that the majority in this House will put itself on record as not giving American citizens an opportunity to be heard before they are condemned in their industrial life. That is the question before you now. Will you have a court, a Tariff Commission, where industrial representatives can be heard and definite and positive decisions rendered by them, or will you close the door to all such opportunity and rest in the hands of one person the power to control industry in this country?

That applies to industry, agriculture, commerce, and everything else. In other words, will you here this afternoon add to the power of a dictatorship, leading to a dictatorship, or are we still free American citizens, who believe in the right of trial before conviction? It applies as much to industry, commerce, and agriculture as it does to crime. The worst criminal cannot be convicted without a fair and impartial trial. He is innocent until proven guilty. Why has not American industry, agriculture, and commerce the same right to be heard by an impartial jury, and place their case before the jury before conviction is had, and why are people not to be given that chance?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. TREADWAY], has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

During this entire debate there has been the most desperate effort on the part of the minority and those who oppose this legislation to scare, frighten, and alarm the American people as to some great injury that will result from the enactment of this legislation. The lamentations of Jeremiah were mild as compared with the lamentations that we have heard with respect to the dire things that will happen as a result of this legislation.

On one day last week the minority leader of the House made a political speech, a stump speech, in which he declined to yield, and in which he used the strongest language possible in an effort to alarm the American people.

The most important thing this country has today on which to rebuild and restore itself from the economic disaster wrought by the previous administration is confidence. There was no such thing as confidence prior to President Roosevelt's inauguration on March 4, 1933. Thank God, confidence has been restored. Regardless of that, in their desperation to make some political capital out of this legislation, our Republican friends would circulate rumors trying to excite, alarm, and disconcert the American people.

Let me read the language of the distinguished minority leader:

> Rumor has it that we have agents in Europe making deals now.

Not a scintilla of evidence offered; not an authority cited; no person mentioned. Rumor! Rumor!

> One is free cement from Belgium. How will the cement manufacturers on the Atlantic seaboard like that? Another is free lumber from Russia. How will the Northwest like that?

Rumor!

> How will the Northwest like that?
> There are many others which mean the destruction of American industry.

Now, I am pleased to read a letter I received this morning from the distinguished Secretary of State, whom you all know. There is no higher authority on tariff questions in the world than Secretary Hull. There is no man of higher character living. There is no man in whom the people have greater confidence. He was shocked by this statement of the minority leader. This is what he says:

MARCH 29, 1934.

DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: In his discussion of the tariff-bargaining bill on March 28, Mr. SNELL is reported as having said: "Rumor has it we have agents in Europe making deals now. One is for free cement from Belgium. How will the cement manufacturers from the Atlantic seaboard like that? Another is for free lumber from Russia. How will the Northwest like that? And there are many others, all of which means the destruction of American industries."

Mr. SNELL's statements, based on rumor, have since been passed around as facts.

Oh, yes. Rumors must go to the American people to alarm them, regardless of the effect such rumors may have upon the industry of the country and regardless of the confidence our people may have in the President of the United States, all for political expediency and political capital. Circulate rumors and let those rumors be passed around as facts, regardless of consequences.

Secretary Hull's letter continues:

> Therefore I should like to deny the gentleman's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON (continuing to read):

> I should like to deny the truth of such statements, and would appreciate your making public my denial. There is no truth whatsoever in these statements. There are now no negotiations involving tariff reductions in progress with any foreign country except Cuba, and in the negotiations with Cuba no offer or commitment of any kind has been made by the United States regarding concessions on products imported from that country.

Mr. TREADWAY. Would the gentleman kindly tell us whose letter he is reading?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am reading a letter I received from Secretary Hull, made in reply to the speech of Minority Leader SNELL when he said that rumor had it that we had agents in different countries for the purpose of making trade agreements.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I not ask the gentleman if Mr. Hull's assistant, Mr. Sayre, did not say that requests for these negotiations had reached the State Department?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Possibly he said "requests." Of course he may have said "requests"; but the statement of the minority leader was that according to rumor we had representatives in foreign countries already negotiating.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the distinguished chairman will yield further, a few days ago we read that a former Ambassador to Italy, Mr. Childs, had been sent abroad to negotiate and find out the commercial status of various things. What does that mean? Have we not representatives in foreign countries? Why send a man traveling around to find out what kind of business can be done?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is doubtless some more rumor. You people believe everything you read in the press.

Mr. TREADWAY. All right; then tell us what Mr. Childs is now abroad to do?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not know anything about what takes him abroad any more than does the gentleman from Massachusetts, nor do I know as a fact that he is abroad.

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, he certainly has gone abroad.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have something to attend to here without following Mr. Childs or anybody else abroad.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. May I point out that the statement of the Assistant Secretary of State to the committee was that some countries of the world had approached the State Department with regard to the possibility of negotiating some trade agreements; but nothing definite had been done, and nothing definite had developed up to that time.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Why, certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. He indicated nothing whatever with reference to lumber and these different items mentioned in the speech of the minority leader.

Mr. DOUGHTON. My good friend from Massachusetts continuously harped on the "brain trust"; he rolled those words under his tongue like a sweet morsel: "Brain trust!" Well, it better be a "brain trust" than a "bone trust"; it better be a "brain trust" than a "Teapot Dome trust". [Applause.] Thank God, there has been no "Teapot Dome trust" yet developed, nor will there be under the administration of President Roosevelt. Of all the people in the world, those on the other side of the aisle should be the last to utter the word "trust."

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask if the Democratic majority needs any kind of a trust to assist them in making legislation?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Judging by what has resulted from legislation sponsored by the gentleman's side of the House in the past, I should think that modesty, I should think that common decency would require, after the failure you have made, and after the distress and suffering that has come to this country as a consequence of legislation for which at least the gentleman's party was responsible, the Members on the other side of the aisle should hesitate to give advice on any subject. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I am sorry they are so embarrassing. I am terribly sorry about that; but, nevertheless, I must say that my good friend from North Carolina is proceeding along the regular Democratic program of dealing in glittering generalities. In spite of the remarks he has been making here, he has not designated a single item about which any swapping is going to be done; he has not designated a single tariff barrier that ought to be removed; he is just trying to throw sand in the eyes of the public.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield for a speech.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am sorry these questions are embarrassing to the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Now, so far as the majority's attempting, or being foolish enough to attempt, to convince the other side that there was any good in this legislation or any other piece of Democratic legislation, of course, that is an impossibility. The man who discovers perpetual motion and puts it into successful operation will be dead and forgotten a thousand years before the man is born who could convince that side that anything good could come from the Democratic Party. [Applause.]

Now, my friends, the responsibility of this legislation is on the majority side of the House. Of course, I do not blame those on the other side of the aisle for their attack, for they are in such desperate straits for political capital; they will offer every conceivable amendment they can think of that might possibly weaken the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the fighting Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee be extended 5 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, may I ask the chairman of the committee if other members of the committee will be given an opportunity to be heard when they ask for time?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Certainly; I am not going to shut them off.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I simply want to call the gentleman's attention to a few facts in connection with this particular amendment. The gentleman from Massachusetts said that the distinguished chairman is not specific.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts would strike at the very heart of this measure and the purposes sought to be accomplished by the enactment of the measure. May I call attention to the fact that under the operation of section 315 of the Fordney-McCumber Act the average length of time for investigation by the Tariff Commission was 30 months? Under the operation of section 336 of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill the average length of time for investigation under the Tariff Commission was 11 months. If this measure has to be weighted down with this cumbersome procedure, of course you cannot accomplish the purposes intended.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is manifestly true, as everyone knows, and the minority realizes that they cannot defeat this bill. They are hoping to emasculate or weaken it so that it will not accomplish the purposes for which it was written.

I appeal to the Members on the majority side of the House to stand by the bill as written. This bill has been thoroughly considered by the committee. Many amendments were offered and some were adopted. The bill is satisfactory to the administration. There are one or two perfecting amendments that will be offered a little later, but outside of these I hope every amendment will be voted down. I am not disposed to impugn anyone's motive, but I have watched the progress of this bill in the committee and on the floor of this House, and the minority are so desperate in their efforts to make political capital and to frighten and scare the country that they will offer any amendment which they think will destroy and defeat the bill.

Mr. Chairman, the responsibility is on the majority, and we must meet it and discharge our duty to the country. We have brought this bill in without any caucus, without any rule, and submit it to the intelligent judgment of the House, and we are willing to submit it to the intelligent judgment of the American people and be responsible to the country for its consequences.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and support the amendment as introduced by Mr. TREADWAY.

Mr. Chairman, the suggestion has just been made on the other side that it takes 30 months to make a change by the Tariff Commission. May I say that the value of these 30 months was well expended, because 32 of the applications were increases to protect the industries of the United States and 5 were reductions.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Not at this time. I shall be glad to do so later. Thirty-two of these amendments were for increases in order to protect the local industries of the United States. Five were for decreases. Fortunate they were who had protection. Here is a proposal to put through in 30 minutes any kind of unreciprocal agreement.

Who is going to hear or determine these questions? May I read two lines for those of you who represent industries, and I do not care whether it is agriculture, as it is in my district, or not. I do not care whether they are large factories, and a hundred thousand may be dependent on this bill. I have no politics to discuss. Frankly, I voted against the last tariff bill. I do not think you gentlemen over there are as good friends of the President of the United States as we are on this side who are trying to protect him from the dangers that exist. I believe he is honest. There is no question in this regard. It is the delegation of authority, from which he is certain to suffer when it injures by reduction of tariff rates their business. There is no protection against that danger. I will go further and say that the President does many things with which I agree, and the gentlemen over there, my Democratic friends, who want us to express confidence in the President, only a day or so ago voted against him by over 150 of the majority Members, and have no right to criticize us when we talk about business and not politics. I recollect that only 3 or 4 years ago the chairman of the committee was predicting that the whole country was going to be turned over to a Napoleonic system simply because of the flexible tariff. This is not a flexible tariff. You can change a rate through Secretary Wallace in 24 hours, and in even less time. Industry has no chance for a hearing. Of course, the President will not determine personally a single schedule in any agreement. This is the situation as expressed in the bill. Not a single tariff expert or Congress has any voice in the matter. May I read a part of the bill that explains itself?

> Whenever he finds that any existing duties or other import restrictions are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States or that the purpose above declared will be promoted by the use of the powers herein conferred—

And so forth.

There is not one suggestion in all this bill, so far as I can gather, that the President is to exercise the 50-percent limitation except to reduce tariffs—to reduce tariffs without any publicity. If this be the case, and I ask the gentlemen to correct me if I am mistaken, because I would not misrepresent it in any way, the President is given authority to raise, but there is nothing suggested in this preamble about a raise in tariff rates. He is going to reduce any and every one of thousands of rates. If he is going to reduce, I say to you that with all the thousands and hundreds of thousands of industries of the United States, not one will have an opportunity to be heard, and I care not who they may be. The agricultural interests of my State are just as important to me as the tobacco interests of the gentleman from Kentucky, who has previously discussed this question, and these interests, particularly the dairy interests of my State and the Northwest, are menaced by the unrestricted power carried by this bill.

Heretofore we have had the Tariff Commission make the investigation and report its finding on the comparative cost of production at home or abroad. No one under this bill makes an investigation. No one knows what may come from these secret findings or these so-called "reciprocal agreements." I care not what your politics are, and I repeat, I am not discussing politics. Who is going to decide these questions? To whom are you going to sell these goods that are exported? Where are you going to get the exchange for throwing our markets open to the world? Here is the greatest market, with half of the world's business. There are a hundred governments anxious to come into this great pasture. They have little to offer. Practically every importation aside from free list displaces American products. We know that. They are anxious to get into our market, a market that has 50 percent of all the commerce of the world and of all the business of the world. Naturally these competitors surrounding us on every side expect to gain from the western Santa Claus. We are not looking for or expecting anything. That is impossible compared with these cheap-labor countries.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FREAR. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. With reference to the increases and decreases, may I call attention to the fact that the decreases were in the largely produced commodities, such as bobwhite quail, and so forth?

Mr. FREAR. I admire the distinguished chairman of our committee, Mr. DOUGHTON. Our relations are pleasant. May I say that one who continually hammers here on politics is not seeking to assail us. He is trying to hold his Democratic colleagues in line, and you know that. You must. I feel my people should be protected. I wish I could find opportunity to answer some of the arguments I have heard here today.

It has been stated that there is nothing in this measure that would mean cancelation of foreign debts. I think you did a commendable thing in offering an amendment to endeavor to meet that situation. I do not believe it is a sufficient amendment and I want to offer a substitute for it. However, I do not criticize and I do not question the spirit or the motive involved. I think it was a wise thing to do, and it shows that the suggestion I made on the floor of the House, and amendment first rejected by our committee, was not entirely wasted upon deaf ears.

I want to discuss briefly another thing in regard to a matter that is in dispute. The gold standard which the administration changed so as to bring about a 40-percent discount, I learn, it is said, will have no effect upon this matter. Switzerland wants to come into our market, and is on the gold standard. She can buy our dollars for 60 cents and take those dollars to any port of entry and ship her products, as she wants to do, in competition with our goods, right into the United States. These are largely dairy products that will displace ours. What is true of Switzerland is also true of France, still on the gold standard. Other countries, like Mexico and nearly all others that we met by putting on these tariff rates in force in the last tariff bill, also have the benefit of the 40-percent reduction. To begin with, the country faces a 40-percent reduction from the last law passed by Congress. Now, that 60 percent tariff rate, if cut 50 percent, will reach 30 percent of the tariff law passed by the last Congress.

For this reason I wish at the proper time to offer an amendment that will reach this situation.

I say this in all good part, because I have no political interest in this matter one way or the other. I do want to protect my constituents from disaster, and I want to protect yours. The only products that are going to go abroad that are to be of any particular benefit to this country are cotton and munitions of war. France wants to use our munitions of war and so does Italy and so does Germany, and you are going to have a fine market for them. Also cotton is needed by all Europe, but I do not see a market for anything else. England will not, because she has the Ottawa Pact and has cotton in the Sudan. What country is there that is to benefit our people by imports? We asked this question repeatedly: "Whom are you going to deal with?" The question was not answered specifically by any witness before the committee, as I remember, and the question was put to practically every witness who appeared before us.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I tried to discuss with my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] the other day the question of what the tariff had done for his farmers in Wisconsin, but the gentleman became so excited he exploded before I could make a statement. I therefore want to call his attention to what took place following the last two Republican tariffs.

In 1921, due to the contracting of credit by the Federal Reserve, we had somewhat of a panic and, of course, commodity prices declined; but prior to 1921, from 1910 until 1920, the farm dollar, as compared with all other commodities which the farmer must buy, ranged from 95 to 118. It never went below 95. Following the panic of 1921 we had the Fordney-McCumber Act, and the farm dollar down to the passage of the Smoot-Hawley Act ranged from 95 down to 89, and with the passage of the Smoot-Hawley Act it ranged from 91 to as low as 53.

So, if we change any of the conditions that were brought about by the passage of these two Republican tariffs, we may hope to get the farmer back where his dollar is worth more than 53 cents.

Since the beginning of the present Democratic administration the last figures were for February, and the farm dollar has advanced from 53 to 64.

My friend from Wisconsin has talked about this market's being flooded with butter.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HART. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. Let me say to the gentleman that I offered amendments to reduce the sugar tariff. Is the gentleman interested in reducing the sugar tariff at this time?

Mr. HART. Am I interested? If we can get a proper sugar bill, I will be glad to; yes.

Mr. FREAR. That is just the situation of all of us.

Mr. HART. I want to tell the gentleman what his butter is worth.

They are all afraid of importations from Canada——

Mr. FREAR. No; New Zealand.

Mr. HART. In Montreal last Friday butter sold at 21.1 cents. In New York City the same butter sold at 18.8 cents. Danish butter, of which the gentleman spoke, was selling at 15.2 cents, converted into our exchange in London; and New Zealand butter, which is of a low grade, because of the long shipment and the time which expires between the time it is made and delivered, sells at a discount because of its quality, and this butter sold at 12.2 cents. With butter selling at 18 cents in New York and 15 cents in London, when you pay the freight, even if there were no tariffs, but with the normal discount at which they have to sell imported butter, you could not flood this market today with foreign butter from New Zealand, from Denmark, or from Canada.

Now, so far as sugar is concerned, under the Fordney-McCumber Act and under the Smoot-Hawley Act, in my State more than 50 percent of my sugar factories were closed and wrecked. Ninety percent of the companies operating in beet sugar were in bankruptcy. So we could not get very much worse conditions today if we had some readjustment in the sugar business; and at the proper time and before its consideration is completed I hope to offer some amendment to this tariff bill which will take care of sugar.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HART. Yes; certainly.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I should like to ask the gentleman from Michigan how many of our Michigan sugar factories are out of commission at the present time, and we are still operating under the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill.

Mr. HART. With some assistance from a Democratic administration.

Mr. WOODRUFF. With no assistance whatever.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

I am in favor of this bill because I am firmly convinced that it is not aimed at the destruction of industry or agriculture, as has frequently been claimed here during the past few days. I am deeply concerned with the problem of unemployment in the industries of my State, such as silk manufactures, watchmaking, and tobacco raising, and the many other diversified industrial activities for which Connecticut is famous. I am, of course, for protection of American industries as all of us are, on both sides of the House. In voting for this bill I do not compromise that position—I am not voting for the reduction of duties on articles produced in my own State or in any other State.

As for those industries of my State which are now on an export basis, such as typewriters, electrical machinery, apparatus and supplies, machine and other tools, hardware, and rubber goods, this bill will be of considerable assistance in maintaining and expanding our possibilities in foreign markets. The bill gives us positive hope for increased employment in these lines and the maintenance of gains already made. Such study and inquiry as I have been able to give to this subject convinces me that there is nothing to fear from the authority granted in this bill. The production of silk goods in the United States, $225,000,000 to $250,000,000, of watches and parts, from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000, and the raising of cigar wrapper tobacco, of approximately $9,000,000 or $10,000,000, a considerable portion of which are produced in Connecticut, are such large and basic industries and employ so many people that we can feel assured that no action will be taken which might jeopardize them.

There is no foundation for certain rumors' being circulated that these industries have been or will be "picked for destruction." In this connection we have the assurance of the President in his message to Congress of March 3, 1934, in which he stated:

> The exercise of the authority which I propose must be carefully weighed in the light of the latest information so as to give assurance that no sound and important American interest will be injuriously disturbed. The adjustment of our foreign-trade relations must rest on the premise of undertaking to benefit and not to injure such interests. In a time of difficulty and unemployment such as this, the highest consideration of the position of the different branches of American production is required.

It is clear that in making any trade agreement with a foreign country all factors affecting the industries involved will be considered in the light of the latest information. Every necessary Government agency, such as the Departments of State, Agriculture, and Commerce, the Tariff Commission, and special and technical experts on the subjects involved in negotiations will be at the President's command on such matters. In view of the splendid leadership of the man now in the White House, who is constantly concerned with increasing employment—not decreasing it—I am convinced that every consideration will be given in order that well-established industries of my State—or any other State—will not be injuriously disturbed. The bill provides for definitely limiting imports so that, if a reduction of rates is made on any product, the reduced rate may only apply to a definite quantity of imports—even a higher rate than that imposed in the act of 1930 may be levied on additional importations.

Those industries which are now becoming unduly alarmed regarding this bill are thus placing themselves in the much talked of but unwarranted classification, "picked for slaughter." These industries are prematurely judging themselves; the Government has set no standard for reducing rates of duty, as has been suggested by the opponents of this bill. We have had the President's assurance in his message quoted above. The rumors which are being circulated by paid propagandists that certain negotiations are now going on with certain foreign countries are denied by the Assistant Secretary of State today.

I would vote against this bill if I thought it would injure the interests of my constituents even though it might be a national gain. I am pleased, however, that the provisions of the bill do not place me in that position. I can vote for the bill under the conviction that it will benefit the Nation as a whole as well as the interests of my State. [Applause.]

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself to my colleagues because I am sincerely interested in one phase of this bill. In line 18 it is provided "or such additional import restrictions, or such continuance, and for such minimum periods, of existing customs or excise treatment of any article covered by foreign trade agreements as are required or appropriate to carry out any foreign trade", and so forth.

I want to ask just how far the President could go under this act in reducing the excise taxes on coconut oil?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Under the provision relating to coconut oil in the revenue act the President would have no power in this bill to do anything. That is purely an excise tax. It is a tax on the processing of the oil and not on the importation of the oil. So under this bill there would be no authority to modify or in any way affect the proposed excise tax on coconut oil.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman. I wanted to make sure because we have made such a desperate fight and Governor SHALLENBERGER has worked so hard I do not want any doubt as to the language necessary to protect our farmers from the importation of coconut oil.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It will be recalled that the tax is on the processing of the oil, so that it is purely an internal tax.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. FREAR. I should like an explanation. This language on page 2 reads:

> To proclaim such modifications of existing duties and other import restrictions, or such additional import restrictions, or such continuance, and for such minimum periods, of existing customs or excise treatment of any article covered by foreign trade agreements, as are required or appropriate to carry out any foreign trade agreement that the President has entered into hereunder.

What about those words "or excise treatment of any article"?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Under this bill the President is not authorized to enter into any agreement that would change the excise tax, but he may agree that they shall remain as they are. So, the tax on coconut oil is not affected by this bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I had the same concern about this matter and despite the assurance given by the gentleman from Nebraska I still have my doubts. My interpretation of the bill is that it would confer authority on the President to change excise taxes.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. On page 3 is a definition given of the word "duties", and the second one is "limitations, prohibitions, charges, and exactions other than duties imposed on importation or imposed for the regulation of imports."

So it might mean excise duties; it might make an excise tax equivalent to import duties.

Mr. REED of New York. That is the impression I had. The language is very broad and susceptible of different interpretations. Experts seem to think it is still in doubt. I feel that, after the hard fight that has been made in the interest of the farmers, there should be no doubt if there is any clarifying language that can be used that will protect the dairy interests from any invasion of these coconut oils.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It is the judgment of the experts of the Department who have gone over it with me, and it is also my judgment, after analysis, that the coconut-oil tax is protected in this bill more than almost any other tax or duty that we have. In other words, excise taxes are not to be changed by Executive order during the time of the trade agreements.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield that I may ask a question of the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. It is agreed that the President cannot go beyond 50 percent in increasing or decreasing duties. The President, however, has the right to change the method of valuation. He also has the right to change the classification of articles. Suppose in the change of a classification or the change of the criteria of valuation there is a change beyond 50 percent of the duty, what will happen then?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman is asking about the general matter of tariff duties, but I am replying as to the situation of the tax on coconut oil, which is not a tariff duty but is an excise tax.

Mr. CELLER. It does not make any difference whether it is coconut oil or some other article.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But it does make a difference whether it is an excise tax or a duty imposed. An excise tax cannot be imposed or changed under this bill.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. As to the power to change a rate and classification, permit me to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] that that power is now vested in the President under section 336 of the 1930 Tariff Act.

Mr. CELLER. Will he have the right to go beyond 50 percent if that is the effect of it?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. No; that is the limitation—50 percent, up or down.

Mr. CELLER. So that if the President wants to change the classification, if it makes a difference of beyond 50 percent, he cannot do it?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. He might change the classification, and if a change in the rates of duty follows, of course he would make such change under the changed classification.

Mr. CELLER. So that he can go far beyond 50 percent, that is, with the two powers?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That would depend, of course, upon what the change in classification did as to the rate to be applied. But the point I am making is that he has the power now. We are not giving him additional power here.

Mr. CELLER. That is what I wanted to be sure of, that in the interpretation of this language there will not be that additional power.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There is no additional power.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me that I may direct a question to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER]?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The purpose of the excise tax on coconut oil generally was to act as an import restriction on that product, was it not?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman may interpret as he sees fit, but the coconut-oil tax was levied as a processing tax, for the express purpose of removing it from the import duty class. It is a processing excise tax for a particular purpose on a particular article.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Nevertheless, our purpose in putting that processing tax on was to restrict the importation, was it not?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. A great many different speculations concerning it might be made.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Bearing that in mind, how does the gentleman interpret the expression "import restrictions" used in line 18, on page 2?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The tax on coconut oil is not an import restriction, and the interpretation suggested cannot apply to it in any way.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the expression "import restrictions" is not defined anywhere in the bill.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The law itself does define the tax, and the purpose of the tax and what it applies to. It is not an import restriction, but it is a tax applied to an article after it is brought into this country. After it is brought in, the first use of the oil is subject to a tax, but it is not in any sense an import duty.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The explanation does not convince me, and I do not think it convinces very many friends of this provision.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, many Members on each side have expressed the hope that we will be able to dispose of this bill this afternoon. Therefore, I hope we can agree on a limitation of debate on this section.

Mr. FREAR. If the gentleman will yield, practically all the amendments to be offered are to this section.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The only committee amendments are to the next section.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Very well. We will go along a little while and see how we get along.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], which the Clerk will report for information.

The Clerk again reported the Treadway amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY: Page 3, line 1, before the period, insert a comma and the following: "nor shall any existing rate of duty be lowered below the amount necessary to equalize the difference in the cost of production as defined in section 336, of domestic and foreign articles with respect to which such duty is imposed."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment to continue the methods under which we have been operating for a great many years. It asks that you definitely recognize the difference in cost of production here and abroad. It asks that you set up that principle in any tariff legislation that you adopt.

The bill itself absolutely does away with any yardstick of the difference between the costs of production at home and abroad. Now, we do not need to remind the Republican side of this principle being a fundamental doctrine of the Republican Party; but the Democrats seem to have forgotten their platform obligations in the haste they are showing here today to fall over themselves to adopt this new professorial "brain trust" method of legislating, because in the platform of the Democratic Party in 1928 we find this language:

Actual difference between the cost of production at home and abroad with adequate safeguard for the wage of the American laborer must be the extreme measure of every tariff rate.

Evidently all such references as that in the platform of the party are being thrown overboard. We see practically the same language in the 1932 platform. The party has forgotten all those obligations of the past, and now they are showing themselves absolutely subservient to this new method of procedure, star-chamber procedure, procedure behind closed doors. The 1932 Democratic platform contained this statement:

We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue with a fact-finding Tariff Commission free from Executive interference.

You have just turned down the Tariff Commission; you have just voted down an amendment in accordance with your own platform.

In other words, as I see it, the Democratic Party is meeting itself coming back when it adopts this bill. We cannot reiterate too often, my friends, how embarrassing it must be to you to be obliged to reverse yourselves constantly at the behest of the "brain trust."

A few moments ago our distinguished chairman read a letter from the Secretary of State, which letter I hold in my hand. It had distinct reference to an extract from a speech made by the minority floor leader on March 23. I do not blame the Democrats for not liking that speech; it was too able to suit them; and, naturally, if there is a place to pick flaws in it they want to do so. So the Secretary of State has written to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] the letter he read in which reference was made to statements based on rumor; and then the Secretary of State said:

There is no truth whatsoever in these statements.

That is, the statements that there were any agents in Europe.

Possibly there are not, but I called attention to the fact that at least two different people have recently, according to the press, been commissioned to make European trips to study commercial relations. I do not know what that means, but it looks to me as though there were going to be some agents over there pretty soon if they have not already arrived. But what difference does it make, Mr. Chairman, where these negotiations are conducted, whether they are in foreign capitals or in the Capital at Washington?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. After the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts referred to Mr. Child a few moments ago, I took occasion to take the matter up with the State Department and have this information from the State Department:

Mr. Child has nothing to do with trade agreements; he is merely observing and taking note of general economic conditions. He has no power to make any proposals or commitments.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman wishes to stand on that statement? If he does, let us agree to it. We did not suppose he had any right to—what was that expression once more—"just checking up on economic conditions?"

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman is criticizing the statement without knowing what it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I merely wanted to get it straight. The statement was that Mr. Child was checking up on economic conditions. If that is not preparatory to making swaps I do not know what is. I will stand on that. At least we know Mr. Child will have a good time whether he accomplishes anything or not.

But, getting back to this letter from the Secretary of State about there being no negotiations pending, I wish to read into the RECORD the evidence submitted by Mr. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, on page 337 of the hearings. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] asked some embarrassing questions of Mr. Sayre about swapping apples for French wine, and so forth; and then Mr. Sayre said:

All I can say, sir, is that many countries have been making overtures to the State Department for the purpose of entering into these bargaining agreements.

That indicates they believe trades can be made which will be mutually profitable. Now, if there are no negotiations going on in some capital why that admission on the part of Mr. Sayre? And then again on the following page, page 338, I asked Mr. Sayre this:

You used the language, if I heard you correctly, that countries abroad have applied to the State Department to establish bargaining treaties.

Mr. Sayre said:

I think that a number of them have approached the State Department with that end in view.

Mr. TREADWAY. For bargaining treaties?

Mr. SAYRE. For bargaining agreements.

Mr. TREADWAY. You have heard me try to get some information as to the details of these bargains and I have not been successful. You are the first witness I have heard admit that we have been approached by foreign countries to have this kind of treaty established.

Mr. SAYRE. We have, sir.

Mr. Chairman, it would be well for the Democrats to get one more letter from the Secretary of State denying or repudiating the remark of his own Under Secretary, because I do not see any difference in whether these trades and bargainings are proposed to be carried out in our Capital or in foreign capitals. The Secretary of State is quibbling when he referred to rumors that the gentleman from New York brought out in his speech the other day. The Under Secretary admits that foreign countries have approached this country to make the swap.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. It was testified that they looked into the situation in Mexico and found that we could very profitably buy 20,000 carloads of fresh vegetables there.

Mr. TREADWAY. I wonder how that will please the vegetable growers of Texas, from which State they are going to get many votes this afternoon, and the vegetable growers of Florida and the other Southern States?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. According to press reports of a day or so ago, the President of the United States established a new bureau. I think it is designated as the "Foreign Trade Relations Bureau", or some such name as that, the purpose of which is to enter into these negotiations, and the cost is to be paid out of P.W.A. money.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am not sure I agree with the gentleman, because our opponents on the other side would accuse us of backing up statements with rumors.

TARIFF BARGAINING OR RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts. As I caught the amendment, no increase or decrease in duty that does not undertake to equalize the difference in the cost of domestic and foreign production would be permitted.

Under the Tariff Act of 1922 and under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, there are provisions authorizing the President to raise or lower duties in accordance with the principle of the difference in the costs of production. While this provision remains the law of the land, obviously it might not apply where a certain trade agreement was desirable. The gentleman argues that this language is substantially the language of the Democratic platforms of 1928 and 1932. In the Democratic platform of 1928 the difference in the cost of domestic and foreign production was one of the elements in tariff making. There were other important considerations. They are set forth in the platform; they are to be taken in connection with the portion of the yardstick to which the gentleman refers. The platform in respect to the tariff advocated the maintenance of business; a high standard of wages; increased purchasing power of wage earners; effective competition; the prevention of monopoly; the adequate safeguarding of labor, as well as the difference in the costs of production.

Again, the Democratic platform of 1932 advocated a competitive tariff. It is significant that the gentleman from Massachusetts, in referring to the Democratic platform of 1932, neglected to say that in connection with a competitive tariff the platform also advocated—and I quote therefrom—"reciprocal tariff agreements with other countries." The pending bill is therefore the fulfillment of a Democratic pledge.

The language of the amendment is the language of the Republican platforms of 1928 and 1932. It is the language of the Republican tariffs of 1922 and 1930. It has been tried and found wanting. The 1930 edition of the Republican tariff has certainly proved unsatisfactory. There has been a decline in commerce, both domestic and foreign. There is no place for a Republican formula that has proved inadequate in a constructive, progressive, Democratic tariff measure.

Moreover, the difference in the cost of production is impracticable and unworkable. It is impossible of determination. Robert L. O'Brien, the Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, an eminent Republican and one of the outstanding authorities on the tariff question in the United States, at the hearings said:

I, personally, do not believe that the difference in the cost of production should be the basis of tariff making.

Again, he said:

Tariffs are matters of public policy, and I do not believe the cost of production should be made today the basis of tariff making.

He used as an illustration the cost of growing tomatoes. The cost is one thing in Massachusetts and another thing in California. A gentleman of wide experience with respect to the cost of raising tomatoes remarked:

It is anything on earth you want to make it.

Several million people grow tomatoes, and they are grown in practically all of the States, with as many different experiences. Some growers have bugs to deal with, other have droughts, and the labor question obtains in other areas.

I quote again from Mr. O'Brien, Chairman of the Tariff Commission:

To ascertain the cost of raising tomatoes in the United States is an impossibility short of omniscience.

Our Republican friends, in the discussion of the tariff and in advocating high protection, emphasized the matter of the difference in the costs of production. It is easy for manufacturers to adjust their accounts, for, as has been aptly said, "Accountancy is a tool of management."

Then, too, lawyers are skilled, and with the aid of accountants and capable lawyers labor receives but little from the operation of the shibboleth of republicanism as a yardstick in tariff making.

It is said that the proposed bill is Presidential tariff making; that it invades the legislative province and that it also invades the treaty province of the Senate. The power granted is substantially the power granted in the flexible provisions of the Tariff Acts of 1922 and 1930. Our Republican friends say that the bill does not contain any provision for an investigation by a fact-finding commission. This contention is without merit. The President will have at his command the Tariff Commission, the Department of Commerce, and the Department of State. After all, the flexible provisions of the Tariff Acts of 1922 and 1930 are nothing more or less than Presidential tariff making.

Again I quote from the statement of Mr. O'Brien before the Ways and Means Committee at the hearings on the pending bill:

I want to impress on you gentlemen that the present section 336, act of 1930, method is Presidential tariff making. If it is tariff lowering, it is Presidential tariff lowering.

After all, the decision is with the President. He is not limited to utilizing any one agency in arriving at the decision, but the President is given broad and discretionary powers in making agreements with other countries to enlarge our foreign trade without injustice to American industry.

I represent a cotton constituency. I stand for a tariff policy that will promote the interests of both agriculture and industry. The cotton growers of the South will be unable to buy if they are unable to sell their products. The manufacturers of the industrial sections of the country will lose if the cotton growers are not prosperous. I believe that the worth-while industries and the worth-while agricultural products of the Nation will be aided and benefited by an increased and enlarged world trade.

As a result of the inability of the cotton growers of the South to sell in the markets of the world, both voluntary and compulsory reductions have been made. Domestic consumers are called upon to pay processing taxes. The allotments are for an emergency. I trust that restrictive measures may shortly be removed. It is essential therefore that the domestic markets be supplemented by foreign markets.

The pending measure is constructive. It is intended to supplement and reinforce the domestic program for recovery.

WORLD TRADE

Mr. Chairman, world trade must supplement domestic commerce. Under the new deal, domestic trade has been revived. The program also contemplates the revival of foreign trade. Both domestic and foreign commerce are essential to the prosperity of the United States.

Foreign trade is essential and beneficial in the sale of domestic industrial and agricultural surpluses. Trade among the States has made the Union great. Trade among the nations will make the United States secure as the most powerful of all nations.

Both industry and agriculture will prosper by the restoration of foreign trade. The inability to sell manufactures results in industrial unemployment, and the inability to sell agricultural surpluses results in reduced acreage. There must be efficiency in both agriculture and industry. The demands should always be considered in providing the supplies.

Tariff barriers will not make for prosperity. We have the experience of the Tariff Act of 1930. High tariffs will not restore prosperity. I favor a reasonable tariff policy. I oppose cheap foreign goods supplanting efficient American manufactures; at the same time the cotton growers of the South cannot buy domestic manufactures unless they are able to sell their product. Neither can the wheat growers of the Great Plains. The tariff question must be examined in a new spirit. There must be a compromise of views. The United States may be self-contained, but if unemployment and distress obtain there is no public satisfaction.

In advocating a restoration of foreign trade for the benefit of agricultural surpluses I would not destroy or injure domestic manufactures. I would not disturb American interests. All American interests, both industrial and agricultural, must be considered.

SHRINKAGE

For the past 5 years there has been an alarming shrinkage of world trade. In terms of the volume of goods, the world trade of the United States is today reduced to approximately 70 percent of its 1929 volume. Measured in terms of dollars, it has fallen to 35 percent. The total exports of the United States fell from $5,241,000,000 in 1929 to $1,675,000,000 in 1933, while the imports fell from $4,399,000,000 in 1929 to $1,449,000,000 in 1933. We have never before had such a national experience. Heretofore decreases in prices have meant increase in the volume of trade. The United States has lost foreign trade. The appalling fact is that the United States has lost in competition with other nations for the diminishing world trade. We have not been able to hold our own. The percentage of world trade enjoyed by the United States decreased from 13.83 percent in 1929 to 10.92 percent in 1932. During the same period Great Britain, France, and other commercial nations have secured an increase in their proportion of world trade. The further distressing fact is that the United States has not only lost in world trade but it has lost in trade with Latin America. In 1926 the United States enjoyed 24.7 percent of the imports into Argentina, whereas in 1933 its imports had dropped to 12.6 percent. During the same period Great Britain, Italy, Brazil, and Japan had increased their exports. The share of the United States in trade has decreased in Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Mexico, and other Latin American countries.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Seven million persons in the United States are dependent upon foreign trade for a livelihood, according to the United States Chamber of Commerce. In his testimony before the committee Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace states that between two and eight million people are interested in foreign commerce for their very living. Today there are some 30,000,000 people unemployed in the world. Unless some constructive measures are adopted the unemployment situation will go from bad to worse.

THE CAUSES

Many causes have contributed to the shrinkage and to the loss of world trade. Both economic and monetary causes have been important factors, but chief among the causes are the high trade barriers and the high tariff walls that obtain in most of the nations. State monopolies have been created. A network of barriers has been erected. The difficulty can only be overcome by agreements to promote the neighborliness advocated by President Franklin D. Roosevelt among the nations of the world.

THE EQUIPMENT

In the leading European countries agreements have been authorized to enable the Executive to increase foreign trade. In most important countries tariff changes can be made easily. Other countries are solving the problem by bargaining pacts and agreements. Since January 1, 1933, approximately 68 of these agreements have been made, and all of the leading European countries have such agreements. The power is vested in the executive branch of the Government in the majority of the cases, without requiring legislative or parliamentary approval, and where required such approval is perfunctory.

FLEXIBLE PROVISION

Section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 is the flexible tariff provision under which the President is authorized to raise or lower duties in accordance with the principle of the difference in the costs of production as I have pointed out. Competitive production is the Democratic yardstick. The purpose of this provision is to protect domestic industries. The constitutionality of this provision and of similar provisions in previous tariff acts has been sustained.

THE LEGISLATION

The proposed legislation vests in the President similar power to promote foreign trade. Its purpose is to provide foreign markets by foreign-trade agreements and by modifications of existing duties or import restrictions. The yardstick or formula is prescribed. The Executive is vested with the power to execute the formula established. If the authority in the President, under the flexible provision, is constitutional there can be no question as to the constitutionality of the proposed legislation. The purpose is to restore the American standard of living; to overcome domestic unemployment; to provide for an increase in the purchasing power of domestic workers; and to maintain a better relationship among all branches of American industry and agriculture.

CREDITOR NATION

The leading European countries are indebted to the United States. They are our competitors in world trade. Large public and private debts are owing the United States. Foreign debtors can only pay in gold, goods, or services. If the policy of self-containment is to prevail, if foreign trade is to be abandoned, foreign debts must be canceled. There is no escape from the simple arithmetic involved in this statement. We cannot collect unless we buy. We know what the shrinkage in foreign trade means. We have the experiences of the past 4 years. The ordinary, usual course is for debtors to pay in goods. The policy that now obtains has resulted in the mad scramble for gold that has wrought national and international distress.

Foreign balances can only be paid in gold, or in goods and services. Shrinkage in foreign trade has prevented payment in goods and the transfer of gold has brought the greatest depression known to history.

THE PURPOSE

The purpose is to prevent further declines in prices by surpluses; to preserve the integrity of our foreign debts, both public and private, and thus relieve the American taxpayer of the burden which cancelation would impose, eliminate the scramble for gold, and benefit the producer by giving him the world markets again and aiding the domestic consumer by increasing his standards of living.

LOSS OF MARKETS

The shrinkage in foreign trade has brought unemployment to American industry and agriculture. It has resulted in limiting efficient American manufactures and in the withdrawal of millions of acres of land. The loss of foreign markets means the withdrawal of acreage and the destruction of communities; it means wide-spread unemployment in manufactures. The shrinkage in world trade has contributed to paralyzing the American economic system. We are advancing along the domestic front. The proposed legislation contemplates an advance along the foreign front.

COTTON

While the United States normally exports about one tenth of its total production, there are certain staples of which we export more than half the domestic production. We normally export from 55 to 60 percent of our cotton, 20 percent of our wheat, 40 percent of our tobacco, 50 percent of our packing-house lard, and 25 percent of our rice. The inability or failure to sell these surpluses brings inevitable disaster to the great agricultural sections of the country, but the distress is not confined to the agricultural States of the Union. It is reflected in unemployment in the industrial sections through loss of purchasing power; it is reflected in the loss of revenues, bank failures, and decline in real-estate values.

While cotton is the chief factor in our foreign trade, the picture cannot be confined to agriculture alone. Many of the largest and most efficient industries are dependent upon foreign trade. The difference between the exports of 500,000 automobiles in 1929 and 50,000 in 1932 is the difference between prosperity and distress; it is the difference between employment and idleness in the automobile industry. The elimination of foreign markets has resulted in suffering and human misery on the farm and in the factory.

The cotton grower is being penalized for his efficiency. Bankruptcy results from better farming. Foreign markets are essential for the greatest of all American crops. I repeat over and over again that we cannot sell our cotton abroad unless we buy from foreign countries.

There are goods produced in other countries that can be used with advantage.

The alternative is further reduction of cotton and wheat acreage; it is less employment in agriculture; it is a loss of purchasing power for the best markets for many American industries. It means, in the emergency, compulsory reduction of the production of cotton. The Nation would profit by providing markets and thus enabling sales of manufactures rather than by eliminating the production and thus increasing the costs of manufactures.

I advocate foreign bargaining power and reciprocal trade agreements that compulsory acreage reduction, adopted as a temporary measure, may be speedily eliminated.

Here and there some imports may be temporarily injurious; but, by and large, the benefits to exports will more than compensate for any minor domestic injuries.

NATIONAL BENEFIT

The opponents of the proposed legislation do not advocate the abandonment of foreign trade. We know we are losing; we know foreign trade has shrunk as never before. What is the program of the opposition for restoration? What plan have they to offer? What is their substitute? We know that high protection will not solve our difficulties. Suffering and distress have followed the Tariff Act of 1930. The United States has lost trade with all nations. Shall we continue to pursue the ostrich policy that now obtains? The result can only be further disaster.

The proposed agreements mean not merely more world trade, but greater internal prosperity. They mean that the domestic program of the new deal will be supplemented by a foreign program that will bring greater benefits to the American people. It is time to think of the tariff question in a new spirit. It is time to plan to increase the sales of field and factory not only at home but abroad. The proposed legislation is a national plan with a national benefit. [Applause.]

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I will say at the outset that I have never been an extreme protectionist. Upon the tariff question I have held views that have been considered somewhat unorthodox by members of my party. When the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Law was under consideration in this House I wrote an article for one of the national magazines, in which I expressed opinions that brought considerable condemnation from some who sit on my side of the House and as much approval from members of the present majority party. In taking the position I did I felt that I was only following in the footsteps of one of the greatest men Minnesota ever gave to the Nation, Senator Knute Nelson, who, although a stanch Republican, while a Member of this body voted for the Democratic Mills tariff bill.

The vote I shall cast today, in opposition to the bill under consideration, may seem inconsistent with the position I have taken at different times in the past, in view of the fact that the purpose of this measure is to lower trade barriers. To defend oneself against the charge of inconsistency is perhaps the most futile of all undertakings. If consistency is a virtue, then I have found that a man cannot long be a Member of Congress and remain virtuous. At any rate, consistency is not one of the major virtues, nor is inconsistency to be classed with that sin for which the theologians used to tell us there is no forgiveness.

But I insist that I am not in this instance inconsistent, for during the past 12 months our Government has made an important decision, an almost irrevocable commitment, which has altered the economic situation of America. That decision was made by the present Democratic administration and confirmed by the present Democratic Congress. I do not criticize the commitment, for in my opinion it was inevitable.

The dilemma which confronted the present administration when it came into power was this: In view of the fact that the American people are burdened with a debt they cannot carry, which roughly equals the present value of the physical wealth of the country, shall debts be scaled down, or shall prices and wages be increased sufficiently to make it possible for the people to carry and eventually liquidate their indebtedness?

If we had accepted the alternative of low prices, low wages, and scaled-down debts, we should be able to produce on a low-cost basis. We should be able to compete in the international markets with the low-cost countries of the world. We should be able to embark upon an economic program that would be aided by tariff reductions.

But the administration chose the other horn of the dilemma. Perhaps it had to. The fourteenth amendment bars the compulsory writing down of debts, and amending the Constitution would be not only a slow process but a hazardous one. Accordingly, realizing that the restoration of the balance between interest charges and the income from which they must be met is the most important prerequisite to the restoration of economic normality, the administration proceeded on the theory that the shortest road to prosperity was the one leading to a higher price level. Accordingly we passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act, providing the means for reducing acreage. When we reduce the number of acres a farmer may sow without reducing his taxes and his debt-carrying charges accordingly, we increase the unit cost of production. Such a course would be suicidal if the national policy were to encourage production for a competitive world market. When we passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act we decided, and I believe wisely, that for the present we prefer producing for a dear market at home rather than for a cheap market abroad.

We made the same decision for the industrial producer. Conceivably we might have reduced wages, lengthened hours, recruited children for work in the factories, tolerated sweatshop conditions and encouraged industries to engage in ruthless competition, in order to force the cost of production down to the point where we would be enabled to compete with other nations on equal terms in the markets of the world. But we did not do that. Under the leadership of the President we passed the National Industrial Recovery Act, under which wages are being increased, the hours of labor shortened, child-labor abolished, the sweatshop outlawed, codes adopted which substitute regimentation for competition as the regulator of industry. Leaving out of consideration for the present the very real dangers inherent in the N.R.A. philosophy, there can be no question that the N.R.A. program has done much good. It has helped lift the country to a higher price level; but it has also increased production costs, and thereby put us on a domestic basis and committed us to a policy of economic nationalism.

Instead of wiping out the debt structure by drastic deflation and thereby placing our farms and factories in the hands of men who, having but little invested in them, could produce without the necessity of earning much in the way of wages for capital, we have frozen the capitalization of agriculture and industry by taking over their bonds and mortgages. Through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Farm Credit Administration, the United States Government has become sponsor for the debts of America. I am not criticizing; I cannot find fault, because I helped pass some of the legislation under which Uncle Sam became the Nation's greatest creditor; in fact, I approve of what has been done. If we had failed to do those things, a collapse, carrying danger to the social as well as the economic structure, would probably have been inevitable. I am merely calling attention to the fact that when we did those things we committed the Nation to production upon a high-cost rather than a low-cost basis. We turned our backs on foreign trade. We chose to follow a course of economic nationalism.

Secretary Wallace, with a clarity of vision that is commendable, recently stated that America must soon make her choice. She has made her choice—or perhaps I should say that the choice has been made for her by events. To adopt policies inconsistent with the course that has already been determined upon will complicate our situation rather than simplify it. Vacillation between one road and the other, which began with the last 2 years of Woodrow Wilson's administration and continued through that of Herbert Hoover, brought the country confusion and disillusionment. We are unworthy guardians of the Nation's destiny if we have learned nothing from the past.

If we decide that our course is wrong then let us face about; let us definitely choose the other course; let us repeal the Agricultural Adjustment and Industrial Recovery Acts, stop supporting the debt structure of the country, tell mortgage holders to foreclose, liquidate the banks, put the country up on the auction block, and start over with the slate clean. Only in that way could we get down to a low-cost basis that would enable us to negotiate enough even-handed bargains with the nations of the world to make the pending legislation worth while.

There are some things that we must import. We need coffee from Brazil, tea from Japan, silk from China, and rubber from Africa. If it is necessary or desirable to enter into formal agreements with the governments of these countries to facilitate exchanges that shall be mutually agreeable, I have no doubt that such agreements can be made in the way prescribed by the Constitution. The number of such products is not so great that it would place an unbearable burden upon Congress to consider them and pass upon each of them on its merits.

If it is the intention of the administration to undertake a general tariff revision under the broad powers granted in this act, then I believe it is doubly necessary that we reserve the right of review. I yield to no man on either side of this House in my respect and esteem for the President. I esteem him so highly that I am always willing to stretch a point in order to follow him, as my voting record will show; but when the right of my constituents to work and make a living is at stake, I cannot bring myself to placing their destiny into the hands of the men to whom the President must inevitably entrust the task of making decisions upon which so much depends, without reserving the right to review those decisions. When I say that, I am not claiming any superior knowledge or wisdom. I am only asserting that I have a responsibility that I cannot shirk or evade.

To be sure, this Congress has already given power to reduce or increase tariff rates to the President and the Tariff Commission, but that power is limited in two ways: First, rates may be changed only to conform to a formula laid down by Congress; second, the rates so reduced or increased may be changed at the next session. This bill gives the President power to raise or lower rates at will, without reference to any formula, and the rates so determined cannot be changed at will, for they become a part of solemn international obligations.

For 100 years the European philosophy of economics has been one of internationalism—force down the standard of living at home in order to reduce costs and facilitate sales abroad. Sacrifice the home people for the foreign market. That is the philosophy that has brought slums and sweatshops. The American people have, on the whole, been happier, more contented, and more prosperous than any other because the United States has for the most part followed a different philosophy. Shall we now reverse the direction of our development? Shall we yield to the lure of unstable and undependable foreign trade, and thereby sacrifice the values that have made America great? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: On page 3, strike out beginning in line 4 and ending in line 7, the following language: "Except that nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the granting of exclusive preferential treatment to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the Republic of Cuba", and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Except that nothing in this section shall be construed to abrogate the reciprocal treaty entered into between the United States and Cuba in 1902."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, due to the brevity of time, I have got to jump at once into the very briefest possible statement of this proposed amendment.

My amendment strikes from this bill a proviso which virtually removes all limitations and restrictions from Cuba and admits Cuba to the Union to all practical intents and purposes, as I understand it, in the matter of our trade relations, but it preserves to Cuba the reciprocal or preferential tariff treaty entered into between this country and Cuba in 1902, and which the very able gentleman from Washington, Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL, stated the other day in presenting the bill was the only exclusive status existing between the United States and Cuba.

Mr. Chairman, I propose to go along on this bill, but I could go along with a little more enthusiasm if I knew just how large and how definite a place Cuba is going to have in the picture, and how much more, in addition to what she is getting now, it is going to cost to have her in the picture.

For the past 35 years the United States has been a wet-nurse to Cuba, and she has been a troublesome and expensive baby and, quite naturally, a not very appreciative baby. To begin with, she cost us a war, the war with Spain, a war that cost this country three or four billion dollars, a war with a friendly nation that we had never had a war with, had always been at peace with, simply because she maltreated a small, weak neighbor at our door. Since then she has cost us a billion dollars in soldiers' pensions, and before that account is finally closed, and in 40 or 50 years from now, she will have cost us a couple of billion dollars more. So just the war by which we gave Cuba her freedom has already cost us more than her trade could repay us in a thousand years.

Coming down a little closer to the present, last summer she cost us a sugar agreement, an agreement to stabilize and allot the sugar industry, an agreement signed by the United States, the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, an agreement participated in by every factor involved in the sugar industry, alloting and stabilizing this industry. It was discarded by the Secretary of Agriculture simply because he thought this country got two or three hundred thousand tons more annually than we ought to have and that Cuba's allotment was two or three hundred thousand tons below what Cuba thought she ought to have. Because of the discarding of this agreement we have a new sugar bill in the House which would not have been needed, to raise hell in the sugar States, and it will raise hell there.

I do not want you gentlemen over on that side to hear what I have to say now, but included in this Cuban cost bill, it is not beyond the range of possibility that it might cost this side of the House eight or ten States, not only in congressional elections, but in electoral votes, because this interest is all located in that section of the country which saved the last Democratic President in 1916, and might, accidentally, be called upon to play the same part in 1936.

Mr. Chairman, if this language can be construed to mean what I think it does, and it is in the same section that has the 50-percent limitation, it takes Cuba out of the limitations of this section and says that nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the granting of exclusive and preferential treatment to articles, the growth, product, or manufacture of Cuba. If this means what I think it does, it absolutely throws down the bars, opens the doors wide and admits Cuba to the Union for all trade purposes. If it does not mean this, it is meaningless and ought to be taken out, and, in the meantime, Cuba is fully safeguarded by preserving to her the preferential tariff treaty that she now enjoys.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I shall not take much time on this amendment. The gentleman from Colorado is objecting to the language which relates to the preferential treatment which Cuba now enjoys under the reciprocal trade treaty with this Government, and he moves to strike it out.

He makes the point that the use of the words "preferential treatment" relating to the manufacturers of the Republic of Cuba nullify and limit the language on page 2 of the bill beginning in line 23, that—

No proclamation shall be made increasing or decreasing by more than 50 percent any existing rate of duty.

That construction by the gentleman from Colorado I am sure cannot be sustained. I hardly think the gentleman from Colorado himself will seriously contend that the language he seeks to strike out nullifies, as far as Cuba is concerned, the limitation as to the 50 percent of existing tariff rates.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I will yield.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman recognizes that Cuba now has a treaty giving it preference in import duties.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. WILCOX. And the President would have authority to reduce the preferential treatment by 50 percent.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I think that is a correct interpretation.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not think it ought to be left to what the gentleman thinks it says. It ought to say it in the bill, because we know where this proposition came from and how it will be construed. It was put in to open the doors of this country to Cuban sugar, and it may be that it was put in to open the door to some other things besides sugar.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Suppose you strike the language out, it would be of no benefit to my friend from Colorado or other gentlemen from sugar States.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It would leave Cuba under the general provisions of the act.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; it would. But what you are complaining about is sugar, and Cuba is the principal source of supply outside of this country. Free sugar comes from Hawaii and the Philippine Islands, and you have the preferential rate in Cuba. If you make an agreement with Cuba whereby she gets a reduction of the present rates and make it apply generally under the most-favored-nations treaties you are not getting anywhere, because Cuba is the principal supply of sugar, so it would not be of any benefit to you.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Is it not correct to say that we have the very definite assurance from the State Department, from the administration, that the language carried in this bill leaves the status just as it exists today?

Now, one further observation. Unless you carry this exception in this bill in reference to Cuba, it will involve complications in negotiating the trade agreements with all other favored-nation countries of the world. There are some 48 of them. You have to make these exceptions in order to negotiate with the other favored-nation countries.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understand a substitute will be offered for the present amendment which will clarify the Cuban situation. I rise to voice my approval of the substitute which will be offered; but before I get to that I want to discuss for a few minutes just exactly what is proposed by the administration in the proposition that has been submitted to this House with regard to sugar. All of you who are familiar with the subject will remember that in the President's message touching that question he proposed by allotment to reduce production of sugar in continental United States 300,000 tons.

He proposed also to take 100,000 tons' production from the cane-sugar producers of the Hawaiian Islands, and he proposed to turn that 100,000 tons, together with the 300,000 tons from the producers in this country, over to foreigners living in a foreign country. It should be remembered that the people of the Hawaiian Islands are citizens of these United States just as much as are we in this body. The President submits in that message no proposal looking to the reduction of the production of sugar in the Philippine Islands. He submits no proposal looking to the reduction of sugar in Puerto Rico, but he proposes to penalize only those farmers producing sugar for consumption here who are citizens of the United States of America. That is what is proposed by the President of the United States touching this question, and that is not all of it. He proposes to put a processing tax upon all sugar consumed in the United States.

The best-known fact about the whole processing-tax theory is that, as in the case of cotton, where the administration has complete control of every bit of the machinery, the processing tax on cotton was passed on directly to the consumer; and this is always the case where a processing tax is levied, with the exception of the case of hogs, which tax has been absorbed by the farmer.

If such a processing tax were passed on to the American sugar consumer—and under the whole theory and operation of the processing tax this is exactly what must happen—who pays the tax?

There are approximately 40,000,000 people in the United States who are directly dependent upon agriculture for their livelihood. The average annual per capita sugar consumption in the United States for the last 5 years is almost exactly 100 pounds per person. Therefore, it will not be difficult for us to figure out that, on a basis of 100 pounds per capita consumption of sugar, and 40,000,000 persons engaged in or depending upon agriculture for a livelihood in this country, the farmers of the United States and their dependents alone consume 4,000,000,000 pounds of sugar per year. One-half cent a pound would mean $20,000,000, which the present administration proposed in its sugar-allotment plan to take out of the pockets of American farmers and their dependents alone, to say nothing of the rest of the consumers of the United States. This is a fact which seems to have escaped notice, that American farmers alone are going to have to pay $20,000,000 as a penalty if this program is enacted. If the producer is forced to absorb the half cent, that means it will be reflected directly back to the beet growers themselves, who are the producers, and that the sugar-beet growers will take this stupendous burden of $20,000,000, which would mean that they would not get more for their sugar beets but less in the final analysis.

The group to be benefited by this sugar-allotment scheme is a group of financial racketeers in New York and New England, to whom I referred in my address of February 26, if this proposition is put into effect.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky rose.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I cannot yield now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

Mr. DOUGHTON. O Mr. Chairman, we have heard that sugar speech before.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object unless some gentleman on the committee will tell me the difference between a trade agreement and a treaty agreement, as announced in this bill.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I will tell the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The Assistant Secretary of State, in answer to a question of mine while the committee was conducting hearings on this bill, stated that the difference was the difference between a proposition that necessarily involved action of Congress and a proposition that did not.

Mr. CELLER. But that is a mere restatement of the question.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I do not care to get into that. I have given the gentleman such information as I could secure from the Assistant Secretary of State. Please let me finish my statement.

Mr. CELLER. I wish somebody would satisfy the Members on that score.

Mr. WOODRUFF. What I was going to say was this. The President has expressed great concern about the Treasury of the United States. I sympathize with him in that. I wonder if you know just how much it is going to cost the Treasury of the United States if the President by proclamation reduces the tariff on sugar 25 percent, and that is what is involved in this proposition.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky rose.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I decline to yield now.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. But we can make a point of order against the gentleman that he is not discussing the amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. When the gentleman says "that proposition", he does not refer to the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. WOODRUFF. The question I am discussing points directly to the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman say that striking this language out makes any change in the present tariff rates?

Mr. WOODRUFF. It would prohibit the President of the United States from wiping out the tariff on sugar. It does not mean anything else.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The language that the gentleman from Colorado seeks to strike out is simply clarifying. It simply states that the present condition stands. That is all that the amendment was put in for—to clarify and show that the condition that now exists will remain.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Precisely; the present sugar tariff will remain. Now, will my friend take my word for it that I believe that clause was put into the bill for the very purpose he states, because I challenge the good faith of no member of the Ways and Means Committee? But I call attention to what this thing means. We are asked to authorize herein the reduction of the receipts of the Treasury of the United States by more than $16,000,000 by the reduction of the tariff on sugar.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield? His argument is against the bill.

Mr. WOODRUFF. My argument is in favor of anything that will protect the farmers of this country, and I say that the thing involved in this reduction of the revenue accruing to the Treasury of the United States means just one thing, and that is that that amount of money will be transferred from the Treasury of the United States to the pockets of those pirates in Wall Street who have been for many years trying to destroy the domestic sugar-beet industry. Have any of you the idea that those people in New York who control that great industry in Cuba will allow any more of the money they receive for their product to filter through their fingers to the poor peons in Cuba who work in their cane fields there than they can help? Have you any idea that anybody in Cuba will reap the benefit of this reduction in the tariff if it is made? We know they will not. We know that the benefits, and all of them, will accrue to the men I have mentioned.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that the treaty itself will protect any interests involved between the United States and Cuba, even though we do strike that out?

Mr. WOODRUFF. There cannot be any question about it. When this bill passes the House there should be nothing left in it that will result in throwing the great beet- and cane-sugar industry of this country upon the mercy of the enemies of that industry who are in powerful position in this country today.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. My amendment preserves the treaty. The gentleman from Washington the other day said that the 1902 preferential treaty was the only exclusive treaty existing between the United States and Cuba.

Mr. WOODRUFF. This whole scheme means that in the reduction of tariff on Cuban sugar, the little group of financiers in New York is going to be handed a present by the administration of $16,245,000, at the same time the American farmer is going to be taxed $20,000,000 in order to absorb the processing tax, or the American beet-sugar grower is going to lose $20,000,000 if he has to absorb the processing tax.

I desire to call the attention of the sugar-beet growers to this fact: That if the President took that $16,000,000 that is going into the pockets of a small group of financiers in New York and spread it over the sugar-beet productions and gave it to the sugar-beet growers, every sugar-beet grower in America would get approximately $1.50 per ton more for the sugar beets than he does now, and which is more than is proposed to pay the farmer under the processing tax.

This is not a party matter. This is a matter in which the future and destiny of the American sugar-beet growers is at stake; this is a matter in which not alone the American sugar-beet grower, but the beet-sugar producers of our territorial possessions whom we have always thought, under our form of Government, to be American citizens, also are to be deprived of the right to some part of their production in order that foreign peoples, namely, the Cubans, theoretically, but actually a few American financiers in New York, may benefit.

A clear analysis of the proposal shows contradictions which are impossible of reconciliation. Nobody yet has answered my question propounded to the administration as to how they expect to increase the income of sugar-beet growers by reducing the number of sugar beets they can grow, and at the same time lowering the price of sugar, which commodity is now and has been for the past two years lower than in any other major country in the world. Or, how they can increase the income of the sugar-beet grower without increasing the outgo of the sugar consumer.

I am perfectly willing to make this admission: If the President of the United States and his advisers have worked out a plan whereby they can increase the income of the sugar-beet growers at the same time they reduce the price of sugar to the consumer, and still not wreck the refinery interests, they have solved the riddle of the ages. If they apply the same formula to every industry in the United States they can put America back to its former state of prosperity in 30 days.

Much has been said about the refinery end of the sugar business. The sugar-beet grower must not forget, and the sugar consumer must not forget that sugar beets coming from the fields are not served in the sugar bowls on America's dinner tables, but that they first have to pass through the refinery, and that the destruction of the sugar refineries of America means the prompt and absolute destruction of the sugar-growing industry, and means absolutely the turning over of the American consumer to the tender mercies of the same gang of racketeers who in 1920 drove the retail price of sugar in the United States to 32 cents per pound because they temporarily controlled the market, and thereby robbed the American housewives of hundreds of millions of dollars.

I am quoting these facts and figures because I honestly believe that we have not given the time nor consideration to the most pertinent facts embraced in this whole program; and that if we understood the situation fully we would reject every plan that in any degree permitted the ruin of the American domestic sugar industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado), there were ayes 62 and noes 90.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FREAR: On page 3, line 1, after the words "free lists" insert: "Provided, That no reciprocal agreement shall be entered into or negotiated with any foreign government that has defaulted in whole or in part with its debt payments due to the United States."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I have sent several amendments to the desk. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the other amendments which I have offered, for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That means, of course, that all those amendments are read simply for information?

Mr. FREAR. That is true, entirely.

Mr. CELLER. Does that mean that we can raise a point of order against each one of them individually or collectively?

The CHAIRMAN. That is always in order.

Is there objection?

Mr. FREAR. I am trying in this way to save time, and to have them all before the House, and any points of order can be presented at the time.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Are there several amendments, or just one amendment?

Mr. FREAR. There are separate amendments on different subjects, but I do not intend to discuss them for over 5 or 10 minutes at the outside.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. Chairman, I object. I was attempting to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order until he retires from the well of the House.

Mr. SEARS. I shall retire, and I still object unless the Chair recognizes me.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman propound a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SEARS. I undertook to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SEARS. Will those amendments be considered in order as read, or will somebody else be recognized by the Chair to offer an amendment?

Mr. FREAR. If the gentleman will yield, Mr. Chairman, I hope they will be read one after the other, and be voted on, except those as to which points of order have been raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], a member of the committee, was recognized to offer an amendment. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to have certain other amendments read for the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the following amendments:

Page 3, line 1, after words "free lists", "Provided, That no reciprocal agreement shall be entered into or negotiated with any foreign government that has defaulted, in whole or in part, with its debt payments due to the United States."

Page 3, line 1, after words "free lists", "Provided, That no condition shall be involved in any such agreement which, directly or indirectly, relates to the cancelation, reduction, or substitution of securities for any portion of the public debt that may be due the United States from the other party to the agreement."

Page 3, line 1, after words "free lists", "Provided any request or proposal for the cancelation, in whole or in part, of any debt due the United States from any foreign government so indebted shall be submitted by the President of the United States to the American Congress, to be thereafter acted upon affirmatively by Congress before any proclamation is made."

Page 3, line 1, after words "free lists", "Provided, That no reduction in tariff rates upon any American products shall be made except upon the basis of the value of the dollar at the time when such rate was fixed by law and not upon any revalued dollar as determined by Presidential proclamation."

Page 3, line 1, after words "free lists", "Before entering into any agreement with any foreign country under this law the President shall receive from the Tariff Commission its finding of the difference in cost of production in that country and the United States of any products affected by such agreements, which finding shall be submitted to the American Congress prior to the proclamation of the President."

Page 2, line 14, strike out the dash after the word "time" and insert thereafter "to give notice through the Tariff Commission that changes or modifications of any specified tariff schedule will be made within the powers so conferred upon him to remain in force for the period of 1 year: Provided, however, That such proclamation shall be subject to action by Congress at any time prior to the termination of such period."

Page 2, line 20, strike out the period after the word "hereunder" and insert "Provided, That no reduction in rates of duties on any agricultural product shall be entered into by the President affecting any article produced in this country until and after report received from the Tariff Commission that all importations during the preceding calendar year on such commodity did not exceed 10 percent of the volume required for domestic use."

Page 2, line 23, after the words "free lists", "Provided, That at least 60 days prior thereto public notice shall be given by the Tariff Commission of the proposed proclamation and all protests against said proposal shall be laid before the President by the Commission within 48 hours after its receipt."

Page 3, line 20, strike out all of subdivision B, section 2, line 20, after the words "shall be" and insert therein the following: "terminated within 1 year from the date of the Presidential proclamation unless continued thereafter by act of Congress."

Section 350, subdivision 2, lines 20 and 21, page 2, strike out the words "or decreasing."

Insert line 1, page 3, after the word "indirectly" "Providing, That comparative efficiency now existing between farm and other industry to be affected by this act shall be reported by the Tariff Commission to the President 60 days prior to any proclamation of reciprocal tariff agreements on any products named in such agreement. In reaching findings on comparative efficiency the Commission shall hold public hearings at which all elements affecting efficiency and entering into differences in cost of production here and in any other country to be reciprocally treated shall include:

First. Comparative living conditions.

Second. Comparative wages for industrial employment.

Third. Comparative living expenses in similar occupations here and abroad, educational opportunities, transportation of products, methods of marketing, droughts, payments for products and all other elements that may be of value in such investigation.

In reaching its conclusions the Tariff Commission may also call before it any economy, efficiency, or emergency expert who may have made special study of comparative value of Chile and synthetic nitrates used for fertilizer in such other countries as compared with the million pig nitrates furnished by the Agricultural Department to the clerks of the House and Senate for such action as may be taken at the next succeeding Congress.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order against all the amendments that have been read.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been done.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, the first amendment provides—

That no reciprocal agreement shall be entered into or negotiated with any foreign government that has defaulted in whole or in part with its debt payments due to the United States.

If this is adopted, it will prevent the nations that have defaulted in their debts to be included in any agreement. We have found their agreements are of little value and this is particularly true of those that repudiated their obligations.

A point of order has been raised against this amendment.

The second reads:

Line 23, after words "free lists", Provided, That no condition shall be involved in any such agreement which directly or indirectly relates to the cancelation, reduction, or substitution of securities for any portion of the public debt that may be due the United States from the other party to the agreement.

Here is the same amendment I offered in the committee that was there rejected by a vote of 15 to 10. I learn a committee amendment may be offered, but I am reoffering the amendment against cancelation.

The third reads:

Line 23, after words "free lists", "Provided any request or proposal for the cancelation in whole or in part of any debt due the United States from any foreign government so indebted shall be submitted by the President of the United States to the American Congress to be thereafter acted upon affirmatively by Congress before any proclamation is made.

This is a safety offer providing the amendment last offered is defeated and the committee fails to present its amendment against cancelation.

The purpose of the next amendment is to avoid the 40-percent discount which comes at the outset by requiring all tariff reductions to be based upon the value of the dollar at the time the rate was fixed by Congress.

Page 2, line 23, after words "free lists", "Provided that no reduction in tariff rates upon any American products shall be made except upon the basis of the value of the dollar at the time when such rate was fixed by law and not upon any revalued dollar as determined by Presidential proclamation."

The next amendment reads:

Line 23, after words "free lists", "Before entering into any agreement with any foreign country under this law, the President shall receive from the Tariff Commission its finding of the difference in cost of production in that country and the United States of any products affected by such agreements, which finding shall be submitted to the American Congress prior to the proclamation of the President."

This is in accordance with existing law and gives protection to the thousands of industries subjected to the terms of the bill.

The next amendment reads:

Page 2, line 13, strike out the dash after the word "time" and insert thereafter "to give notice through the Tariff Commission that changes or modifications of any specified tariff schedule will be made within the powers so conferred upon him, to remain in force for the period of 1 year: Provided, however, That such proclamation shall be subject to action by Congress at any time prior to the termination of such period."

This reduces any agreements to a period of 1 year, and in opposition to the 3-year term in the bill.

The next amendment reads:

Page 2, line 20, strike out the period after the word "hereunder" and insert the following:

"Provided, That no reduction in rates of duties on any agricultural product shall be entered into by the President affecting any article produced in this country until and after report received from the Tariff Commission that all importations during the preceding calendar year on such commodity did not exceed 10 percent of the volume required for domestic use."

This is to prevent any deluge of imports.

The others have been read and are sufficiently explanatory.

Let me say that my purpose in offering them at this time is so that they may be voted upon and be made a matter of record.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin practically rewrites the bill; and, of course, Mr. Chairman, a bill of this kind cannot be written on the floor of the House. The effect of the amendment would be to change the bill entirely and make it have just the opposite purpose.

Mr. FREAR. I am just making a record of objections to the bill, realizing that at the other end of the Capitol objections may have better consideration.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Would it be satisfactory to the gentleman from Wisconsin to have his amendments voted upon en gross?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; I so desire, for I know that to vote upon them en gross will be to save the time of the committee. I do this as a matter of courtesy to the House and am willing to stand on the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Frear amendments will be voted upon en gros.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendments were rejected.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HART: On page 2, line 23, after the word "proclamation" add: "increasing the present duty on sugar refined or otherwise below the duty existing on sugar on March 1, 1934."

On page 2, line 24, after the word "made" add the word "or."

On page 2, line 15, after the word "any" add the word "other."

On page 3, line 4, strike out the word "indirectly" and everything down to the word "Provided," in line 7.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, all this amendment does is to prevent the reduction of the duty on sugar or other commodities below the present rate with Cuba.

For some weeks we have had a sugar bill pending in the committee which was introduced a day or two ago; and we who represent sugar districts have tried to obtain a satisfactory agreement upon this allotment sugar bill, but so far we have not been able to accomplish that. The bill has now been introduced and I will say for the benefit of the committee it will close at least two factories in my State. Two are now closed because of the fight between Cuba and the Philippine Islands over the American sugar market. We were the innocent victims of that scrap over the sugar market in continental United States and now when we propose to put this sugar business on an allotment basis we are so reduced under the pending bill that it will force the closing of at last two large refineries worth something like $2,000,000 apiece, and either the abandoning of land upon which we are raising sugar beets, or its being turned over to the growing of other crops of which there already exists a surplus.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HART. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman has reference to another bill entirely separate and apart from this bill.

Mr. HART. I am telling the gentleman what is going to happen.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is the bill pending before the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. HART. Yes; and a very unsatisfactory bill.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is in no way related to this measure.

Mr. HART. May I say to the gentleman that the testimony in the committee was to the effect that sugar was going to be reduced when this bill was passed. This gives the President the power.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean the testimony before the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. HART. No. This was testimony by the Department of Agriculture before the Agricultural Committee. They made the statement that the President would reduce the tariff on sugar under the sugar quota bill. Until we get a proper allotment, we from the sugar States do not propose to give the President the authority to reduce the sugar duty or until we have had an agreement with reference to this sugar bill. The only chance we have to protect ourselves is in the pending bill. Frankly, I may say to my Democratic colleagues on this side of the House that there will be an opportunity, and the Senate can eliminate this amendment if they wish, but we in the House, representing our constituents, cannot stand idly by and see our industry traded off.

I am in accord with the general intent and purposes of the bill. We grow everything else in Michigan. I am not concerned about the rest of the agricultural commodities. I am not worrying about the dairying industry, but there is something sinister in this sugar legislation and always has been. It has always been used as a political football. Because of the capital which seems to be invested in the production and refining of sugar it has always been treated differently and has always been a highly controversial subject when it comes to a tariff. I am frank to admit that in the making of tariffs it is largely a matter of whose ox is gored, but in the case of agriculture they have not only gored the ox but they have slaughtered the whole herd.

I want to discuss now, for a few minutes, the only major agricultural product where the tariff affords any protection to the producer against foreign countries, namely, sugar. The present tariff against the world is a competitive one. It permits the shipment of sugar into this country, but still permits us to produce sugar from beets at a small profit. However, our Republican friends engaged in an imperialistic program acquired some insular possessions, where the standard of living was not upon an American basis. The standard of living in these insular possessions was not different from that in Cuba, yet they were embraced within our tariff wall.

Capital took advantage of this and financed a tremendous sugar-production program in Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands. The result has been a battle for the American market between Cuba and these insular possessions. In this battle the price of sugar, insofar as Cuba was concerned, would hardly pay more than the grinding of sugar-cane, sacking, and the labor and freight necessary to deliver sugar in New York. That the American beet-sugar farmer could not compete against this is self-evident.

This ruinous price even wrecked Cuba. The administration, in their economic program, desires to rehabilitate Cuba, as it is a source of outlet for many of our commodities. It also involves our relations with the South American republics, and I am willing to concede that the administration has a problem in the handling of our economic relationship with Cuba. This centers almost entirely around sugar.

However, I do claim that the administration also has an obligation and a duty to protect the American farmer and the American business man who is engaged in the production of sugar.

For several weeks a sugar-quota bill has been under consideration. This bill does not, in my judgment, treat the continental United States sugar producer fairly. The demoralization of the sugar market has been brought about on the one hand by Cuba and on the other hand by the rapid expansion of off-shore sugar. The continental sugar industry has been the victim of that fight, and now, when we purpose to declare peace, the sugar bill now under contemplation purposes to reward those who wrecked the sugar industry and penalize the victim of their battle.

To this program I cannot subscribe. I am willing to admit that placing the sugar business upon a quota basis and allowing those who do produce sugar to produce it at a profit is far better than to continue as in the past. During the past 10 or 12 years the sugar industry in my State has been wrecked. Less than 50 percent of the refineries were able to operate. Seventy-five percent of the operating companies were bankrupt as a result of the price war between Cuba and our insular possessions.

Now, I wish to ask my friends on the Democratic side of the House whether they are in favor of penalizing this industry, which affects 22,000 farm families in the State of Michigan alone, for the benefit of Cuba or any insular possessions. If there must be reduction in the quota of sugar and it is apparent that the reduction must be made, let the reduction be made by those who have expanded so rapidly that they destroyed the market. It is a wrong attitude to penalize the innocent for the benefit of the guilty, but that is what is taking place under the sugar quota bill.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am not inclined to criticize anybody who may feel, although erroneously, that some industry in his district or in his State might be adversely affected by legislation and rises in an effort to so amend the bill to avert any such disadvantage. May I say in this case, in my opinion, the gentleman from Michigan is unduly alarmed. I may say that even if he struck out the language which he proposes in this amendment the sugar interests of this country would not be in any better position than they are now. They might remove the preferential status from Cuba, but the removal of this preferential status from Cuba would not help the sugar industry in the United States. It would generalize this rate to all the countries with whom we have the most-favored-nation treaties. There would be no advantage in that to the sugar industry of the United States. I think that is sufficient upon that one point.

I refer to another part of the amendment which, as I caught it, had as its purpose that the President shall not have the power under this bill to reduce the tariff on sugar below the present rate now obtaining as to Cuban sugar. It would hardly be in line with good legislative policy to insert in this bill a provision that had reference to one particular commodity.

I hope the committee will not agree to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan. If we agree to this amendment, singling out one particular commodity from the general provisions of the bill, someone else could with equal propriety and with equal argument, perhaps, single out another commodity, and you cannot tell where this would lead. You would have a patchwork of exceptions to the general rule.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It might be well to state that this morning, before we began the consideration of this bill, unanimous consent was granted to representatives of the Committee on Agriculture that their committee may sit today and tomorrow during the sessions of the House and a specific time was fixed in which to report upon this new sugar bill.

Mr. HART. May I say to the Committee that that bill will be called up under suspension of the rules, and we will not have a chance to offer an amendment or to change an "i" or cross a "t."

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And it requires a two thirds vote of the House.

Mr. HART. We want to change the provisions.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. May I say in conclusion that I hope the amendment of the gentleman will be voted down.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEST of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The gentlemen on the other side of this House, judging from the number of times the question has been brought up, seem to take a special delight in injecting into the debate on reciprocity trade agreements that old-time controversy over sugar. It may be well, therefore, to spend a minute or two to point out to these friends that the President's action with respect to sugar certainly confirms the confidence we have in that great Executive now in the White House. When the Tariff Commission had completed a very elaborate cost investigation under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 on sugar did President Roosevelt merely follow its findings? Certainly not before taking steps to safeguard the interests of continental beet- and cane-sugar producers. Our Republican friends harp on the virtue of the cost-of-production formula. Well, are they aware that this formula showed that a reduction from 2 to 1½ cents per pound on sugar was indicated by the Tariff Commission's investigation? The President could have put into effect that reduction under the powers granted him by the so-called "flexible provisions." But he first took steps to have the Congress declare sugar a basic agricultural commodity and to have a processing tax of one-half cent—the equivalent of the indicated reduction in duty—imposed on sugar, thus giving a direct benefit to continental producers. This bounty to domestic sugar interests is, of course, a far greater benefit to them than a reliance upon the tariff in that it gives them a distinct and direct protection against the producers in our insular possessions. The imposition of a processing tax not only gives a direct benefit to domestic sugar producers but it also protects against lower prices which would result from putting into effect the reduction in duty indicated by the Tariff Commission's cost-of-production study.

As I have indicated, sugar producers in continental United States have been confronted with competition, not only from Cuba but equally severe competition from the producers in our insular possessions. From 1921 the Philippine Islands have increased their output from 300,000 short tons to nearly 1,200,000 short tons in the 1933–34 season, or 900,000 tons; Hawaii has increased by about one half million tons, and Puerto Rico by nearly the same amount. Sugar-beet producers during the same period have increased their output from about 1,000,000 to 1,600,000 tons, while the production in Cuba has dropped off very markedly. It would appear, therefore, that the Philippine Islands are one of the most severe competitors of the domestic beet-sugar producers.

The quotas adopted in the sugar quota bill attempt to hold in check the production of the producers in the insular possessions and give to the sugar-beet growers an amount which seems reasonably fair in the light of their production experience, which over a period of 13 years is given below:

	Short tons
1921–22	1,021
1922–23	690
1923–24	882
1924–25	1,091
1925–26	901
5-year average	917
1926–27	897
1927–28	1,081
1928–29	1,051
1929–30	1,010
1930–31	1,205
5-year average	1,049
1931–32	1,148
1932–33	1,351
1933–34	1,600

Much has been made of the testimony of Secretary Wallace, when during the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee on the tariff reciprocity bill, he was questioned about the domestic-sugar industry. He did not say anything that could be interpreted as recommending a destruction of the beet-sugar industry, but rather stated. I quote:

I have stood precisely and definitely before the Senate Committee on Finance for maintaining the beet-sugar industry on the basis of 1,450,000 tons, which is the average of the past 3 years. I do not think the beet-sugar industry should be allowed to extend further, because if it is expanded further it is doing it at the expense of our export agriculture; it is robbing the wheat farmer of a market for lard in Cuba. I think it is unsound economically to allow an industry of that type to expand further at the expense of efficient agriculture. (Hearings before Ways and Means Committee on H.R. 8430, p. 60.)

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HART].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska) there were—ayes 71, noes 86.

Mr. HART and Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers, Mr. DOUGHTON and Mr. HART.

The committee again divided and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 114, noes 121.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONDON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONDON: Page 3, line 16, after the word "part", insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the President shall take care in entering into such agreements that no tariff rates shall be reduced to such an extent as to eliminate or destroy any existing industry or business activity."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONDON. Mr. Chairman, it has been repeatedly said in the course of this debate, not only by members of the committee but Members on this side of the Chamber who have debated this question, that this bill would not cause the elimination or destruction of any industry, and that all the fears expressed in that regard were groundless.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if that statement is true, if there was sincerity on the part of the members of the committee that no industry would be destroyed or eliminated, then there can be no objection to this amendment. It will be a congressional direction to the President that we do not want to have destroyed any existing industry, any small manufacturing industry, or any agricultural industry, or any business activity. [Applause.]

You gentlemen who are interested in sugar can support this amendment, and you can support the President of the United States at the same time. The State Department has appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and assured that committee, and the committee has in turn attempted to reassure the House that no existing industry will be destroyed by this bill. Let us put that into the bill; let us put in the idea and thought expressed by the Secretary of State and the representatives of the State Department.

The gentleman from Nebraska said a moment ago that the provision in the bill with reference to excise treatment did not affect any agricultural interest, did not affect coconut oil, and stated that they took special care of seeing to it that the coconut oil excise tax was protected. I say to you, Governor SHALLENBERGER, we ask no more for the small industries in our districts. We ask the same protection that you were so solicitous about when you had the matter before your committee.

Mr. Chairman, the platform of our party does not pledge us to the enactment of an outright reciprocal trade policy, such as we have before us today. We are not compelled by party regularity to support this measure. I will support it if safeguarded by this amendment. But I cannot vote for this bill if I am told by the Secretary of State or any of his agents that there are industries in my district, because they are small, that must be eliminated on the ground that they are inefficient. [Applause.]

Industries are not inefficient because they are small, and Mr. Chairman, one of the small industries of my district is the jewelry industry. There are other industries, and if they are eliminated under this bill where will you send the thousands of men and women who will be made victims of such an agreement? They will be unemployed. Do you want to send them out into the agricultural districts? They are in desperate straits today. I hope, Mr. Chairman, my amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. It is absolutely impractical. It is impossible of administration. No one can tell when an industry fails whether it was the result of the raising or the lowering of some tariff rate. Many industries have failed in the United States in the last 4 years, and how could anyone determine how many of those industries have failed on account of the traiff? There would be no way of determining it.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I ask the chairman to yield that I might again read to the House the expression of the President of the United States himself which is directly applicable to the point raised by this amendment. In his message to the House on March 2 he said:

The exercise of the authority which I propose must be carefully weighed in the light of the latest information so as to give assurance that no sound and important American interest will be injuriously disturbed. The adjustment of our foreign trade relations must rest on the premise of undertaking to benefit and not to injure such interests. In a time of difficulty and unemployment such as this, the highest consideration of the position of the different branches of American production is required.

Mr. CONDON. Why object to this amendment then?

Mr. DOUGHTON. If the gentleman cannot take the word of the President of the United States when he has assured the country that no legitimate industry will be disturbed or crippled, much less eliminated, then he has his seat on the wrong side of the aisle.

Mr. CONDON. Why doesn't the gentleman agree to the amendment then?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Because it is impractical and impossible of administration.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. And I say to the gentleman from North Carolina that he ought to be on the other side of the aisle.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

The question was taken and on a division, demanded by Mr. CONDON, there were, ayes, 69; noes, 86.

Mr. CONDON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were offered and the Chair appointed Mr. DOUGHTON and Mr. CONDON to act as tellers.

The committee again divided and the tellers reported, ayes, 96; noes, 132.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as announced by the chairman of the committee a few moments ago, it is important that we conclude this bill within a reasonable time. I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEARS. I demand a division.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, is the Chairman a part of the railroading committee or will he recognize a proper request made of the Chair under the rules which he is supposed to follow?

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman making a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SEARS. I demanded a division and the Chair refused to hear me.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the demand came too late.

Mr. SEARS. Oh, no; it did not. The Chair had not announced the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: Page 3, line 1, after the word "lists" insert: "nor shall any proclamation be made relating to the tax on coconut or sesame oils."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANCHARD) there were—ayes 41, noes 98.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILCOX: Page 3, line 7, after the word "Cuba", insert: "Provided, however, no agreement shall be made with any foreign government whereby tariffs or import duties on products of agriculture or horticulture shall be reduced below an amount necessary to equalize the difference in cost of production of such products in the United States with the cost of production in such foreign countries."

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'MALLEY) there were—ayes 41, noes 83.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Those favoring taking this vote by tellers will rise and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Eight Members have risen; not a sufficient number. Tellers are refused. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Page 3, line 1, after the word "lists" insert, "nor shall any proclamation be made increasing existing rates of duty on any agricultural or industrial commodity."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SEARS) there were—ayes 37, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. SEARS. I make the point of order that the Chair did not count the Members standing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair always counts. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT: Page 3, line 1, after the word "lists" insert, "nor shall any proclamation be made decreasing existing rates of duties on agricultural or horticultural products, or on lumber."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAY: Page 2, line 15, strike out the word "two" and insert "with the concurrence of the Senate, by two thirds vote to."

Page 3, line 16, after the period, insert the following: "No such agreement shall become effective until the same shall have been first submitted to the House of Representatives and approved by the Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'MALLEY: Page 3, between lines 22 and 23, insert the following new paragraph:

"(c) No foreign-trade agreement concluded pursuant to this act shall contain any provision permitting directly or indirectly the shipment into the United States of any article manufactured or produced by a foreign subsidiary of a company organized under the laws of any State of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HENNEY: On page 3, line 16, after the word "part", strike out the period, insert a colon, and add: "Provided, however, That imports of such drugs, serums, confections, foods, condiments, and cosmetics previously prohibited as inimical to the public health shall not be subject to the provisions of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HENNEY].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Subparagraph (d) of paragraph 369, the last sentence of paragraph 1402, and the provisos to paragraphs 371, 401, 1650, 1687, and 1803 (1) of the Tariff Act of 1930 are repealed. The provisions of section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 shall not apply to any article with respect to the importation of which into the United States a foreign trade agreement has been concluded pursuant to this act. The third paragraph of section 311 of the Tariff Act of 1930 shall not apply to any agreement concluded pursuant to this act with any country which does not grant exclusive preferential duties to the United States with respect to flour.

(b) Every foreign trade agreement concluded pursuant to this act shall be subject to termination, upon due notice to the foreign government concerned, at the end of not more than 3 years from the date on which the agreement comes into force, and, if not then terminated, shall be subject to termination thereafter upon not more than 6 months' notice.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. DOUGHTON: On page 4, after line 16, insert the following new paragraph:

"(c) The provisions of this act shall terminate 3 years from the date of its enactment."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, there has been an amendment suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], as also the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], and many other Members of the House, and certain criticism directed at the bill. The committee gave careful consideration to these suggestions and in order to show that the bill is only an emergency measure and only intended as such, this amendment is offered by the committee.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am not adversely interested in the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I was particularly interested in the item which was offered as an amendment to the bill by my colleague from Florida [Mr. WILCOX], which had reference to our fruit and vegetable and sugar-cane industries, particularly fruits and vegetables in our State.

Under the present tariff arrangement we believe that the protection which our fruits and vegetables now enjoy is largely the reason why our producers are now in business. If existing tariff on our fruits and vegetables should be canceled and fruits and particular vegetables from Mexico and the islands, Cuba, and others adjacent to us permitted to enter duty free, we will just have to go out of business, I fear.

The American people would eventually be held up by excessive prices which would be charged for imported fruits and vegetables from the islands and from Mexico. After all, our Florida vegetables and fruits keep down the price paid by the consumer.

It is common information, Mr. Chairman, that the labor used in Mexico and in the islands to produce vegetables which come in competition with our Florida-grown vegetables is not altogether on a parity with the living standards and wages paid to our laborers. I understand as low as 25 or 30 or 40 cents a day is paid to the laborers on the islands and in Mexico.

In the State of Florida, where we endeavor to hold a high standard of living and maintain an adequate wage standard, it will be impossible for our growers to compete with foreign products that are made at such low costs of production. We believe adequate tariff protection essential to our agricultural existence.

I think it very unfortunate that this House did not, in its wisdom, adopt the amendment which my colleague offered. If you drive out of production the Everglades section of my State and the other vegetable-growing sections of my State, then the American people will fail to receive in the wintertime the vegetables which they are now receiving and will receive an inferior quality of vegetables grown in the islands and Mexico and will increase the peril which we have had from infestation by undesired pests and plant diseases from the islands, Mexico, and other foreign countries with tropical and semitropical climates.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman think if we imported, as has been rumored, 20,000 carloads of fresh vegetables from Mexico it would have an injurious effect on the truck farmers of Florida?

Mr. GREEN. Undoubtedly it would. The gentleman knows the cheap wage standard of Mexico. I believe it is common information that there are now forces at work in Mexico and in the islands undertaking to arrange for increased production upon passage of legislation favorable to foreign-grown products. I believe contemplation of passage of this legislation has already inspired increased production of these products by our neighboring islands and Mexico.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If we assist the gentleman in trying to protect the vegetable growers of his State, will the gentleman be so good as to assist the other lines of business of the other States? If the gentleman will, we are for him 100 percent.

Mr. GREEN. I appreciate the attitude of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and voted recently for the amendment to protect the sugar growers of the South and the West. I am particularly interested that the growers of agricultural products in this country may not be injured. We should yet amend the bill to guarantee protection to our growers. I have the utmost confidence in the President and have voted 100 percent for every one of his proposals, and even voted to sustain his recent veto. He will, I am sure, see that our own fruit and vegetable growers are given protection and given all preference over growers of foreign countries, but it is the duty of the Congress to write into this bill language to protect our growers and I hope you will join in doing this.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER to the amendment offered by Mr. DOUGHTON:

At the end of the amendment insert:

"Provided, That the President shall not be empowered to enter into any trade agreement with a foreign government or instrumentality thereof if such agreement have a duration longer than 5 years from the date this statute goes into effect."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment to the amendment of the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], for I believe that despite the fact that the country needs these powers to be delegated to the President because of the extreme emergency we are in, in order to increase our foreign trade, nevertheless, there must be some brakes of a definite character and nature placed upon those powers.

Early this afternoon I requested that an amendment be offered to the effect that the powers shall cease after 3 years. This amendment is being offered, but it is not sufficient, because it is possible during the very last week of the 3-year period for the President to enter into a trade agreement for 50 years, and no one could gainsay him. I do not say that the President will do so, but when you contemplate that we are surrendering to the Executive such substantial powers, we dare not, we cannot, if we have the interests of the Nation at heart, take any chances as to what the President may do.

Almost every nation that has given power to the Executive to make similar negotiations has put some sort of restraint upon that power, not only as to time but as to the ratification by Parliament or Chamber of Deputies. I am informed, as I read the testimony of the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sayre, that, for example, in England, although the Prime Minister has the right to enter into these trade agreements, if within 28 days the Parliament of England fails to act then and only then is the treaty or trade agreement valid. Even in Fascist Italy there must be a return, be it ever so formal, to the Chamber of Deputies before this agreement can become effective. In France the Premier has only within the year 1935 power to make these negotiations, and even then there must be a reference directly back to the Chamber of Deputies before negotiations may be deemed successful; in other words, there must be subsequent ratification by the legislative branch.

I ask the members of the committee to tell me the difference between a trade agreement and the treaty agreement as far as this bill is concerned.

Despite the fact that the term used in the bill is "agreements", I am quite convinced that such agreements contemplated by this bill are none the less treaties not only in contemplation of the Constitution, but also in contemplation of international law. It must be remembered that these agreements are not executive in character. They are not agreements, for example, affecting the entrance of ships of our Nation and, say, those of England into the respective harbors or ports of entry of the two countries. They are not agreements concerning sanitary arrangements affecting ships of two mutual countries. Such agreements are purely executive. The agreements contemplated by this statute involve duties, embargoes, quotas, and restrictions of the highest character. They involve, in a certain sense, taxation. They become in a certain sense, therefore, legislation. While I do not wish to belabor the point, I incline to the view that such agreements are therefore treaties and should be submitted to the Senate for ratification. The only point in raising this question is to show you how far-reaching are the powers we surrender and delegate to the President.

Tariffs are frequently stated to be provocative of armed international conflict. Therefore, in a certain sense, if this bill passes—and I hope it will—the President will have the right to exercise powers that may provoke war. In other words, we delegate to him the power to set up causes for war. That is why I am anxious to have inserted in the bill the additional limitation that no agreement shall have a longer duration than 5 years.

We certainly abandon many of our rights by this bill. We invade many traditions. Almost a sublime intelligence is required to bring the negotiations contemplated by the bill to successful conclusion. The President cannot do it all. We all have great confidence in his sincerity of purpose and statesmanship. But he must, in turn, parcel out his authority to others. The ability of shrewd trading is essential. Unfortunately, not all his agents in the State Department are shrewd traders. Not all of his agents will have his intelligence. See how dismally we failed in the liquor negotiations. When we attempted to trade with France our apples for their wines we certainly got the short end of the stick.

Withal, the emergency is serious and desperate. Desperate remedies are required. Nevertheless, we must circumscribe the powers given. In our desperation we should not give all. We must hold back some powers.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I shall take but little of the time of the House replying to our distinguished colleague from New York.

I hope, of course, this amendment will not be adopted. It strikes at the very heart of the purposes to be accomplished by this bill. If we are to so restrict the President of the United States in the exercise of the discretionary authority conferred by this bill, certainly no purpose can be served by the enactment of the legislation. Certainly we want the President of the United States when he meets the representatives of the other nations of the world to have sufficient latitude that he may be able to bargain with them and to enter into trade agreements in the interests of the people of our country.

This amendment strikes at the very purpose to be served by the enactment of this legislation, and I sincerely hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In connection with what the gentleman from Tennessee said, I want to say that I offered this amendment in the Committee on Ways and Means and it was adopted this morning.

The amendment submitted was along the lines urged by the gentleman from New York, but after a review of what this would do in its practical operation, realizing it would cramp the President in successfully carrying out these emergency powers which the circumstances existing compel us to delegate to him temporarily, and still wanting a temporary delegation of the power, I reached the conclusion that that portion compelling agreements to be made under this bill to expire in 3 years or in 5 years would operate in a way that would limit the President in successfully carrying out the provisions of the bill. The gentleman from New York and I are in complete harmony theoretically, but from a practical angle his amendment would defeat the purposes we have in passing this bill. I am in complete harmony with the statements of the gentleman from Tennessee, and I hope the gentleman from New York, whom I respect, will withdraw his amendment rather than compel it to be submitted to a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Kentucky: At the end of the bill insert the following new section:

"Section 3: Nothing in this act shall be construed to give any authority to cancel or reduce in any manner any of the debts of any foreign country to the United States."

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as heretofore stated by me, this amendment is offered for the purpose of making clear, even to doubting minds, that no authority is to be conferred upon the Executive which would permit him to reduce or cancel any foreign debts due the United States. Such authority was not conferred in this bill, but in order to meet this erroneous criticism, I offer this amendment as a committee amendment. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There are a number of amendments to be proposed to section 2. If this amendment is adopted creating a new section, the other amendments to section 2 will not be in order.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that in the event this amendment is adopted as section 3, it shall not preclude the offering of amendments to section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. McCARTHY: Page 4, line 5, after the word "act", strike out the rest of the paragraph down to and including the word "flour" in line 9.

Mrs. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, line 5, page 4, states that the third paragraph of section 311 of the Tariff Act of 1930 is not to apply to any agreement concluded pursuant to this act. I want you to know what material is being eliminated in the tariff bill. This is the provision that no flour manufactured in a bonded manufacturing warehouse from wheat imported into this country shall be withdrawn from such warehouse for exportation, without payment of a duty on such imported wheat equal to any reduction in duty, which by treaty will apply in respect of such flour in the country to which it is to be exported.

In other words, if this provision in the tariff bill prevails and eliminates the application of the third paragraph of section 311 of the Tariff Act of 1930, there will be an unfair discrimination against the millers in the Southwest. The State of Kansas is first in the Union in the milling of wheat and this will result in unfair discrimination so far as we are concerned, because of the use of Canadian wheat in these bonded warehouses. At the present time these Buffalo millers, using Canadian wheat, are obliged to pay the difference in duty and denies to them the benefit of the 35-cent reduction in tariff duties granted by the Cuban Government to the products of the United States. This protection to southwest millers will be eliminated if this provision in the present tariff bill prevails. As the bill stands you are restoring to Buffalo mills using Canadian wheat the full benefit of all concessions that may be granted to wheat grown in the United States when the flour is exported to foreign countries. This would augment the present price and transportation advantages these mills already have, and mean that southwestern flour could rarely compete with flour milled in bond at Buffalo from Canadian wheat.

I want to call your attention to the fact that at the present time a new Cuban treaty is being negotiated and the pending tariff provision, if made effective, would virtually repeal the clause in the present tariff law which now protects our millers.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We are not repealing the act insofar as it applies to Cuba, because that is exclusively a preferential treaty. So it will remain just as it is now and the language was framed with that particular idea in view. I think the gentlewoman from Kansas has an erroneous idea of what the effect will be. I can assure her that the situation as presented in the language of this bill still requires the Buffalo millers to pay the 20-percent tax on flour milled from Canadian wheat and shipped into Cuba.

Mrs. McCARTHY. The gentleman would be correct except for the fact which I am telling him now that there is a new Cuban treaty under negotiation and this provision in regard to countries granting exclusive preferential duties to the United States will no longer apply to Cuba.

Mr. FULLER. I may say to the gentlewoman from Kansas that that matter was brought up in the committee this morning and it is one in which I am very much interested, as well as the gentlemen on the committee from Oklahoma, Missouri, and Texas. There is quite a close question involved and we raised the question with the representative of the parties concerned and he first submitted his proposed amendment to us and then there was some question whether or not that would cure the situation anticipated, and we therefore decided that if there was any injury involved in the matter that we were liable to sustain so that it would be necessary to amend the language, we would let the Senate take it up after we had conferred further about it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would not rise in opposition to this amendment if I did not feel there were many discriminations against those in our part of the country. I am very much interested in the section of the country represented by the gentlewoman from Kansas [Mrs. McCARTHY]. I realize the extremely unjust discriminations contemplated and made possible by the enactment of this bill against the industries of this country. Witnesses for the administration admitted that some industries would be put out of business by reciprocal trade agreements. I do wish my colleagues on this side of the House—and I speak with the greatest interest in them and in their industries—would show the courage that they exhibited 2 days ago when they voted with us.

They are Democrats, they did not mean to say then they did not trust their President, they simply meant to say by their votes that with all he had to do he could not and did not watch all the rules and all the regulations involved. Their votes 2 days ago took care of several groups of people. This will help all. If they will only defeat this bill it will protect industry, both agricultural and commercial, all over the land.

With the tariff provisions in this bill you are striking at the very heart, the life of our industries. We must save our industries. If they are closed people cannot have work and people will be hungry. There will be suffering and even starvation. Instead of having commodity exports to foreign countries, if this bill passes you will have exportation of human beings—they cannot live in America. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentlewoman from Kansas [Mrs. McCARTHY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as another section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY: On page 4, after line 16, add the following new section:

"SEC. 3. No foreign trade agreement concluded pursuant to this act shall become operative until it shall have been approved by Congress."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAKEWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if, to be recognized, it would be better to get on the other side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, in the judgment of the Chair.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BAKEWELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BAKEWELL: On page 4, after line 16, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 3. Any foreign trade agreement concluded pursuant to this act shall reserve to Congress the right of rejection of such agreement at any time within 1 year from the time such agreement comes into force."

Mr. BAKEWELL. Mr. Chairman, this is a momentous measure. This bill gives to the President the power of life and death over almost every industry in New England, certinly over all consumers' goods industries.

This has been represented by its proponents as a measure which merely grants to the President the power which is already enjoyed by the executives of all other important trading countries. This is simply not true. Hardly any country in the world, where constitutional government still exists, has granted its executive the power which you are here proposing to give to the President of the United States. In the very report submitted along with this bill by the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means you will find that the evidence shows that in the great majority of countries where the executive is given the power to modify tariff rates by decree ratification by the legislative body is necessary. The executive is in many countries given the right to put the changed tariff rates into effect overnight, but ratification must soooner or later be had by the parliamentary bodies before the changed rates are permanently effective. You will find the same thing evidenced in the statement made by Mr. Sayre. A very limited number of countries have the authority to make these rates effective without the approval of their respective parliaments. Canada and British India are the only ones mentioned that have that authority.

Mr. Chairman, certainly in a matter of this importance we ought at least to safeguard our rights as well as they do in other lands where tariffs are changed by executive decree. We have no right to surrender this power absolutely to the President. If we do make this mistake, we ought at least to protect our industries to the extent of making possible a review by Congress.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, the Constitution provides that all revenue measures shall originate in the House of Representatives, for the separation and division of governmental powers, and further that all treaties must be agreed to by the Senate by two-thirds vote.

In the maneuvers here today, to evade the express, explicit, and plain provisions of the Federal Constitution, we are told that the agreements contemplated are not treaties to be confirmed and that measures producing revenue are not revenue measures to be originated in the lower House of Congress.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is not what an object may be designated or named. It is not what a lawyer may term his complaint, cross complaint or petition, nor his counterclaim, set-off, or answer; it is the facts plead in the instrument and the relief prayed for in the pleading that fixes and determines its status before the court.

You may call a horse a cow, but the application of the name "cow" will not make the animal a female bovine, or at least will not change a horse to a cow so that you can milk it, nor give the animal a status from which to make butter, sell buttermilk, start a dairy or a cheese factory. We must look to the characteristics of the animal and special requirements for use and service from which to determine its classification in domestic-animal life. Certainly it could not be seriously insisted that the animal is a cow while looking at its teeth to determine its age or examine its hocks to discover a blemish. [Laughter and applause.]

And so it is with the application of the provisions of the Constitution to the measures which bring in revenue to the Government and which are to be of solemn entry and binding obligations upon the contracting sovereign nations. The measures producing revenue, or revenue measures and the obligations here termed "agreements", are treaty obligations.

By this first amendment offered, I would require the agreements negotiated to be confirmed by vote of the Senate as other binding obligations between nations or solemnized and given the force and effect of treaties as provided expressly by the Constitution.

The second amendment was offered to require all negotiations and agreements entered into by the President to be submitted, first to the House of Representatives where all revenue measures must be initiated and followed by the approval of Congress.

To say that tariff measures are not revenue measures where their only validity is incident to revenue, and that contracts negotiated between nations are not treaty obligations, is a subterfuge, and evasive plea to avoid and evade the Constitution and leave it a bare optional theory to be adhered to or abandoned at will, to meet the temporary expediency of the hour.

I am in full accord with the object and purpose and the policy of this legislation. I am in accord with reciprocal tariff agreements. I am in accord with negotiations and legislation to recover our export trade driven from us by greedy tariff laws provoking trade retaliations against us. I am in accord with legislation to recover our export trade with China, India, and the Orient, deliberately broken up and destroyed by participation of our money-mad misers with British financiers and bankers, to force the international gold standard upon the unsuspecting, defenseless people of India, China, and the Far East, destroying the value of silver as money, the only money medium of exchange and the only means of these people by which to buy, take, and consume American products, the products of farm, mill, and workshop.

I am in accord with tariff legislation and with all legislation to open up the ports of European countries closed against the entry of American products by allowing our international financiers and bankers to multiply the burden of their private loans upon the people and taxpayers of foreign nations until Captain Fetch of the Army Air Service says that we are the most-hated Nation of the world. I am in accord with the tariff policy to rehabilitate our foreign trade as I am with the revaluation of gold to restore commodity values and the price level and the buying and consuming power of the people and normal prosperity to the country.

But while I am in full accord with all these, I am in more even accord with the Constitution under which I have taken an oath and obligated myself to uphold, maintain, and defend. I am in accord with the division of powers, the separation of the executive, judicial, and legislative provided for and set forth by our forefathers to safeguard against tyranny and usurpation in office. And I am further obligated as a Member of Congress under the oath of my office here not only to limit the taxing power to the legislative branch of the Government and to maintain the provisions requiring all measures to raise public revenue to originate in the House of Representatives, the body nearest and most directly responsible to the people. Without this check and restriction upon men, officials in one branch of the Government, actuated by selfish human nature, as all men are first actuated and imbued, would encroach upon the office of another, break down the basis, and separation of powers until all powers were centered in one body of men. The framers of the Constitution are not here to urge the preservation of the division and separation of powers. Thomas Jefferson and Jackson are not here to insist upon this constitutional check and restraint. And I am considering the provisions of this bill in the presence of their lingering spirits still abiding with us in the name of democracy.

While endorsing and supporting the President for a trial of his plan for prosperity, I am not accepting or endorsing the policy of Congress delegating legislative power to be exercised arbitrarily by the President, powers with which Congress itself is chargeable, and under the imperative provisions of the Constitution must assume and stand responsible to the people whom Members directly represent and to whom they must answer for what is done. If this power was only to be exercised by President Roosevelt, and if I knew Roosevelt would always live and would always be President, or some Coolidge or Hoover would always be President, I might vote to confer this power for a time. Such would be my abiding faith and confidence in these Executives, in the men who have served as Presidents. But life is always uncertain and politics is even more precarious, and this is a delegation of power not personally to President Roosevelt but the Office of the Chief Executive, to be exercised by any President in office occupying the place.

I regret and disapprove of the policy here urged of delegating legislative powers to the Executive, not because of conferring powers upon President Roosevelt nor of the dangers conferring power upon this President but because of conferring powers upon a good President to accomplish and carry out a good purpose will establish a rule and precedent and would prepare and leave the way open for the surrender and delegation of powers to a bad President for a bad purpose. Because this is a delegation of power, not to the President personally in office, but to the President in his official capacity to be exercised by any President in office, a successor in office, whoever he may be, and whoever, within the provisions of the power granted, could take advantage and exercise the powers conferred as well, whether he be an Abraham Lincoln or a mad Nero thirsting for autocratic power and bent upon a course of despotic rule.

I hope I have not been following Democratic leaders through all these long, weary, trying years through election campaigns in vain, without recompense, through defeat at the polls, one after another, to uphold the principles of Jefferson and Jackson and the sacred Constitution reposed to our safe-keeping. I hope I have not been following Democratic leaders only at the end of life's weary trail to be led or decoyed into a political ambush and to make an ignominious surrender of all that was sacred and cherished in the lives and public service of Jefferson and Jackson. I hope I have not come to see them deliver us to the very forces and predatory interests which Jefferson warned us to shun and evade, and which Jackson inspired us to resist and defy. I hope that I have not maintained this long confidence and abiding faith in their sincerity and honesty of purpose, in their unfailing duty to the cause of democracy, through all the recurring years of defeat, through winter's winds and summer's sun, through clouds, sunshine, and shadows. I hope I have not been inspired to courage, resolution and will by their declaration of purpose, position, and example to uphold the principles of Jefferson and the great basic fundamentals of liberty, freedom, and human rights.

I hope I have not followed them, only to find at the evening of life's day, I have been misled to follow mere pretense and now made to realize and know that the ideals I was taught to worship and the heroes I have followed were but an empty vision or mirage, only a vanishing dream of Jackson and Jefferson, and only to be crushed by hope deferred, and by ingratitude to suffer remorse for a life of loyal devotion and a long journey to do honor to leaders in the great common cause set forth in the Declaration of Independence, and for which the Federal Constitution was framed, was provided to make secure.

Regardless of how far the North differed with the people of the Southern States in their claim for local self-government and absolute State sovereignty, their earnest, consistent devotion to the cause commanded universal respect and admiration. And when the Armies of the North met the troops of the great Southern States at Antietam, Chickamauga, and the Wilderness, they knew they had met a worthy foe and that the spirit of the people was dauntless, fearless, and invincible. Because of this spirit and character of the people of the great Southland, they were always honored and respected by the North. And because of their enduring principle and character the soldiers in the blue honored and respected the soldiers who wore the gray. But time has brought a mighty change in the nature, spirits, and characters of men. The succeeding generations of the South have abandoned the ideals of their fathers. They are not only giving up their fathers' claims but are yielding supinely to each and every command for the surrender of their local power and prestige. They are not only abandoning the principles of local self-government in their affairs, but are inviting the centralization of power to take over and administer their private, civil, and industrial lives, and are compromising every principle and policy which gave dignity, honor, and prestige to the people of the great Southland.

The body suffers in pain from the violations of the laws of nature, as the soul and conscience suffer in anguish from disobedience to justice and right and the moral law. So we are suffering today in our economic and political life from a breach and violation of the sacred Federal Constitution, the vital basic law of the land. We are suffering from a disregard of the warnings and admonitions of Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence, and the makers of our constitutional law. Under article I, section 8, clause 5, of the Federal Constitution the power to issue money and regulate the value thereof is vested in Congress. The power to issue money and regulate the value thereof includes the vital economic power to control the welfare and destinies of the people.

Thomas Jefferson, the great commoner, said:

I believe that banking institutions—

Speaking of private banks of issue—are more dangerous to our liberties than our standing armies in time of peace. The issuing power should be taken from them.

And Andrew Jackson said:

If Congress has the right under the Constitution to issue paper money, it was given to be used by themselves not to be delegated to individuals or corporations.

And because of the violation of article 1, section 8, clause 5, in Congress surrendering the power over money and because of the disregard of the warnings and admonitions of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson, we are suffering today an economic panic, writhing in want, destitution, and distress in the midst of plenty and great abundance.

But there is another power, under article 1, section 7, clause 1, of the Federal Constitution, vested not only in Congress, the legislative branch of the Federal Government, but vested exclusively in the House of Representatives, the exercise of the taxing power, the power to originate and initiate revenue legislation. But this is not all of the Constitution. This is only a part of the Constitution. The Federal Constitution further provides for the separation of jurisdiction and powers—the legislative, judicial, and executive—the same to be exercised in severalty and within the separate powers vested in each, to safeguard against tyranny and usurpation.

If clause 5, section 8, article I, of the Federal Constitution, vesting the power to issue money and regulate the value thereof in the Congress of the United States enjoins no positive or exclusive duty, and can be delegated and transferred by Congress indiscriminately at will to private, selfish corporate interests to take and exact from the people their earnings, income, substance, and property; and if clause 1, section 1, article I, of the Federal Constitution providing that all legislative power therein conferred shall be vested in a Congress, consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives, affirmatively excluding the executive and judiciary enjoins no restriction of powers; and if clause 1, section 7, article I, of the Federal Constitution, vesting in the lower branch of Congress, in the House of Representatives, the exclusive province and jurisdiction to originate and initiate revenue measures in the exercise of legislative power, does not vest the lower House with such exclusive jurisdiction.

If all these unequivocal provisions made a part of the Federal Constitution, conceiving in self-denial, fasting, and prayer, adopted on serious, deliberate consideration, proclaimed as the supreme law of the land to be obeyed and observed inviolate under solemn oath and affirmation; if all these provisions of the Constitution are held merely passive and permissive, and discretion and directory only, enjoin nothing and mean nothing, then the flag with its contrast of colors, then the waving Stars and Stripes unfurled to the freedom of the wind, the emblem of exact and equal justice, the symbol of liberty and equal rights, is a flaunting rag and means nothing, is a mockery, a delusion, to mislead men.

And it is urged here in support of this surrender that the people for whom our forefathers sacrificed time, fortune, and lives, and for whom the delegates to the Constitutional Convention prayed, plead, and long painfully labored to safeguard them against the usurpation of powers, that the people are demanding and insisting upon this delegation of power to the Executive, this surrender of constitutional power and in disregard of the terms of the Constitution. And it may be true as claimed that under the tortures of this panic, in the third degree of want, suffering, and distress, the people are ready and willing to give up and sell their birthright of constitutional liberty for a mess of pottage of economic relief. It may be true that the people under the strain and torture of this panic and looking to the "fair God" of relief, like the Aztec Indians of Mexico in their welcome of the butcher, Cortez, may be willing to surrender up the check upon usurpation and subordinate liberty. But if this is true, as claimed, it only emphasizes our duty and obligations, as representatives acting for the people, to assume a greater duty and responsibility by reason of our greater opportunity and position to know and realize the dangers attending the withdrawal of constitutional safeguards.

It was taking advantage of the great emergencies of the times pending adjustment of the colonial debts that Alexander Hamilton, a reactionary financier, led George Washington, the hero of Yorktown, and the new Congress of the United States to make the first great surrender of the vested constitutional power over money to private individuals and bank corporations. It was taking advantage of the crisis of impending, threatening civil conflict that led the honest and patriotic James Buchanan, President, to harken and listen to the slave power until rebellion had gained a foothold, requiring billions in the Treasury and millions of human lives to suppress. It was taking advantage of the emergencies of the great Civil War, the pressing needs of the Public Treasury, that the special money interests of the times led President Lincoln, Chase, and Congress to surrender the constitutional power over money to private national bank corporations, and which Lincoln and Chase regretted to the day of their deaths.

It was taking advantage of the confusing reconstruction period that General Ulysses Grant, as honest in civil life and office as he was brave and fearless in war, was misled by Jay Gould and James Fiske to unwittingly participate in the Black Friday conspiracy, on November 27, 1868, alluring him into hiding while these kidnap outlaws and bandits held up the people of the country and robbed them of $20,000,000 by locking the Treasury and cornering gold. It was taking advantage of the money panic of 1907, the great currency stringency of that day, brought about by the money interests themselves in a mad orgy of speculation and to corner credit that Congress was led and induced to make the error and take the fatal step resulting in a complete and total surrender of the power over money to the Federal Reserve Board now developed into a private banking octopus. And now following the same strategy of the men always proclaiming the inability of the people to rule, always challenging the principle of free self-government and taking advantage of their own wrongs, they are urging the surrender by Congress of the vested power to initiate public revenue and the provisions of the Constitution for the division and separation of powers.

Coming up from the dark ages of feudalism and serfdom under kings and royal rulers, for 200 years the people have been fighting, battling, winning their way over the ramparts of tyranny and despotic rule, in a glorious triumphal march to the vantage ground of free self-government, and to the plains of a higher and more exalted civilization. But today in every country of the world the people, writhing in the pains and tortures of depression brought on by money-mad misers and Shylocks, under the covered and concealed power of money, are left suffering in want, destitution, and despair. And selfish, ambitious rulers are rising to take advantage of the conditions and crisis to gain power, place, and position, which at other times would be resented and defied, and the human race is being led back from liberty and free representative government; and premiers under the crowns of Europe, and Presidents, Governors, mayors, and executives of the Nation, States, and municipalities, moved by the spirit of the times to claim and demand the exercise of greater power under the pretense or delusion necessary, and required to cope with the panic and depression. And the glorious march of liberty and self-rule has come to a halt and retreat, and the people are being turned backward and to renounce their ideals of freedom and liberty and free government.

The delegation of legislative and judicial powers upon the executive branch of the Government is not only fundamentally wrong and in gross violation and disregard of every principle of free self-government and disorganizing the balance of governmental powers and a check or restraint upon usurpation, but is a policy casting unwarranted burdens and staggering obligations of office upon the executive branch of the Government commingling and confusing governmental functions disorganizing the even balance of powers. It is tearing down the framework of free institutions to eradicate the evils and abuses, otherwise to be remedied, and leaves Congress and the legislative branch without functions and obligations or responsibility for the course of legislation, and no longer answerable to a constituency upon their pledges made to the electorate.

This surrender and delegation of powers by Congress conferred upon the President of legislative and judicial functions to be exercised by the Executive violates every fundamental principle of democracy, rebukes the sacred tenants of Thomas Jefferson, compromises all that Andrew Jackson stood for, and makes free representative government a mockery, a delusion, and an empty claim, threatening not only for our form of government but the institutions of other people who have followed in our steps and example in safeguarding the rights of men if this bill is enacted into law. We are saying to the world our boasted rule of the people and free self-government is a farce and a mockery which we will not ourselves observe, and which we cast off with indifference whenever a test and trial of our governmental institutions comes.

Upon this one great basic rock, this Gibraltar in a tempest sea, they rested the foundations and pillars of the temple of human rights, to withstand the storms and assaults waged by greed for place and power. And then, when they had completed their castle of human hope and raised the Stars and Stripes to symbolize the blood of martyred patriots and the beacon light to follow, they committed to Congress, to the Members of the House and Senate, the treasure for safe keeping and to be held as sacred and inviolate not only for the security of their own power but to be preserved in vigorous form to safeguard the rights of the people of their own and generations to come. And this remains today the first duty, the one most supreme responsibility, the one most sacred obligation resting upon Congress, the House and Senate, upon the Membership of Congress, individually and collectively, a trust from which these Members cannot be absolved.

A study of the long tedious debates in the constitutional convention shows that the one subject or problem uppermost in the minds of the delegates was to safeguard and insure against the dangers of selfish human nature and the usurpation and abuse of power and, above all, the usurpation of power by the Executive. The object constantly in the minds of the delegates sitting in the constitutional convention was to make secure to the people what the soldiers had won and achieved in the sacrifice of blood, limb, and life, and at great cost of treasure to the Colonies, and to provide a restriction and check safeguarding against encroachments of power by the officer or officers of one department upon the functions or powers of another department. The provisions for which and around which all centered, were the division of powers and separation of jurisdictions to be observed inviolate in practice as well as theory, the legislative, judicial, and executive, and the stipulations for their separate exercise. And our forefathers impressed and realizing the flagrant abuse of the taxing power and to safeguard against such abuse provided that all tax and revenue measures must not only originate in Congress, but must originate in the lower House.

In the House of Representatives, where the Members remain nearest to the people, where Members must come up most frequently from the people, where the Members must be born again from the people, and to account to the people every 2 years. The exercise of the great taxing power, is the power to take from the people, the power to go down into the people's pockets, the power to take a part or all of their money, the power to take a part of their property, earnings, and income, or if need be, the power to take all of their wages, income, and property. This power was purposely and deliberately withheld, the power to originate or initiate revenue legislation, from the upper House of the Congress, from the Senate elected every 6 years, and above all and over all from the Executive, elected every 4 years, whose power was to be especially checked and the exercise of which restricted and restrained.

The principle, first and uppermost in the minds of the constitutional delegates, was shown to be principle and policy of government, the division and separation of governmental powers and which is shown by James K. Pollock, University of Michigan, authority on civil government, in Readings on American Government, page 30:

> In the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States, the first resolution adopted by that body was that a national government ought to be established, consisting of a supreme legislative, judiciary, and executive.

To the same effect above cited is stated by Finla Goff, Syracuse University, high authority upon civil government, in Readings on American Government, page 30:

> In the State institutions the idea of the separation of powers found their clearest expression.
> Massachusetts asserted that in the government of this Commonwealth the legislative department shall never exercise the executive and judicial powers, or either of them; the executive shall never exercise the legislative or judicial powers, or either of them; the judicial shall never exercise the legislative or executive powers, or either of them * * * to the end that it may be a government of laws and not of men.

The principle of the division and separation of powers was at the time of framing the Constitution as well as from and since that time has been looked to as a great safeguard of free institutions and self-governments, as shown by Rodney L. Mott, University of Chicago, recognized authority upon civil government in Material Illustrative of American Government, page 102:

> The Constitution distributes the functions of government into three branches—the legislative, to make the laws; the executive, to execute them; and the judicial, to decide in cases arising before it the rights of the individual as between him and others and as between him and his government.
> This division of government into three branches has always been regarded as a great security for the maintenance of free institutions, and the security is only firm and assured when the judicial branch is independent and impartial.

The division and separation of powers has long been held as a "check" to safeguard against the dangers of encroachments upon civil liberty and free institutions, as is stated by McLaughlin and Hart, of Harvard University, authorities consulted on civil government in Cyclopedia of American Government, page 295:

> Separation of powers, governmental practice.
> The theory of the separation of powers has a twofold significance in United States—one as a principle of governmental practice and one as a doctrine of constitutional law.
> As a principle of governmental practice it provides that the exercise of the several political functions known as the executive, legislative, and judicial shall be vested, as far as practicably possible, in different agencies or persons, which agencies or persons shall be, in general, independent of one another.
> The argument in justification of this principle has been that while thus endowing a government with adequate powers of control, the danger of oppression of the governed by those intrusted with this authority is minimized in that the cooperation of these independent departments is required for the purpose.
> Thus the legislative body does not execute the laws which it enacts; the Executive but enforces the orders given by the legislative; and the courts limit their functions to the interpretation and application of existing laws and for the enforcement of their decrees, and are obliged to look to the executive arm of the Government.
> As a principle of governmental practice, the doctrine is thus closely related to the system of "checks and balances" (see)—a system which finds elaborate application in the Federal constitutional system.

I again quote from the same authorities and publication, page 31, by Finla Goff Crawford, on Readings in American Government, to the effect that the fundamental principles of the division and separation of powers is the same as other methods resorted to to keep the grant of powers near to and safely within the control of the people:

In addition to the separation of powers another method used for the purpose of keeping in check the Government was for the grant of power for a short term only.

To guarantee security it was thought that power must be kept close to its true basis, the people. In this way the rise of arbitrary rulers could be prevented and the officers intrusted with power be made responsible to the people.

As John Adams once said, "Where annual elections end, there tyranny begins."

Everywhere there was manifested great jealousy of the State executive, and numerous restrictions were thrown around his tenure, term, and prerogatives.

And again quoting from Pollock, University of Michigan, to show the principle of the division and separation of power was made a distinguishing feature of the Constitution and recognized as a first and fundamental principle by the great jurist Story and commentator Kent, page 29:

The principle of checks and balances embodied in the National Constitution is explained here by Joseph Story, who was a member of the United States Supreme Court for 34 years.

The recognition of this principle is one of the distinguishing features of the American Constitution.

Story wrote these commentaries, as he said in a letter to Kent, "with a sincere desire to commend, and to recommend the Constitution upon true, old, and elevated principles."

In absolute governments the whole executive, legislative, and judicial powers are, at least in their final result, exclusively confined to a single individual; and such a form of government is denominated a despotism, as the whole sovereignty of the State is vested in him.

And to show that the separation of powers was a principle of vital and supreme importance and was made of special mention and prominence in the structure of the Federal Constitution and in no event to be compromised and deviated from. The same, next above authority is here quoted, page 30–31, Pollock, of Michigan University:

It has by many been deemed a maxim of vital importance that these powers should forever be kept separate and distinct.

At the time the Constitution was framed the separation of powers was declared fundamental and in no event to be deviated from or compromised in any manner whatsoever.

And further quoting from the same author at page 31:

In the constitution of Massachusetts, for example, it is declared that "in the government of this Commonwealth the legislative department shall never exercise the legislative and judicial powers, or either of them; the judicial shall never exercise the legislative and executive powers, or either of them; to the end it may be a government of laws and not of men."

But we do not have to wait to realize our apprehensions for the abuse of the surrendered power. The evils of the surrender of legislative power to be exercised by the Executive is already here at hand. Congress called to convene in special session soon after the inauguration last March to consider farm and industrial relief, upon full hearing and deliberation, found that the panic was caused by a failure of the buying and consuming power resulting from a fall of values and the price level. And on May 12, 1933, Congress enacted the currency provisions of the Relief Act, delegating certain powers upon the Executive providing for the restoration of the money supply, the object being to raise values and the price level, restore earnings and income to industry, and thereby the buying and consuming power. Accepting the provisions and grant of power, the President declared for the revaluation of gold, one of the alternative currency measures provided to replenish the depleted money supply, and finally, after 8 months, entered upon the administration of the gold-revaluation plan or program by taking the first or preliminary step.

But in the nature of the proceedings it was impossible for the President himself to assume in a personal or individual way the administrations of the measure declared for and which of necessity were left to subordinates, and with the inevitable result that the administration of the gold revaluation plan has come to a halt, standstill, and inertia, and Congress having surrendered its power to proceed upon its own initiative directly as authorized by the Constitution, is now waiting impatiently and in suspense and groping for other and new measures under which to proceed directly to raise commodity values and the price level, bring a return of earnings and income to industry and a restoration of the buying and consuming power.

But the policy of delegating and conferring powers, with which Congress should assume and stand charged, has not only failed to hasten farm relief, but the policy has been taken advantage of to work gross injustice upon the soldiers and to charge the President with the evils of the system which the President did not himself frame or establish and the abuse of which he is not responsible. And Congress realizing the error of surrendering its vested constitutional power to be exercised by the executive, has revolted in disapproval of the rules and regulations formulated, a purely legislative function enjoined on Congress, under the administration of the Economy Act, and is recovering back the surrendered power. In less than 3 months' time, under the administration of the Economy Act, the legislation was called for modification, and in less than 1 year from its enactment the whole power delegated and conferred has been challenged for recovery back for direct exercise by Congress itself by a surprising two-thirds vote.

Under trial of this delegation of power to the President it was found a mental and physical impossibility for any President or any one man to give direction or personal attention to the details of pension adjustments imposed upon the President under the Economy Act. It is plain to be realized and understood now that such powers conferred upon the President could only be exercised and administered indirectly by intrusting the same to subordinates, it being impossible for any one man in a personal way to give direct, personal consideration to individual pension claims. The President under the Economy Act was left hopelessly burdened and charged with the exercise of legislative, judicial, and executive powers which he could not direct, supervise, or control, but for the administration of the details of which he must stand charged and accountable before the country.

Our forefathers, throwing off the yoke of old despotic rule, set up and established a new form of government and demonstrated the ability of men to govern themselves. And to perpetuate these new forms of self-rule and determination and to safeguard against the encroachments of selfish human nature and a repetition of the tyrannies of old, they wrote out, agreed upon, and adopted a certain instrument in writing, which they ordained and established as supreme, declaring the basis and principles of the institutions which they had created, and which they called "the Constitution."

And, yielding to the irresistible force and power of our example of right and justice before the world, monarchies gave way to republics, kingdoms to free institutions, and harsh despotic rule to more humane forms of government, leading all Central and South America to renounce their kings and royal rulers, leading France and Switzerland to establish more free institutions, and liberalizing every government in Europe for the greater recognition of the rights of men.

The one first fundamental safeguard upon which all was based and founded and around which all others clustered was the absolute division and separation of governmental jurisdictions and powers, the judicial, legislative, and executive. Realizing the constant menace to human rights and that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, they forbid, by solemn imperative enactment, to be observed as sacred and inviolate as constitutional and fundamental law, that the powers vested in the one branch of the Government should never be held or exercised by the officials of another branch of the Government; that the Executive power held by the President should never be exercised by the legislative, Congress, nor by the judiciary, the courts; and that the powers vested in the judiciary and legislative branches, in the courts, Congress, and the legislative, should never be exercised by the Executive; all prohibited as fraught with greatest danger.

For over 100 years Congress has stood guard at the door and portal of the Constitution in jealous care to watch over the division and separation of governmental powers and to enforce the constitutional injunction against the exercise of prohibitive powers. And when Congress received the message from the President of the United States with his report of the state of the Union and his recommendation for legislation as prescribed and limited by the Constitution, his powers were exhausted and at an end. And in vindication of the Constitution and the sacred trust reposed in Congress to preserve inviolate the separation of the powers and to safeguard against prohibited powers and the prohibition of the exercise of powers, Congress has said, thus far and no further, shall the executive branch of the Government participate in or assume the functions of the House, the Senate, or the courts; thus far and no further shall the Executive assume the jurisdiction of the judiciary, of the power of the legislative branch of the Government.

When Cortez, the cruel Spanish conquerer, landed upon the shores of Mexico in 1600, the Aztec Indians of the country, following legend and firm religious belief, were holding festivals to welcome the return of their saviour, Quetzacohastl, the fair god. And the cruel, heartless, Spanish butcher, taking advantage of the religious belief and posing as the object of their devotion and assuming the character of the fair god, was welcomed with open arms and rejoicing as a savior to restore peace and happiness of the land only to restrain and imprison the king, to burden and enslave the people, to tear down their altars and temples of worship and to pillage and ransack the palace of its gold and priceless treasures.

But today, writhing in the throes of a great industrial panic or depression, struggling in the relentless grasp of money changers, suffering want, destitution, in despair, and told that all is a mystery. Congress and the people of the country confused in want and suffering in the midst of plenty and great abundance and looking for the fair god of prosperity to come in some mysterious form. And in this evil hour of their distress the money changers, the grasping misers and Shylocks, who brought this panic upon the country, and who have held and perpetuated its blight upon the people during all these long years, are now leading the Executive to demand and Congress to give up and surrender its powers and jurisdiction vested under the cherished Constitution.

And the misers, Shylocks, and money changers, the modern vandals of finance, are entering to despoil and break down the sacred covenant guarded in the Constitution to safeguard against selfish human nature, and which our forefathers urged and insisted, above all other obligations to be observed, should be preserved unimpaired and inviolate to withhold from the executive branch the exercise of judicial and legislative powers, and from the legislative and judicial branches the exercise of executive power, withheld and prohibited to them.

And with the breaking down of the barriers not only thrown up by the form of our own constitutional government but by the forms of governments of other people inspired by our example the money-mad misers and grasping Shylocks, the international financiers and manipulating bankers, are leading premiers, presidents, and governors to renounce the limitation of powers upon them and to claim assent and assume the exercise of judicial and legislative functions as well as the administration of executive power. And the world we lead by our beacon light and the world we inspired by our example to follow in the forms of our Constitution is reacting to throw off the safeguards of constitutional free self-government and to turn to arbitrary rule to gain relief from an unseen foe; and under the ruins of free self-government to reinstate the kings dethroned, to reestablish autocratic rule over constitutional and limited powers, and retrace the advanced step taken in the progress of free institutions.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, on the previous section I offered an amendment. I did not get time to discuss it because of the haste which the committee seems to want on this bill. It provides that no foreign-trade agreement concluded pursuant to this act shall contain any provision permitting, directly or indirectly, the shipment into the United States of any article manufactured or produced by a foreign subsidiary of a company organized under the laws of any State of the United States.

I am again offering that amendment to this section, in the hope the House will adopt it before passing the bill. Since 1929, $5,000,000,000 of American money has gone across the ocean to build factories to compete with our factories. More than 2,000,000 men have been put out of work by the American manufacturers transferring their factories to other countries. I do not want to see a reciprocal trade agreement made by anybody, including the President of the United States, that will take care of the cheap labor of other countries and replace our men here at home and still allow these deserting American industrialists to bring in goods manufactured by them abroad to come into competition with our loyal industries that stay in this country despite difficult times.

I think my amendment ought to be adopted. It will not harm the bill, but it will make it impossible for Great Britain or any other country to make conditions in reciprocal agreements that her employees in American factories and the products of the employees of those factories shall be included in the trade agreement with this country to the harm of our industries who have refused to be lured abroad.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment may be again reported for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Clerk again reported the O'Malley amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BAKEWELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, after line 16, add a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. No provision of this act shall operate to restrict the product or the manufacture of sugar within the continental United States."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that amendment in substance has already been submitted to the Committee and voted on. We have passed the point in the bill where it would be applicable.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I offer it as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is different from the one voted upon, referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER]. The Chair overrules the point of order and recognizes the gentleman from Idaho for 2 minutes.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, in 1917 neither Secretary Wallace nor anyone else would have said that the production of sugar in the United States was an inefficient industry. I distinctly remember that it was against the law, it was a crime for a man to own more than one sack of sugar. In case some world coalition might shut off our imports of foreign sugar, we might again see the time when we needed sugar produced in this country for the manufacture of munitions and to supply domestic consumption. For that reason I think we should not restrict the production and manufacture of sugar in the United States.

I wonder if Mr. Wallace has ever traversed the sugar-raising districts of Louisiana, and seen the huge investment in sugar plants and equipment for the handling of sugarcane and the manufacture of sugar. I wonder if he has traveled the railroads of the West and seen the extensive investment for the handling of sugar beets. I wonder if he knows anything of the huge investments in sugar plants in our western country. We ought not to be put in the hands of this big organization of capital, which controls the importation of sugar, but we should protect our own sugar industry. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAKEWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BAKEWELL: At the end of the bill insert the following new section:

"SEC. 4. None of the provisions of this act, nor any foreign trade agreement concluded pursuant to this act, shall apply to any articles which are the growth, produce, or manufacture of any foreign country or nation which has by law or official edict destroyed, restricted, or diminished the citizenship rights or property rights of any of its nationals because of his or her race or religious faith or creed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PARSONS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H.R. 8687, to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

MR. TREADWAY moves to recommit H.R. 8687 to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 274, nays 111, not voting 47, as follows:

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL—PASSAGE OVER THE VETO

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert a short table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement in the President's veto message of the independent offices appropriation bill that by the passage of the bill over the veto $228,000,000 was added to his Budget expenditures, I thought the House and the country would be interested in an exact statement of what the situation is.

I find these increases over the Budget recommendations of the President:

1. 5-percent pay increase February 1, 1934–July 1, 1934	$27,000,000
2. 5-percent pay increase July 1, 1934–June 30, 1935	63,000,000
3. Pre-Spanish-War pensions	4,000,000
4. Amendment 15, navy yards, arsenals, etc	9,000,000
5. Amendment 19, automatic promotions	10,000,000
6. Spanish War pensions	37,400,000
7. Direct service connected, World War	30,000,000
8. Presumptives, World War	9,312,500
9. To carry veterans benefits Apr. 1, 1934–June 30, 1934	20,000,000
	209,712,500
From this must be deducted the cost of the Spanish War pensions and the presumptives under the President's regulations of Mar. 27, 1934	60,000,000
	149,712,500
From this must also be deducted the savings which will be made because of the passage of the bill over veto [1]	100,000,000
Net cost	49,712,500

It must be borne in mind that the President by bad regulations—this was admitted by the President in his veto message—has practically wrecked the Economy Act.

First. The Board of Appeals, to which he refers, it is well known, is refusing to function.

Second. Thousands upon thousands of Spanish War veterans have been thrown in the discard without anyone in the Bureau even looking over their files to see whether or not they suffered a disability in service.

Third. The payments to veterans suffering from direct service-connected disabilities were cut 10 percent+$30,000,000—or an average of 25–30 percent.

This was not in the mind of even the most hard-boiled economy leaguer.

In view of the language in the veto message and the immediate placing back on the rolls of the World War presumptives and the Spanish War veterans by him, it must be assumed that the President's principal objection to the bill was because it carried the $30,000,000 for restoring the direct service-connected veterans to their benefits.

With that the Congress could not agree.

[1] This saving results from the extension of certain temporary provisions of the Economy Act, which would have expired June 30, 1934, if this bill had not extended them. No other bill providing for economies would have had a chance of consideration if this bill had failed of passage over the veto.

This is also in direct conflict with the pledge given by the President to the Legion in his address last October.

There are still $250,000,000 of savings as a result of the passage of the Economy Act.

If Congress had not taken the bit in its teeth and passed the bill over the President's veto at a very small net cost to the taxpayer, the President by bad administration and bad regulations would have completely destroyed the remaining $250,000,000 of annual savings we made last spring.

The moral is: Delegation of authority by Congress to the President invariably turns out disastrously.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the independent offices appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this is an opportune time to prepare a brief analysis of just what resulted in the way of additional benefits to veterans by reason of the passage of the independent offices appropriation bill, which carried the new legislation as well as the annual appropriations for the Veterans' Administration.

Veterans all over the country whose pensions were discontinued by the Executive order last March seek information so they can determine if their case is affected.

The pensions and compensation reinstated under the new law will be resumed as of March 29, 1934. No veteran will receive any payment until after May 1, because pensions are not paid in advance.

The new law does not make provisions for the payment of back pension or back compensation.

Nothing in the new law affects the World War veterans who were drawing disability allowance prior to March 1933. Compensation or pensions cannot be paid to World War veterans whose disabilities have not been held to be the result of their service unless it is shown that the veteran is permanently and totally disabled. In such cases it is also necessary to show that the veteran entered the service prior to November 11, 1918. If permanently and totally disabled and in need, $30 a month is allowed under the President's regulations.

The Spanish War veteran who enlisted in the service after August 12, 1898, and who did not participate in the Boxer rebellion or Philippine insurrection is not recognized under the new law. Although it is held that the War with Spain ended August 11, 1898, the final evacuation of the island of Cuba by the United States troops was not completed until February 5, 1904, and island of Puerto Rico May 12, 1904. The men that served outside the limits of the United States in a climate unlike their own many of whom suffered disabilities as a result cannot be considered under the new law, even though they were drawing pensions in March 1933. They are permanently removed from the roll as are their widows unless they have been recognized as having received their disabilities in line of duty. If their disabilities are held to be service connected, then they will be transferred to the roll under the general law, the rates being less than those recognized under the Spanish War Act.

I have been informed by Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, that the Veterans' Administration is taking immediate action to make the new veterans' provisions effective in all respects as soon as possible.

Primary consideration is being given to those persons who were removed from the rolls by reason of the provisions of the Economy Act of March 20, 1933, whose rights to benefits are reestablished by the new law. In all cases where it is possible to restore pension or compensation without the necessity of an administrative review, such action is being taken. Immediate attention is also being given to those groups of cases wherein a review of evidence is required before a determination may be made under the new legislation in order that an adjudication may be accomplished with the least possible delay to the veterans and their dependents.

It is estimated by General Hines that approximately 330,000 World War veterans, 180,600 Spanish War veterans, and 34,900 dependents of Spanish War veterans will be affected by this legislation. Briefly, the following is what the Congress has done:

Section 26 of the new law reinstates the former compensation rates for totally blind World War veterans except where the veteran is being furnished hospital care by the Government and except as to cases involving fraud, mistake, or misrepresentation.

Section 27 provides for the payment of compensation to those persons who on March 19, 1933, had established service connection under section 200 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, and reenacts the provisions of that section as to such cases, except where the person entered the service subsequent to November 11, 1918, where clear and unmistakable evidence discloses that the disease, injury, or disability had inception before or after the period of service, unless there was aggravation, or where the prior service connection had been established by fraud, clear or unmistakable error, or misrepresentation; but, as to all cases embraced by these three exceptions, all reasonable doubt is to be resolved in favor of the veteran and the burden of proof is to be upon the Government. The payment is to be at 75 percent of the amount payable in such cases on March 19, 1933.

Section 28 provides for the restoration of the World War rates in effect on March 19, 1933, for service-connected disability, except that reduction is permitted in accordance with regulations pertaining to payment of pension to men in hospitals. It perpetuates the rating schedule in effect on March 19, 1933, under which ratings are based as far as practicable upon the average impairment of earning capacity in civil occupations similar to the occupation of the veteran at time of enlistment. It further provides for service connection in death cases for the widows and children of those veterans who died prior to the enactment of the new act, and who, if living, would be in a position to reestablish service connection thereunder.

The limitations as to receipt of pension and salary by Government employees and as to the 50-percent reduction of benefits while any person entitled thereto resides outside the continental limits of the United States are not for application in these cases.

Section 29 amends section 6 of the Economy Act of March 20, 1933, as amended, by adding a proviso authorizing hospitalization or domiciliary care within the limitations existing in Veterans' Administration facilities of any veteran of any war not dishonorably discharged who is suffering from disability, disease, or defect, and who is in need of hospitalization or domiciliary care and is unable to defray the necessary expense therefor, including transportation to and from the institution. It provides that the statement under oath of the applicant as to his inability to pay for the service sought shall be accepted as sufficient.

Section 30 provides as to those veterans of the Spanish-American War, who entered service on or before August 12, 1898, and persons who served in the Boxer rebellion or Philippine insurrection, who were on the rolls March 19, 1933, receiving pension for disability or age by virtue of the new law are entitled to receive not less than 75 percent of the pension being paid them on March 19, 1933, subject to the limitation requiring exemption from Federal income tax and as to Federal employees, the limitation that not more than $6 per month can be paid such employees, if his salary, if single, exceeds $1,000, or, if married, $2,500. The provisions pertaining to payment of pension to men in hospitals as established under Public, No. 2, and the veterans' regulations are applicable to these cases. The benefits of this amendment do not extend to disabilities resulting from willful misconduct. The limitation as to the 50-percent reduction of benefits while any person entitled thereto resides outside the continental limits of the United States is not for application in these cases. The new law does not reinstate the pensions of remarried widows. While this section applies only to the veteran it is expected the Veterans' Administration will rule the widow whose deceased husband would be entitled to pension if alive will receive her old pension less 25 percent.

Section 31 reestablishes the provisions of section 213 of the World War Veterans' Act, whereby a person who is injured as a result of training, hospitalization, or medical or surgical treatment or examination is awarded compensation on the same basis as if the condition were incurred in the military or naval service. The application must be made within 2 years after the injury or aggravation or death or after the passage of the act, whichever is the later date.

Section 32 repeals the last sentence of section 9 of the Economy Act, which barred persons in receipt of benefits from participating in any determination or decision with respect to claims for benefits.

Section 33 changes the title of payments to be made in service-connected cases of World War veterans from "pension" to "compensation."

Section 34 provides that payments shall be effective from date of passage of the act.

Section 35 provides for the payment of those insurance claims which have been determined to be payable prior to but in which payment had not commenced on March 19, 1933.

THE BILL PROVIDING FOR RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS WILL STIMULATE OUR FOREIGN TRADE AND SPEED NATIONAL RECOVERY

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss the bill giving the President power to enter into commercial agreements with foreign nations, in order to expand the market for products of the United States, "to overcome domestic unemployment and the present economic depression, and to increase the purchasing power of the American public."

THE TREMENDOUS DECLINE IN WORLD TRADE HAS BEEN ONE OF THE CHIEF CAUSES OF A WORLD-WIDE ECONOMIC DEPRESSION

During the last few years the United States and the world have been experiencing an unheard-of economic depression due to the tremendous shrinkage of world trade. In 1933, as compared with 1929, world trade declined 70 percent in volume and 35 percent as measured in dollars. In 1929 the trade of the world, measured by total imports, amounted to $35,606,000,000 as against $11,937,000,000 in 1933. That means that from 1929 to 1933 world trade shrunk from a total of thirty-five and one half billion dollars to one third, or a total of about $12,000,000,000.

If world trade from 1929 had advanced at the usual proportion, it would have amounted to about $50,000,000,000 in 1933, as against an actual trade of only $12,000,000,000.

IN 4 YEARS INTERNATIONAL TRADE WAS REDUCED BY $40,000,000,000

You will notice that from 1929 to 1933 international trade has been reduced by $40,000,000,000. That means that world production has been reduced by $40,000,000,000. It also means that world consumption has been reduced by $40,000,000,000. The reduction of production and consumption, of course, means the lowering of the standard of living all over the world; and if you consider the colossal reduction of $40,000,000,000 every year in international world trade, you will understand how greatly the standard of living of most of the people has been lowered not only in the United States but all over the world.

THE UNITED STATES HAS LOST VAST SUMS THROUGH THE DECLINE OF ITS EXPORTS AND IMPORTS

Now, we cannot have better times unless we have more production, more consumption, more exports, and a higher standard of living.

Let us look at the trade of the United States. From 1925 to 1929 the total export trade of the United States increased from a little less, to a little more, than $5,000,000,000. Its import trade, during the same years, hovered between $4,000,000,000 and $4,400,000,000. There has been a colossal shrinkage in that trade. Whereas the exports of the United States in 1929 were $5,240,000,000, the exports in 1933 amounted to only $1,000,675,000. The imports into the United States in 1929 amounted to $4,399,000,000; they fell in 1933 to $1,499,000,000.

Not only has the total foreign trade of the United States been reduced to an incredibly low figure, but the share of the United States in international trade has been considerably reduced. From 1929 to 1932 the American share of the export trade of the world decreased from 15.61 percent to 12.39 percent; in imports the American share decreased from 12.19 percent in 1929 to 9.58 percent in 1932.

Not only has the foreign trade of the United States been tremendously decreased, but America today has a much smaller proportion of the foreign trade than it previously enjoyed. The American share has been decreased, whereas the share of England, Belgium, France, and other countries has increased.

ECONOMIC EFFECTS OF THE DECLINE OF OUR FOREIGN TRADE

This is an alarming situation. The decrease of our foreign trade means the discharge of thousands and thousands of industrial workers in Pittsburgh, and all over the United States. It means unemployment, and the misery and suffering that go with it. In the words of the President, contained in a message which he sent to the Congress on March 2, 1934:

> This has meant idle hands, still machines, ships tied to their docks, despairing farm households, and hungry industrial families. It has made infinitely more difficult the planning for economic readjustment in which the Government is now engaged.

Other countries have been able to gain a larger proportion of the foreign trade which they formerly had by entering into mutual trade agreements with other nations. So far the United States has been unable to do so because foreign-trade agreements could not be negotiated by the President without being subject to long and cumbersome delay in obtaining approval in the United States Senate—a delay which often lasted for years.

THE NEED FOR SPEED IN NEGOTIATING RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS

You cannot make trade agreements unless you can conclude these agreements with reasonable speed. The machinery of obtaining a fair share of the international trade is by mutual or reciprocal agreement, as the President said in his message to Congress:

> Other governments are to an ever-increasing extent winning their share of international trade by negotiated reciprocal trade agreements. The American Government must be in a position to bargain for that place with other governments by rapid and decisive negotiations based upon a carefully considered program.
> If the American Government is not in a position to make fair offers for fair opportunities, its trade will be superseded. If it is not in a position at a given moment rapidly to alter the terms on which it is willing to deal with other countries, it cannot adequately protect its trade against discriminations and against bargains injurious to its interests.

In most countries in Europe, and all over the world, the executive has the power to negotiate such trade agreements.

POWERS GRANTED THE PRESIDENT BY THIS BILL

The bill considered by the House of Representatives provides that the President of the United States shall have the following powers:

First. To enter into foreign-trade agreements with foreign governments.

Second. To modify duties and import restrictions.

Here the President's power is limited. Under the bill he cannot increase duties or decrease them by not more than 50 percent of the existing rate of duty. He cannot declare that any article that now must pay a duty shall come in free of duty, nor does he have the power to place a duty on goods at the present time duty-free.

The purpose of the entire bill is to give to the President power to negotiate trade agreements with other nations. The President is given the power to grant certain concessions to products of foreign nations, provided that the foreign country in question will admit certain products manufactured in the United States. The President is to have limited powers over our exports and imports, so that our industry may be stimulated and our agricultural surplus disposed of.

A very important amendment to the bill was offered by the Ways and Means Committee, and was adopted by the House. The amendment provides that the President shall have these powers for a period of only 3 years from the passage of this act.

The committee also adopted an amendment that under no consideration could we enter into a trade agreement which in any way canceled or reduced foreign debts.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT WILL EXERCISE THE POWERS GRANTED HIM UNDER THIS BILL WITH PRUDENCE AND WISDOM

I believe that the American people have full trust in Franklin D. Roosevelt. They know that he will enter only into such trade agreements as will be of benefit to this Nation. The people of the United States overwhelmingly elected Mr. Roosevelt President of the United States. He has since proved that he is deserving of that confidence. We can certainly rest assured that in any negotiations and trade agreements he is guided by the interest of the industries and commerce of the United States, and by the benefit of our country as a whole.

In this connection I want to quote again the message sent by President Roosevelt to the House of Representatives:

> The exercise of the authority which I propose must be carefully weighed in the light of the latest information so as to give assurance that no sound and important American interest will be injuriously disturbed. The adjustment of our foreign-trade relations must rest on the premise of undertaking to benefit, and not to injure, such interests. In a time of difficulty and unemployment such as this the highest consideration of the position of the different branches of American production is required.

The power granted to the President by this act is in line with precedents established since 1794. The President of the United States is given powers to modify to some extent the laws relating to duties and imports into the United States. This act carries out a policy which has been followed by the United States in many instances in the past.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE

Mr. STUDLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one half minute to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. STUDLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. STUDLEY. Mr. Speaker, on last Saturday, March 24, I was called to Wheeling, W.Va., to attend the funeral of a member of my family. I was not able to return to the House on Tuesday the 27th to vote on the independent offices appropriation bill. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE STATEMENTS WITH REFERENCE TO GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (Rept. No. 1105) on House Resolution 317:

House Resolution 317

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of five Members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

SEC. 2. The committee is authorized and directed to summon Dr. William A. Wirt, of Gary, Ind., before it, and to require him to reveal the source of statements he has made to the effect that the United States is in the process "of a deliberately planned revolution", and to the effect that certain officials or employees of the Government are attempting to thwart the program of national recovery in the United States; and the committee is authorized and directed to bring before it all officials or other persons alleged by Dr. Wirt to have given him said information, or to be connected in any way with said activities, and to examine them as to the truth or falsity of the statements made by Dr. Wirt; and to summon and examine such other witnesses and make such further investigation in connection with such statements and the reasons and persons actuating the same as the committee in its discretion may deem advisable.

SEC. 3. The committee shall report to the House during the present session of Congress the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations, including such recommendations for legislation, as it deems advisable.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present session of Congress in the District of Columbia as a whole or by subcommittee, at such times, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures not in excess of amounts made available for the purposes of this resolution, as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman and shall be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United Sates.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution, House Resolution 317.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania made an agreement as to the time to be used on this resolution. We on this side are anxious to dispose of this matter as speedily as possible, due to the lateness of the hour and due to the fact that I understand we are to adjourn over until Monday. We are willing to take very little time. I should like to ask if the other side will be content with 10 minutes?

Mr. RANSLEY. I have already claimed time on this side, and, owing to the verbal agreement between the gentleman and myself, I have promised that time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There is no question but that the gentleman is entitled to 30 minutes, if he desires it. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, this is but a simple resolution needing very little explanation, but it might interest the Members of the House to know how this came up.

Last Friday before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce a gentleman by the name of Rand appeared and in the course of his remarks he made the statement that there were men in Washington in the Government employment who intended to "crack down" on business. I immediately called him and asked him who they were, and from that it led on until he read into the record what he called a letter from Dr. Wirt, in Indiana, but which, in fact, was not a letter but some kind of a manuscript sent out evidently to a certain organization of some description. In that purported manuscript of Dr. Wirt, among the statements made were some like this, that he, Dr. Wirt, in talking with some of the so-called "brain trusters" who were employed by the Federal Government in Washington, had told him that for certain ulterior motives they would attempt to thwart recovery; that they would prolong and have starvation, and do everything, according to Dr. Wirt's statement, detrimental not only to the Government of the United States but to the people as well. I immediately asked for the names of those men. Mr. Rand could not give them. He stated that he assumed who they were. He said he had telephoned that morning to Dr. Wirt. I said, "Do you mean, after having a serious charge like this in your possession, that you never had curiosity enough to find out who those men were?" He said he assumed who they were.

In justice to the administration, I know that every Member on both sides of this aisle would like to know if there is anyone employed by the Federal Government so degraded in character and mentality who would make statements of the kind read by Rand. If, on the other hand, the statements made by Dr. Wirt are not true, then in justice to the hundreds of Federal employees it should be known.

I introduced this resolution primarily for the purpose of bringing him here and making him put up or shut up, one or the other. I am not in the habit of being taken off my feet and going after mythical and imaginary things.

When any man claiming to be a patriotic citizen of this Republic, representing a great organization, comes before a committee of Congress and makes serious charges against any of the governmental employees, I care not who he is or they are or to what party they belong, then I think that the Congress of the United States should know it. That is the primary purpose of this resolution—to find out the truth or falsity of these statements.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. As far as I know there is no opposition to the resolution in itself. The only question in my mind is whether the resolution as drawn is broad enough to cover the entire subject and will get the information the gentleman himself seeks.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I think it is for that purpose.

There seems to be a doubt in the gentleman's mind. How broad would the gentleman make it; how far does the gentleman think the House should go?

Mr. SNELL. I do not think there should be any limitation when you start an investigation of this character. If you are going into it I think you ought to go clear through. If it is of sufficient importance for Congress to authorize an investigation, I think you should have full power to investigate the whole subject in connection with these remarks.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am trying to cover the whole subject. If there were any evidence of similar testimony given before another committee of Congress I would be in favor of investigating that too; but, as the gentleman from New York well knows, it would be impossible to go into all the wild remarks that may be going around.

Mr. SNELL. I admit that, and those have been investigated on previous occasions. Is the gentleman satisfied in his own mind that this resolution is sufficiently broad to cover anything that might grow out of the statements made by Wirt before this committee?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I think it is.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Granting that the resolution is broad enough to cover the particular statement in question, is the resolution broad enough also that the special committee may ascertain whether the gentleman is a man acting independently and therefore totally devoid of a sense of humor, or whether he is acting as a representative of the Steel Trust, which has a lobby here trying to kill a measure in which the administration is vitally interested, the securities bill? [Applause.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. I may say to the gentleman in justice to Dr. Wirt, because I believe in being fair, that in the rest of this manuscript—and I have read it, but it has not been published in the press—he very vigorously condemns the action of the exchanges. Therefore, I do not think it was sent out for that purpose; but it may have been by Mr. Rand's idea, just using part of it in the RECORD. In justice to Dr. Wirt, I think if the gentleman from Minnesota read the whole manuscript he would not feel that that was his object.

Mr. KVALE. I think it is very important that the investigation reach not only the individual who made the charge, but the charge itself.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Along this line, I think we would have authority under this resolution to recommend to the House that certain action be taken as indicated by the results of the investigation. I believe that any man who comes here representing an organization, an industry, or group of people, previous to appearing before a committee of Congress should be required to file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives a statement as to what organization he represents.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman believe that his resolution is broad enough to call before this special committee such employees or members of the present administration whose names have been suggested in various ways as undesirable?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No; I do not believe it is broad enough for that, but I think it is broad enough to reach the three, four, or five men who may be involved and to bring them in.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is what I want to know.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Certainly.

Mr. KVALE. In view of the fact the President is supposed to have made the statement himself, is the resolution broad enough to bring him before the committee?

Mr. BULWINKLE. The President of the United States never said he would prolong starvation, nor can any unpatriotic or un-American statement ever be attributed to him. This resolution is what I am talking about; this is what I want. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that for one I have never been able to get very much worked up over this resolution or over the statements alleged to have been made by Dr. Wirt. I am a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and was present at the meeting and heard the remarks of James H. Rand, Jr., the chairman of the self-appointed committee for the Nation, but there was nothing new in the statements that he quoted as having been made by Dr. Wirt. Rumors to the same effect have been in circulation and have been discussed by the newspapers and magazines of the country for months. I do not know whether the "brain trust" is having a nightmare or a brain storm, such as Dr. Wirt and those who hold the same opinion as he does think it is, or whether Dr. Wirt and those who believe as he does are having one; but I am satisfied that whichever may be the case, that in due course the people of the country will take care of the situation. They will take care of it in their own way as soon as they become convinced upon the matter, and it will make little difference to them in arriving at a conclusion, whether a committee of this House makes an investigation such as this resolution proposes or not.

I do think that there are distributed throughout the executive and administrative branches of the Government at the present time too many persons without adequate practical or business training and experience for the duties which have been entrusted to them. They have not had sufficient training and experience to justify entrusting to them the settlement of the destinies of the people to any such extent as has been done. There are too many in the executive departments at present who think they know what is best for the people better than the people themselves do. They do not trust the people and their representatives to pass upon the laws to regulate and govern themselves and their business. Their attitude was well described in a speech which I heard a gentleman from Texas make the other day to the dairymen assembled here in Washington last week. He went on to say that he had been milking cows for 25 years and that he thought he knew something about milking cows, but he went down to the Agricultural Department and talked with the A.A.A. authorities there. He protested against some of the codes or some of the provisions of the codes that had been promulgated to govern the dairy industry. He was told in substance that he did not know what he was talking about. He said they told him something like this: "You think you know how to milk cows. You think you know what is best for the dairy industry, but you are all wrong. You think you know what is best, but we know."

I fear that is the attitude of too many people who are now in key positions throughout the Government, but it did not take the charges of Dr. Wirt to bring that situation to the attention either of Members of Congress or of the country. It was well known before anyone ever heard of Dr. Wirt.

I am neither a proponent nor an opponent of this resolution, although I shall vote for it. I may say, however, that I think that if any investigation is going to be made at all it should be a thorough one. There ought to be no attempt to gloss over the situation or to whitewash any one in connection with it. Unless it is complete it will be worse than useless and unsatisfactory to the country. It has to go further than an examination of Dr. Wirt and the individuals named by him. These rumors that have been going over the country, and especially in Washington, must be traced down, and every witness should be called before the committee who can give information about them, whether he is known to Dr. Wirt or not. The special committee should bear in mind that Dr. Wirt is not the subject matter of the investigation. Neither his personality nor his motive in making these charges is of any great significance or materially. Are the charges true? is the important question. As was stated in the first sentence of an editorial of the New York Herald Tribune this morning:

> The efforts to smear Dr. Wirt and to whitewash the "brain trust" should not be permitted to distract attention from the basic charges in Dr. Wirt's letter.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman from Michigan mean to say that there are efforts being made to whitewash somebody in the administration merely on the statement of Dr. Wirt?

Mr. MAPES. Oh, no. I am not saying anything of that kind. I am saying that the committee should be careful not to convey the impression that any such thing is being attempted.

It should be clearly understood that this is not a partisan matter. Every step that has been taken in the matter has been taken at the instigation and upon the initiative of some Member of the dominant political party in the House. It was a distinguished Democratic member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce who took the initiative, and who, as I understand it, asked the chairman of the committee to bring before the committee Mr. Rand. It was Mr. Rand's statement that brought forth these charges of Dr. Wirt. The distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, Major BULWINKLE, a Democrat, introduced the resolution for this investigation. The Democratic Rules Committee reported the resolution to the House. The rest of us have simply gone along as interested observers and, as I say, speaking for myself only, I am not excited about the matter. I shall vote for the resolution, but I am in no sense a special advocate of it.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FOULKES].

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, my district in southwestern Michigan goes to the Indiana line, and Dr. Wirt is well known to the residents of my district. I have had some correspondence with this gentleman and I shall read a short statement for the benefit of the House.

Dr. Wirt has expressed great indignation at my assertion that he is either a Hitler agent or accidentally playing into the hands of those engaged in Nazi propaganda in this country. There is no occasion for him to get excited. I said before, and I repeat now, that if Dr. Wirt is not an agent of Hitlerism in America he is unconsciously serving it as well as any paid tool could serve it. My statement was a reasonable one and must appeal to all serious-thinking people. It is quite possible that Dr. Wirt does not intend to aid Hitlerism and does not realize he is doing so, but the net results are the same. Whether I touch off dynamite accidentally or with deliberate intent the result is identical. One gets his fingers burned playing with fire whether he knows what he is doing or not.

Let me also repeat my charge of the other day that Nazi propagandists, informers, and organizers are swarming throughout the country and seeking to poison people's minds preparatory to an attempt to set up a dictatorship not of the proletariat and the plain people but of the plutocracy.

That is our real danger. That is the menace that confronts us—not the much-talked-of "Red" menace. Great aggregations of wealth, alarmed at moderately liberal changes put into effect by the Roosevelt administration, would welcome a dictatorship after the Nazi or Fascist type, and they have spread propaganda in every nook and corner of these United States glorifying the dictator of the Mussolini and Hitler type. All of this is part and parcel of a vicious conspiracy. Wall Street is the Nation's real menace. Wall Street, disturbed because the forgotten man is receiving a little more attention than formerly and has been helped a little—only a very little yet, however—is planning the revolution that we need fear and guard against. It is a reactionary revolution, not a labor or social revolt, that big business wants.

These venomous assaults on the N.R.A. and the Roosevelt administration are made, sometimes, by those who want to set up a rule of blood and iron in the interests of capitalists, and sometimes by notoriety seekers and idiots who do not know any better. Whether Dr. Wirt is in one class or the other does not matter. His procedure is just the kind calculated to help the forces of greed, avarice, and exploitation that are mapping out their plot. It is exactly what Hitler's agents also want.

Let us not fool ourselves about the extent to which the Government must go. The little that has so far been done for the producing class of this country is but a drop in the bucket compared with what must eventually be done. Instead of whining and whimpering about the terrible socialistic and communistic tendencies of the new deal, let us face the basic fact that fearful poverty and suffering still exist throughout our land—even if some mild steps have been taken to reduce them. Let us also recognize that they must be abolished. A government that does not protect its citizens from legalized robbery and that does not guarantee them the elementary needs of human beings—food, shelter, raiment, medical care when sick, and an income when old and exhausted—does not deserve to stand. Any government to endure must provide these things.

Our business here ought to be to speed up the process of feeding, clothing, sheltering, and caring for our suffering and agonizing millions—not wasting our time in high-sounding dissertations about the Constitution and fine-spun technicalities. I tell you, gentlemen, the people do not care a damn about theories of strict construction and interpretation of the Constitution when they have not enough to eat. They want food, and they will not wait forever.

The gentleman from New York, Mr. HAMILTON FISH, moans about radical tendencies and progressives in the Government service. After his laughable affair of discovering cabbages and carrots in a Baltimore warehouse where he thought the Communists had hidden bombs, he ought to have learned a bit of sense—but I fear he has not.

May I say to him we are going to get more radical tendencies and more radical legislation, instead of less? I have a suspicion that the time is not far distant when the Government must take over the industries and run them, ending exploitation by private interests. If so, this will mean more liberty—not less. The liberty of the whole Nation, to be safe from starvation, is considerably more important than the liberty of a few men to coin profits out of the sweat, blood, and tears of the many.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FOULKES. May I say further that I received a telegram from Dr. Wirt this afternoon in which he named a person high in the administration who made certain significant statements. I know something about Dr. Wirt personally. He is a kindly man, but, in my judgment, he has been misled. At the proper time and at the proper place before the committee I will produce the name which was furnished to me by Dr. Wirt.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOULKES. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. The gentleman, I understand, is acquainted with Dr. Wirt. Would the gentleman mind telling us who Dr. Wirt is that he should be dignified by an investigation?

Mr. FOULKES. Other than that he is at the head of the school system in Gary, Ind., which, as the gentleman knows, is a city named after one of the greatest exploiters of labor in this country, I have nothing more to say on that subject. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I think we need a quorum here, and I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the Democratic leader tells me certain promises have been made, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to defend Dr. Wirt. I do not know Dr. Wirt except by general reputation. People who do know him tell me he has a very high reputation, not only in his community and in his State, but throughout the Nation, and I assume that when he comes here he will speak for himself. It is not necessary for any of us on either side to speak for Dr. Wirt, for, as an educator and as a superintendent of schools at Gary, Ind., for many years, he has become well known in connection with the Gary school system.

I believe in the fullest freedom of speech. I believe in the fullest freedom of speech for Dr. Wirt as an American citizen, for any Member of Congress, or for any Socialist who desires to change our system of government. There is nothing in our Constitution or in our form of government that denies the right of Socialists to the fullest freedom of speech and to advocate their reforms under our republican form of government and under the Constitution. What I object to is the fact that after the Democratic Party was elected on a well-considered and sound Democratic platform [laughter and applause] since ignored or thrown out of the window, nevertheless it was overwhelmingly elected upon such a platform; but after President Roosevelt once got into power he put into key positions in the administration men who are at heart Socialists if not actual Socialists. It is well to remember that the Socialists take all their principles and doctrines from Karl Marx just as the Communists do. This is what Karl Marx had to say in his "manifesto":

> We make war against all the prevailing ideals of the state, of country, and of patriotism.

The following is an extract from a speech by Samuel Gompers, head of the American Federation of Labor for many years:

> I want to tell you Socialists that I have studied your philosophy, read your works upon economics—and not the meanest of them—studied your standard works, both in English and German. Have not only read but studied them. I have heard your orators and watched the work of your movement the world over. I have kept close watch upon your doctrines for 30 years; have been closely associated with many of you and know how you think and what you propose. * * * Economically, you are unsound, socially you are wrong, industrially you are an impossibility.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Would the gentleman be kind enough to name the Socialists who have been put into such key positions?

Mr. FISH. I certainly will.

Mr. SIROVICH. Name them.

Mr. FISH. I say they are Socialists at heart. They may belong to the Republican Party, they may belong to the Democratic Party [laughter], but, Mr. Speaker, I can prove that they are Socialists at heart, if they do not actually belong to that party. I am convinced that, with the exception of a possible few misguided individuals, that 99 percent of the members of the American Civil Liberties Union are left-wing radicals or virtual Socialists.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I have not the time to yield further.

During an investigation by a committee of this House held in 1931, and after a very careful investigation in Los Angeles, Chicago, New York, and here in Washington, of the American Civil Liberties Union, a report was submitted signed by 2 Democrats and 2 Republicans which concurred, first, in the findings of the New York State Legislature back in 1928, which said:

> The American Civil Liberties Union in the last analysis is a supporter of all subversive movements; its propaganda is detrimental to the interests of the state. It attempts not only to protect crime but to encourage attacks upon our institutions in every form.

This committee of the House of Representatives, in a report, as I say, signed by 2 Democrats and 2 Republicans, has this to say about the American Civil Liberties Union:

> The American Civil Liberties Union is closely affiliated with the Communist movement in the United States and fully 90 percent of its efforts are on behalf of Communists who have come into conflict with law. It claims to stand for free speech, free press, and free assembly, but it is quite apparent that the main function of the American Civil Liberties Union is to attempt to protect the Communists in their advocacy of force and violence to overthrow the Government, replacing the American flag by a red flag, and erecting a soviet government in the place of the republican form of government guaranteed to each State by the Federal Constitution. Roger N. Baldwin, its guiding spirit, makes no attempt to hide his friendship for the Communists and their principles. He was formerly a member of the I.W.W. and served a term in prison as a draft dodger during the war—

And so forth.

There is another entire page of this report devoted to the American Civil Liberties Union, but due to the limited time I cannot further discuss it.

I am convinced that any member of this organization, which is limited in number, no matter what party emblem he may go by, is at heart a Socialist, and I propose to show there are at least 16 members of this organization—and, of course, there are more, because I have had only a limited time to investigate the situation—holding important positions in the Government service at the present time. This list does not include a large number of young radical experts and socialistic lawyers who are promoting one Socialist experiment after the other under the auspices of the Democratic administration. For instance, it is not a coincidence that members of this particular organization, the American Civil Liberties Union, hold the most important key positions in the Government service; that is, in the emergency-relief administrations. In the A.A.A. the chief counsel is Jerome N. Frank, a member of the American Civil Liberties Union. Is that merely a coincidence, or that there are numerous left-wing radicals in that section of the Agricultural Department? Socialism was not voted into power, but it is being thrust upon the American people under the banner of the Democratic Party. If the people back home wanted socialism they would have elected Norman Thomas.

However, democracy seems to have gone socialistic on its own account and apparently is intent on rushing headlong into state socialism. As a former follower of Theodore Roosevelt, I want to quote his definition of socialism. "Socialism is not a continuation of democracy. It must be a new culture built upon ideas and institutions totally different from the institutions of democracy." And on page 106 of his book Foes of Our Own Household, he says:

> One of the main vices of socialism is that it is blind to everything except the merely material side of life. It is not only indifferent but at bottom hostile to the intellectual, the religious, the domestic, and moral life; it is a form of communism with no moral foundation but essentially based on the immediate annihilation of personal ownership or capital and in the near future the annihilation of the family, and ultimately the annihilation of civilization.

The chief counsel of the N.R.A. is Donald Richberg, who is also a member of the American Civil Liberties Union. Is that likewise merely a coincidence?

Henry T. Hunt, the general counsel for the P.W.A., is another member of the American Civil Liberties Union. Can it be just a coincidence that all three of these highly important legal positions are held by prominent and active members of the American Civil Liberties Union?

Now, the gentleman from New York asked me to name all of them, and I will.

Mr. SIROVICH. Has the gentleman the preamble in which it favors the freedom of the press and free speech?

Mr. FISH. I am in favor of the freedom of the press and free speech which principles are worthy of an organization that stands for our republican form of government, guaranteed by the Constitution, and for the ideals of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt, instead of an organization whose main work is to uphold the Communists in spreading revolutionary propaganda and inciting revolutionary activities to undermine our American institutions and overthrow our Federal Government. Here are the names of these socialistic people, and they are neither Democrats nor Republicans but as members of the American Civil Liberties Union, a subverse organization, it is very easy to classify them and know exactly where they stand and what they stand for. The American people are entitled to this information in order to know what the "brain trust" is composed of and what its members are trying to do to them and to our country and its constitutional and representative form of government: Rexford Guy Tugwell, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture; Rose Schneiderman, Labor Advisory Board, N.R.A.; Frederick C. Howe, Consumers' Advisory Board, N.R.A.; Prof. Albert E. Taussig, N.R.A.; Prof. J. P. Worbosse, N.R.A.; Clarence Darrow, N.R.A.; Dr. Leo Wolman, Chairman Labor Advisory Board, N.R.A.; Prof. Paul H. Douglas, Consumers' Advisory Board; Prof. James M. Landis, Federal Trade Commissioner; Nathan R. Margold, Solicitor, Interior Department; Robert Marshall, Director of Forestry Division, Bureau of Indian Affairs; William E. Dodd, Ambassador to Germany; Sidney Hillman, Labor Advisory Board.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert these names and those I have not read in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FISH. That is all the list I can furnish you at the present time of the members of the American Civil Liberties Union holding high public offices at Washington. That they are trying to bring about a planned revolution must be apparent to all fair-minded people. That the revolution is peaceful makes no difference. There is no room for socialism, class hatred, and regimentation in America. These men do not represent the Democratic Party, and certainly they do not represent the Republican Party. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, when the Wirt letter was first presented, the gentleman from North Carolina presented a resolution for investigation, and that resolution provided for a wider investigation than this second one now presented, which is in the nature of a gag resolution.

The first Bulwinkle resolution was a reasonably fair resolution. It made the issues of the investigation broad enough so that it was at least a reasonable effort to hold a full and honest investigation.

This second resolution is a "cover up."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I cannot yield; my time is so limited.

It is a cowardly effort to smother the issues presented by the Dr. Wirt letter. This letter of Dr. Wirt does not present a mere personality. It presents the broad issue of whether or not there are those connected with the administration who are committed to philosophies of government wholly contrary to the Republic under the Constitution. This second Bulwinkle resolution is so narrow in the issues which may be investigated that it is apparent upon its face that the leadership have not the hardihood to ignore the issues presented by Dr. Wirt but do not have the courage to permit a full effort to lay before the people of the country the true facts so that they may know whether or not the Wirt charges are true or untrue. This second resolution does injustice alike to the President, the administration, and the people.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. No; I cannot yield. The gentleman may answer in his own time.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the language used by the gentleman from Kansas is quite parliamentary and I make the point of order that the language is not parliamentary to a Member of this House who in good faith introduced the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. McGUGIN. The recently published letter which I received from Mr. Higgins, of Chattanooga, Tenn., contains statements, the utterances of which by press reports have been substantiated by Raymond Moley, former Assistant Secretary of State, and by George Christians. Mr. Higgins, Mr. Christians, and Mr. Moley have stated that Christians' statements were made in the presence of Marvin McIntyre, Secretary to the President. In common justice to the President and to the people, Moley, McIntyre, Christians, and Higgins, under oath, should be made to give the true facts to the people of this country pertaining to these statements by Mr. Christians. Yet, under this second resolution, the committee would be powerless to consider it.

Dr. Wirt has called upon other people of this country, who, he says, know exactly what he knows, to come to the front and give their information. Yet, under this second resolution, they would be barred from doing so. The limiting of this investigation to the Wirt statement and people whom Wirt may mention is so obviously an attempt to smother the facts that any schoolboy will understand that the sponsors of this second resolution are presenting it not because they want to bring out the truth but because they politically fear to ignore the Wirt statement, but have not the political courage to permit a full investigation of the truth, whatever it may be.

In perfect keeping with the issues presented in the Wirt letter, here are some of the things which should be considered:

First. It has appeared in newspaper articles and spoken from a multitude of tongues that the present Attorney General writes opinions as to the constitutionality of proposed legislation, which opinions are not based upon precedents and decisions of the Supreme Court, but, rather, on the desires of those who are writing such legislation. If such conduct on the part of the Attorney General be the truth, then the conduct is reprehensible and a perversion of the Constitution. If it be not the truth, then public confidence in government is being wrongfully shattered. Justice to government and to the people demands that these statements be proved or disproved.

Second. Bills have been sent to Congress from the White House with requests that they be enacted immediately. Congress and the country have believed that such bills were in fact either written or at least fully understood by the President; yet in instance after instance it is being reported that the President has not so much as read these bills. Only a few days ago Paul Mallon, in a syndicated news article, made the statement that the President had never read either one of the securities bills.

When the President signed the present gold devaluation bill, which created a $2,000,000,000 fund for the Secretary of the Treasury to use as he sees fit, the Associated Press reported that when the President signed the bill he turned to Secretary Morgenthau and said in substance: "Now that I have signed it, is it all right? I have not read it." The Secretary of the Treasury is reported to have answered: "I have not read it either, but the experts say that it is all right."

We all know that some of this legislation was not read by the House of Representatives. Some of it was passed without even being in print. It was passed upon the belief that it was fully understood by the President and it was passed upon his statement that the emergency demanded that it be enacted immediately.

Now, if legislation has been passed which neither the Congress nor the President had any hand in shaping, then the people have the right to know who has been writing this legislation. They should know whether or not such legislation has been written by men whose philosophy of government is in keeping with the Constitution or by men whose philosophy of government is entirely foreign to the Republic under the Constitution.

If public confidence is to be retained in government then any such newspaper articles and public talk must be either clearly established as slander and falsehood or the truth as the case may prove to be.

A smothered hearing which is provided by the second Bulwinkle resolution will not establish the truth. It will only create more public distrust and in the public mind most likely give undue credence to loose talk. Such a smothered hearing will likely place the stamp of truth upon slander and innuendo. Such a result will be a wrong alike against the people and the Government and those connected with the Government. Those who will be responsible for this are those who do not now have the courage to provide for a full, complete, and orderly consideration of the issues presented by the Wirt letter.

Yet there is nothing left for the average Member to do except to vote for this resolution or not vote at all, because the Rules Committee has refused to bring in a resolution which is broad enough to permit a hearing on the full charges presented.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, judging from the remarks made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN], I am constrained to say that I feel the gentleman probably has not read the resolution pending before the House. I am not going to undertake to reply to his innuendo or insinuations as to the President and his familiarity with the legislation which he has recommended to the House, nor to his insinuation and innuendo as to the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to his familiarity with matters of legislation pertaining to his Department. Neither am I going to reply to the statements made by the gentleman from Kansas, who speaks with all that assurance with which we are so familiar, with reference to the ignorance of his own colleagues on matters pending before the House. The gentleman, I am sure, does not include himself in that class.

What does this resolution propose? Dr. Wirt appeared before a committee of this House through a statement read by a Mr. Rand, of the city of New York, who was discussing some bill pending before that committee, and made the charge that there are officials of this Government who are deliberately attempting to thwart the measures of reform and recovery proposed by the President of the United States, with the hope that they could continue the destitution which has prevailed in many parts of this country for the last 3 or 4 years and thus bring about a revolution or a change in the form of our Government. That is all that is important in this statement, and that is what this resolution proposes to investigate. If there is any official, whether high or low, who has entertained those sentiments, or who, as an official of this Government, is seeking to bring about that condition of affairs, then it is time that the administration and the Congress and the country should know his name.

If it should be disclosed that there is such an official—and I do not believe there is one—it is clear that he has no place in the employ of the Federal Government. Somebody said a moment ago that we were seeking to dignify Dr. Wirt. That is incorrect. This is not a proposition to appoint a committee to summon witnesses and put them on oath to testify as to whether or not, in their opinion, the plan and the policies of the administration have been efficacious or for the benefit of the country. Those are matters that can be discussed by Members upon the floor and by other persons upon the stump and the platform and through the newspapers. What we are seeking to do is simply to summon Dr. Wirt before a special committee and put him under oath and ask him what officials have been carrying on this sort of propaganda.

I say to my friend from Kansas that if he had read this resolution carefully and compared it with the original resolution introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] he would have found that this resolution is broader in its scope, because it undertakes to direct the committee to bring before it all officials or other persons alleged by Dr. Wirt to have given him this information: "or to be connected in any way with said activity." In addition to that it provides:

> And to summon and examine such other witnesses and make such further investigation in connection with such statements and the reasons and persons actuating the same as the committee in its discretion may deem advisable.

How much broader could this resolution be made? Talk about its being cowardly! A Democratic Congress, a Democratic committee, I say to the gentleman, has proposed this investigation to find those persons if they exist in this administration who are acting treasonably toward our Government.

There is no disposition to cover up anything. On the contrary we want brought to the attention of the public and the country those persons who are guilty of that sort of conduct. We want to bring them into the open so that they can be dealt with as the law provides, and also dealt with by the administration as seems necessary and proper under the circumstances.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Can the gentleman imagine a resolutions like this coming out of a Republican Committee on Rules if there were a Republican administration in Washington?

Mr. BYRNS. I never heard of any such resolution.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Just as a matter of interpretation of the language which was discussed somewhat in the Committee on Rules, I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee if it is his interpretation of the last clause of section 2 that this committee will be empowered under that clause to call anyone it sees fit to call, who may have information as to whether or not there are men answering the description of the charges made by Dr. Wirt in the Government service?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not think there is any question about it, because it distinctly says, "such other witnesses and make such further investigation in connection with such statements and the reasons and persons actuating the same as the committee in its discretion may deem advisable." I do not see how the resolution could possibly have been made broader in its scope.

Mr. MAPES. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman's interpretation of it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield the gentleman 1 additional minute in order that I may ask a question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. KVALE. The committee is not going to start out on the assumption that those charges are true and are founded on sworn statements, rather than on perhaps jocular, lighthearted statements, humorous statements which have been bandied from mouth to mouth in Washington for months and which have ceased to be funny any longer. Is not the committee going to inquire into the truth or merit of the charges before they take up the charges as something serious and warranting the most careful investigation?

Mr. BYRNS. Undoubtedly. I take it that any committee that is appointed under this resolution will follow that course. I stated that, in my judgment, they would not be able to find any responsible person who had made any such statements, but if there is any person connected with this Government or elsewhere who has been making that kind of a statement, or who is guilty of that sort of conduct, they ought to be exposed.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in Dr. Wirt or Mr. Rand, or these other gentlemen who have been mentioned. I am only interested in the subject of this controversy. There is much to convince us here that there is a situation existing here in the departments of Government like never existed heretofore, and that it is known to many Members of Congress. I appeared before the Committee on Rules this morning, where this resolution was up, because I felt this resolution was a narrow resolution and would not permit a thorough examination of this important subject. I still think that this resolution, if the committee that is appointed so desires, can narrow this examination strictly to Dr. Wirt and the men he may name. It would be a tremendous mistake if that were the case. I believe there are many people who have information on this subject, and some are Members of Congress. That was the reason why I asked the members of the Rules Committee this morning whether or not, under this resolution, it would be possible for Members of Congress who might want to submit information to this committee on this particular subject to be heard. As I understand it, I was given assurance that Members of Congress could appear with material information on this particular subject before the to be appointed committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MCFADDEN. I am sorry, but I do not have time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will yield the gentleman 1 additional minute just to correct the gentleman.

Mr. MCFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman asked me the question. What I said was this, that the gentleman knew from his long experience, that the committee could hear anybody the committee saw fit to hear; that naturally the whole world could not walk in before the committee. It was for the committee to decide, and I did not know what the committee would do; that the gentleman knew how to present his case to the committee. I gave the gentleman no assurance that a definite date was set for him to make a speech before the committee about the international bankers, or what not.

Mr. MCFADDEN. I will say the gentleman did not have anything like that in mind. The gentleman was serious about this question, and we all know, who are familiar with what has been taking place at the special session and at this session of Congress, that there is in nearly all these Government departments, particularly the Department of Agriculture, State and Justice Departments, and also in the various alphabetical bureaus, a group of men who have theories of government which are contrary to constitutional government, and that they are in places of high position and authority, and they have had much to do with the drafting of legislation and in this drafting they have had outside assistance from persons of their type and who are consulted privately. Such legislation has been enacted as a result of such preparation by the so-called "brain trust" and their conferees; and frequently sent to this House with Presidential and department head approval, and jammed through under this kind of pressure by both Houses of Congress, with hardly an opportunity for the Members of Congress to read the bills, let alone properly discuss them.

So I say there are in this Government men who have theories of government which are contrary to our form of government, and it smacks a bit of a definite plan when you take into consideration the utterances of these men—and I mention specifically Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, and I mention Under Secretary of Agriculture Mr. Tugwell and there are several more whose voice in the press and whose activities in their particular departments, indicate that they are working toward a definite plan to establish in the United States a form of government other than constitutional government.

I cite in further proof of that, that the Secretary of Agriculture is putting out a series of syndicated articles one of which was recently published, "America Must Choose", which is copyrighted by the Foreign Policy Association. The Foreign Policy Association was organized by a group of men headed by Felix Frankfurter. Mr. Frankfurter is prominent in the activities of this particular liberal group and is one of the chief advisers of the Bureau of the Budget, the N.R.A., and other departments where his keymen are located.

I am reliably informed that the Foreign Policy Association of New York is closely allied with similar movements in England, such as the Political Economic Plan, of which Felix Frankfurter is a very active member.

Those of you who will take particular time to examine into that plan will see beyond a question of doubt, I think, that these men who are known to us as Moley, Tugwell, Wallace, Bullitt, Frank, Landis, and Cohen are planning according to the line of the political economic plan now in operation under a secret organization in Great Britain; and it is, I may say to you, the corporate form of government, the guild form of government, similar to the form that has been set up in Italy, Russia, Austria, and just the opposite to parliamentary form of government, such as ours.

And may I say that those who are back of the political economic plan in England are driving to substitute their plan of government in England at the present time. And if they succeed, parliamentary government in Britain will pass out. There is much to indicate that this English group are in close working touch with the "brain trust" here.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption or rejection of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 314

Resolved, That the expenses of the investigation by the select committee created by H.Res. 317, not to exceed $500, including expenditures for the employment of clerical and stenographic assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

With the following committee amendment:

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters shall serve said committee at its meetings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SNELL. What is the amount provided by the resolution?

Mr. WARREN. Five hundred dollars.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

TO AMEND THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, in considering the constructive legislation designed in this bill to place in the hands of the President the power to promote the general welfare by expanding foreign trade, I desire to include in my remarks the following editorial statement made by Mr. Don C. D. Moore, of the Northern Idaho News. Mr. Moore is one of the ablest editorial writers on national issues in the Northwest.

[From the Northern Idaho News]

WOULD FREE CHANNELS OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In the course of his recent appearance before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives Secretary of State Hull gave some very cogent reasons for the passage of the House resolution granting the President authority to negotiate tariff treaties with foreign nations, and to embody in such treaties changes in the tariff rates within the limitations of 50-percent increase or 50-percent reduction, with no articles to be taken from the free list and none to be added to it.

A few Republicans have been making pretensions that that grant of power is unprecedented. But such is not the case. Francis B. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, and a professor of law at Harvard, states that similar powers were exercised by President Adams, by President Jackson, by Polk, Lincoln, Johnson, Grant, and Hays—altogether a rather impressive group sufficiently convincing that the proposal is not a novel thing in our governmental policy. And the Supreme Court has upheld such discretionary grants of authority.

Moreover, most foreign governments have invested in their cabinets authority of the same kind. The majority of the European countries, including Great Britain, and a fair proportion of the South American Republics are likewise in position to negotiate treaties on tariff rates and give assurances that they will be put into force.

The reason for the desire to exercise the authority lies in the fact that it will be an immense saver of time. Should the President proceed with treaty negotiations in the customary way, the treaties, after they have been negotiated would have to go to the Senate and they would repose there for Heaven knows how long, as deliberateness is one characteristic of senatorial procedure. Maybe there would be reservations or amendments that would require new negotiations. It would likely be between 1 and 2 years before the treaties could be put into effect, if at all.

Although at the time that Ogden L. Mills, former Secretary of the Treasury, delivered his notable Topeka address, the President had not formally requested the authority mentioned above, yet Mr. Mills gave, in different form, reasons of the same kind as Secretary Hull. For example, Mr. Mills' Topeka address contained the following:

"If we exclude cotton (exports of which were at the pre-war level), the volume of agricultural exports from this country in 1932–33 was but 64 percent of the pre-war volume. In 1932 we exported only 32,000,000 bushels of wheat as compared with an average of 110,000,000 during the 1909–1913 period, and 190,000,000 average during 1921–25.

"Wheat imports of France, Germany, and Italy fell from 232,000,000 bushels in 1928–29 to 47,000,000 in 1932–33.

"Exports of pork have fallen from an average of 309,000,000 pounds in the period 1910–14 to 111,000,000 in 1932–33, while exports of lard have fallen from an average of 722,000,000 pounds in the years 1926–30 to 560,000,000 in 1932–33.

"* * * Today, with the exception of cotton, all of our agricultural export products are suffering severely from foreign restrictions. * * * It is clear that we must produce less and we must sell more."

That, from one of the Republican leaders, could just as well have been uttered by one of the present administration, as it directly supports the proposal of the President and Secretary Hull and Secretary Peek.

Secretary Hull, in his statement to the Ways and Means Committee, points out that, if world trade had continued its increase at the same rate as it was increasing prior to the World War, the amount of the trade of the world at the present time would be $50,000,000,000 annually instead of 25 percent of that amount. The policy of national isolation, which has produced high tariffs and trade restrictions, has brought a drop of 75 percent in the world's exchange of goods.

As Mr. Hull observes—

"The theory that to shut out international trade results in increase of the sum total of domestic trade is dispelled by all the facts and figures.

"In our domestic business situation the business index fell from 112.9 in 1929 to 63 in 1933, while our domestic or national income produced fell from $83,037,000,000 to $38,349,000,000 in 1933.

"Instead of increasing as our foreign trade decreased, our domestic trade decreased at a similar huge rate."

The theory, therefore, that by destroying our foreign trade we can increase our domestic trade has been exploded by actual test in the laboratory of experience. Perhaps the policy of destroying our foreign trade, in the expectation of benefiting domestic trade, might not have been so disastrous had economic conditions the world over not been so unfavorable. Yet at a time when we needed its benefits the most it failed the worst.

"NO ENTANGLING ALLIANCES!" THROUGH PARTICIPATION IN THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to note that the Washington Times has for several weeks sponsored a movement against the participation in the League of Nations and World Court.

I now want to discuss for a while the problem of war, because it is one of the most vital and important problems the American people have to confront. Every mother in the country has to realize the meaning of war and knows that her flesh and blood may have to pay a sad price. She knows that when her boy answers the call and goes to war, somebody is going to make money out of that boy's life. Therein lies one of the most sordid and horrible aspects of this whole sad business of war. It is an outrage on humanity that men should be permitted to coin the human sacrifices of war into private profits.

No one claims that such profiteering is patriotic, or even decent. It is an outlaw. It stands condemned at the bar of an enlightened public opinion. Then why do we hesitate to adopt a policy that would prevent the United States participating in the League of Nations or in the World Court of the League of Nations, with or without reservations? Why do we hesitate to adopt a policy that would keep the United States "free from foreign entanglements"? Why do we hesitate to adopt a policy to keep our Government from meddling in foreign affairs, and to keep foreign nations from meddling in our American affairs?

I quote from Washington's Farewell Address:

"Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice??"

Mr. Speaker, the Covenant of the League of Nations represents no new experiment in the maintenance of international peace. The Hague Peace Conventions, one in 1899 at which 26 powers were represented, and another in 1909 attended by 44 powers, instituted international courts of arbitration, and the Conference of 1907 agreed to "compulsory arbitration without any restriction" in the interpretation and application of international agreements. This Conference, at which practically the entire world was represented, unanimously declared their "firm determination to cooperate in the maintenance of general peace."

Notwithstanding this firm determination, and in spite of the age-long struggle to banish war, the nations that participated in the Hague conventions were, within 7 years, at each other's throats, and the most terrible war of all history raged for 4 terrifying and devastating years.

Have men and nations so changed within the last few years that we can count upon the successful establishment of a new order throughout the world? Have plans that have been tried again and again acquired some new and magical potency? Is the quest for universal peace at last happily and eternally ended?

There is nothing in the Covenant of the League of Nations to assure us of this gratifying consummation. In fact, the document itself affords evidence of the expectation of future wars in the very means that are set up to punish a resort to arms.

And here is where the constitution of the League of Nations has serious import for the United States. The program of the League is predicated upon the outbreak of future war and prescribes the duties and obligations of the members of the League in such an event. It stipulates that the disregarding of its Covenants will be regarded as an act of war and empowers its Executive Council in such cases to recommend what effective military or naval force the members of the League shall contribute to protect the Covenants of the League.

In joining the League, the United States would become bound to equip and dispatch a military or naval force at the summons of the Executive Council of the League, no matter how remote the seat of trouble or how foreign the dispute is to our people or the interests of our Government.

There are myriad possibilities for trouble. All central Europe and much of Asia are seething with turmoil and unrest. If the help of America is needed, it will be freely given, but we have the right to ask Europe and Asia to adjust their own troubles and put their houses in order.

So long as we retain the spirit of Chateau-Thierry, of Belleau Wood, and of the Forest of the Argonne, no power on earth will break loose in the madness of war without first taking into most serious and respectful consideration the possible action of the United States.

It is not a written covenant between various nations that will guarantee the peace of the world. More potent far are the lesson of Germany's utter failure and the memory of what our boys did over there. The only security for the peace of the world is the power of the nations that believe in peace and that have demonstrated that they can enforce it. We are able to enforce peace now; but with our soldiers scattered to the four quarters of the globe doing police duty for the protection of the possessions of the other members of the League, the American Eagle would soon lose his sharp beak and talons and come to resemble a bird of the barnyard variety.

By the European War Great Britain has added to her Empire, either by annexation or by protectorates and mandates, a territory of 3,972,000 square miles—a domain larger than continental Europe—with a population of 51,000,000 people. America has acquired nothing except a war debt of $23,000,000,000 and a war expense of $50,000,000,000, but the first open suggestion that America cancel her war loans to Europe, amounting to $10,000,000,000, on which the interest alone amounts to $1,000,000 a day, comes from England, the only country that has profited hugely as a result of the war.

Great Britain today stands the dominant power in Asia and Africa and on the Continent of North America holds more territory than is represented in the combined area of the United States and Alaska. The aggregate area of the British Empire is one fourth the land surface of the globe, totaling 15,000,000 square miles, a territory nine times larger than the Roman Empire at the height of its glory. It is the boundaries of this vast Empire which the United States, under the League of Nations, would be obliged to defend against external aggression, which, in the opinion of the Council, amounts even to a threat of war affecting the peace of nations.

Wherever the British flag flies over a subject people today, trouble is brewing. Ireland is an armed camp. Three hundred and fifty million inhabitants of India are stirring to shake off the yoke. Egypt, betrayed into the passive acceptance of a protectorate, is in open revolt. Is there no lesson for America in these facts?

There is one agency to which Great Britain may look for aid in holding her rebellious subjects in check, and that agency is the League of Nations. America, in her newly acquired role of lackey and burden bearer for the nations of Europe, forgetting the wise counsel of Washington regarding foreign entanglements, by entrance into the League would put the yoke around her neck and be compelled to send the best she breeds to the far-flung battle lines of British conquest and domination.

Like the Holy Alliance of 1815, the Covenant of the League of Nations is couched in the language of idealism and peace. But like the Holy Alliance, it will be used for the suppression of nationalities and the prosecution of oppressive warfare.

The Conference for the Limitation of Armaments has given the United States more and greater advantages than were offered in the Covenant of the League of Nations. Why, then, should participation in the League be considered necessary or advisable?

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS SHOULD BAR PRODUCTS OF DESERTING AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the amendment I offered to the tariff bill, and to include therein some figures upon American manufacturers who moved abroad.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in connection with the amendment I offered to H.R. 8687, a bill to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, providing for reciprocal trade agreements, I offered my amendment to try and alleviate a situation brought about by our industrialists which is responsible in my opinion for at least one third of the unemployment in the United States.

When these foreign-trade agreements are negotiated or entered into, if my amendment were adopted to the present tariff act, it would make it impossible for any reciprocal-trade agreement to embody any feature permitting shipment back into the United States of any article manufactured or produced by a foreign subsidiary of an American manufacturer with factories and production facilities in foreign countries. This seems to me to be a fair proposition, inasmuch as the American industrialist who has stayed in this country, kept his investments here, and employs American labor should be guaranteed that his competitor who has built plants in foreign countries shall not be allowed to more advantageously compete with him for our American market. This is especially so, where many American industries have emigrated to other lands, leaving thousands upon thousands of their American workmen as burdens upon Federal, State, and local relief agencies.

Few people realize that the desertion of American industry to foreign shores has been one of the major causes of our depression. A few figures will substantiate the fact that the tremendous amount of American capital that has gone abroad since 1929 has a direct bearing upon the great increase in unemployment here in this country. According to the Department of Commerce, American direct investments in foreign countries reached the amazing total of $7,997,000,000 in 1932. This was an increase of nearly $5,000,000,000 since the beginning of 1929. Is it any wonder that thousands of American workmen walk the streets of our country looking for employment when this great sum of money invested in industry has been transferred from our country to Canada and Europe to build and equip foreign factories?

Early in the special session of the Seventy-third Congress, as a means of forcing these deserting American industrialists to bear some of the burdens of recovery, I introduced House Joint Resolution 161, proposing an amendment to the Income Tax Act of 1932, providing for an emergency surtax of 50 percent on the net income of all foreign subsidiaries of American corporations, individuals, partnerships, or manufacturers. My purpose in introducing this amendment to the income tax law was to compel these industrialists who had deserted our country in its time of need to bear their just share of the expense of supporting, on relief rolls, those of their former employees who were deprived of employment by the almost-wholesale desertion of American capital and industry to foreign countries. If this proposal of mine to amend the income tax laws had been adopted by the Ways and Means Committee, an emergency recovery revenue of close to $500,000,000 would be raised for the Federal Treasury. This would go a long way toward paying the interest and financing charges on the billions of dollars we have found necessary to authorize through bond issues for the purpose of providing "made" work for our unemployed fellow citizens.

It is a sad commentary upon the patriotism of American capital to know that at the critical time, when every job in America is needed to ease the burden of unemployment, hundreds of American manufacturers moved to Canada and Europe with all their equipment, producing their products in those foreign countries and employing foreign workers in place of the American workers once employed by them here at home. These industries made their profits and grew to their gigantic size here in America through the support and purchases of American citizens. To desert us when employment is America's greatest need, is reminiscent of the cowardice of a captain who would desert his ship in a storm.

Many times previously I have stated that I favored a revised system of taxation that would make American manufacturers with foreign plants, employing foreign labor, pay a higher rate of taxes upon their profits than the manufacturer with his entire industry within our borders. In that way we fairly and directly face the issue and say to those who desert us in our difficult times when the problem of unemployment is greatest, "Either come back here and make jobs for Americans who need them or get out entirely so that loyal American industrialists with all their investments and production equipment in this country can get all of America's domestic business." The last 4 years has been no time for dollar patriots, and this should be an unfriendly country to the industrialist who thinks much more of profits than of whether or not our American economic welfare is improved and preserved. Only last year, in the course of my researches upon this question of American industry fleeing to foreign countries in the face of unsettled economic weather here at home, I picked up a magazine called "Industrial Business in Canada." I found listed in its pages the astonishing total of more than 500 American manufacturers who had built plants in Canada between the years 1930 and 1932. In addition to that striking illustration of the need for a definite policy of taxation aimed to fairly adjust the cost of caring for our unemployed between the manufacturer who stays here at home and the one who deserts to foreign shores, I received in the mail a circular entitled "The Culmination to Four Years of a Steadily Increasing Business", put out by the Hoover Electric Cleaner Co. In the pages of this circular was printed a rather astonishing letter, considering the fact that this company saw its inception and made its numerous profits here in America before transferring a portion of its industrial activity to England. The letter states, and I quote certain extracts:

> At this moment in the history of Hoover, Ltd., an important moment to us with the establishment of our factory in England, coming as the culmination of 4 years' steadily increasing business.

The letter concludes with the statement that—

> The people who state that prosperity is just around the corner have been laughed at lately, but we are inclined to think that prosperity is around the corner if you know which corner to look around.

Yes; prosperity for England and English workers was around the corner for this company and hundreds of others who have transferred their industrial activities abroad. But that prosperity for these foreign nations has been accompanied by depression and unemployment for our own American citizens, and this unemployment and depression, caused partially by the flight of American industry to other countries, should be paid for through a system of taxation assessed against these deserting American capitalists.

My purpose in offering this amendment to the Reciprocal Tariff Act is to specifically provide that no foreign nation, in negotiating a reciprocal-trade agreement with the United States, shall be allowed to permit these deserting American industrialists to import back into this country the goods manufactured by them in their foreign subsidiaries which will come into competition in our domestic market with the products of our loyal manufacturers who have stayed in this country, despite the difficult times. I regret that the House by its vote has not seen fit to adopt my amendment, since it cannot harm this tariff bill in any way but would make it clear and unmistakable that the American market belongs first to the American manufacturer with all his resources and capital invested in this country insofar as we can help him to get that market; and, secondly, my amendment closes a loophole against those profit-hungry deserters who have thought more of dividends upon their investments than of the welfare, employment, and economic happiness of our American citizens, who, through their purchases, made possible the growth of many of these great corporations now entrenched and producing their products abroad.

LET US KNOW EXACTLY WHO IS BEHIND DR. WIRT

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, since I recently questioned the underlying motives of Dr. Wirt's ridiculous charge of communism against the Roosevelt administration, I have received many letters upbraiding me for my expressed opinion. If the Republican leaders and the Republican press had not utilized these silly Wirt charges for the purpose of creating prejudice against the honest efforts of President Roosevelt, I would have advised that Dr. Wirt's statements be ignored. But, in view of the situation that has now arisen, I believe that the resolution of investigation (H.Res. 313) should be passed. In fact, I advocated, while the resolution was before the Rules Committee, that its scope be broadened so that we might obtain all the facts and underlying motives for this Wirt anti-Democratic publicity.

I am satisfied that a thorough investigation will show that there is no foundation or justification for Professor Wirt's statement; that it was made upon the instigation of the iniquitous Steel Trust. Personally I should prefer that the evidence to be disclosed reveal that such is not the case and that it was only a loose statement resulting from too much imbibed spiritual inspirations, which we all know sometimes cause men to talk recklessly.

Professor Wirt is at the present time the head of the public schools at Gary, Ind. To anybody who knows conditions in that city this fact is very significant. Gary is controlled from cellar to garret by the Steel Trust. No man can hold the least important position there unless he is 100 percent satisfactory to the Steel Trust. President Roosevelt is not satisfactory to the Steel Trust because it cannot control him.

Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to what extent the trust-controlled Republican Party and the Republican press are willing to go to destroy the praiseworthy achievements of President Roosevelt and to harass him in his noble quests for further and early betterment of conditions of our righteous citizenry.

As I stated on the floor of this House the other day, President Roosevelt, on the day he was inaugurated, was confronted with the gravest situation that ever faced our country in any peace-time period in the entire history of our Nation. Allow me again briefly to picture the terrible conditions that existed on that fateful March 4, 1933, and indicate some of the accomplishments of our most resourceful Chief Executive in the short space of 1 year:

REVOLUTION WAS IN THE OFFING

Sixteen million people were out of work. Hundreds of thousands of hungry; yes, starving men and women marched through our streets to city halls, county institutions, and to our State capitols, demanding work and food. More than 75 percent of our plants and factories were closed, and those that still remained open worked only 2 or 3 days a week, working only 20 to 30 percent of the time. Men fortunate enough to be employed at all were paid as little as $1 per day, and thousands of women $3 per week. More than 50 percent of the stores were closed, manufacturing businesses were thrown into receivers' hands in bankruptcy. Homes were being foreclosed, tenants evicted, States and municipalities not able to feed the hungry or proceed with started works—unable to pay the employees. Schools were being closed, and children turned out on our streets. In many States court orders were ignored, and discontentment and resentment reigned through our land, and anarchy and bolshevism grew. Depositors' life savings gone; despair on every side; insane institutions and poorhouses overcrowded; suicides in all walks of life; banks closed, their capital impaired; and insurance companies insolvent, all due to Republican misrule. These all were the handiwork of the well-known Wall Street.

Such was the trail of desolation and despair that marked the end of the "old deal" under the administrations of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover.

THEN CAME THE NEW DEAL

As I say, these were the conditions on March 4, 1933, when President Roosevelt was inaugurated.

President Roosevelt immediately set forth to save the country. In his effort to bring relief to the Nation, the President, within a few days after taking office, called a special session of Congress, recommending legislation to stop discord, reestablish confidence, bring about the reemployment of the millions of American wage earners, the reopening of our plants and factories, eliminate the criminal extravagance that was practiced by former Republican administrations, bring about economy, and, if in any way possible, balance the Budget. Since that day many of his recommendations have been enacted into law, and all have tended, as I shall show, to rehabilitate and to reconstruct the wreck and ruin brought about by the former Republican mismanagement and misrule.

DEMOCRATIC ACCOMPLISHMENTS UNDER ROOSEVELT

First. Owing to President Roosevelt's economy program nearly a billion dollars annually will be saved to the Nation.

Second. Repeal of prohibition, which has resulted in millions of taxes going into the Treasury instead of to the bootleggers and racketeers.

Third. Tottering banks have been placed on a firm foundation.

Fourth. Food, clothing, fuel, and shelter have been provided for millions of helpless and needy people through C.W.A. work.

Fifth. Thousands of young men, unable to obtain employment, have found health and usefulness through Civilian Conservation Corps camps.

Sixth. Millions have been put back to work through the National Recovery Act.

Seventh. Funds provided for Public Works building program have put additional millions back to work.

Eighth. Child labor has been practically abolished.

Ninth. A successful campaign has been carried on against crime and racketeering.

Tenth. Machinery has been put in motion to adjust employment differences between employers and employees, and serious trouble has been avoided.

Eleventh. The cancelation of fraudulent air-mail contracts.

Twelfth. Fraud upon the public, such as perpetrated in the sale of fraudulent securities, has been stopped by the Federal Securities Act.

Thirteenth. Thousands upon thousands of home owners have saved their homes through the establishment of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Fourteenth. Depositors in banks now have their savings insured and protected.

Fifteenth. Farm relief has been passed by Congress, affording loans to farmers and preventing foreclosure of mortgages. The farmer today is getting more for his products, enabling him to buy manufactured products, which is bound to give additional employment to the workers in our factories and mills.

Sixteenth. Loans have been made to States for unemployment relief and further moneys have been loaned to cities and States for construction, road, and building projects, resulting in the employment of millions and saving them from being placed on relief rolls.

Seventeenth. The devaluation of gold by President Roosevelt was a masterful stroke of statesmanship, immeasurably helping the Nation toward recovery.

Eighteenth. The refinancing of Government indebtedness has saved the country millions of dollars in interest.

Nineteenth. The passage of the Muscle Shoals legislation insures the freedom of the farmer and industry from the dominance of the Power and Fertilizer Trusts, and will insure an adequate supply of munitions of war.

I have gratifyingly supported the President in effecting the passage of all this legislation.

THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS ARE FIGHTING FOR THE MASSES

In addition to all the things that the President has already accomplished, there are other things he is doing with the aid of Congress to aid reemployment:

First. Encouraging foreign trade to make more work for our factories.

Second. To create and establish Federal discount banks or some Federal banking medium that will make loans to the small business man or manufacturer so his business can be kept going and more workmen employed.

Third. The building of housing centers in large cities—and Chicago will be one of the first—which will give work to thousands in razing old buildings and give employment to additional thousands in the building trades in the erection of new buildings.

Fourth. The investigation of the misnamed "protective bondholders' committees", the receivership and bankruptcy rings.

Fifth. The administration and Congress will do their utmost to increase employment and will provide various means of help to relieve people until private business and industry can give them work.

Sixth. The President has already announced himself as in favor of some practical form of old-age pensions which will take care of the needy and aged in their declining days.

Seventh. It is also probable that Congress may soon enact some form of legislation respecting silver that will work to the advantage both of the farmer and the wage earner.

These are but a few of the accomplishments and aims of the President and the Congress. I am proud as a Member of this House to have modestly aided in these things for the relief of the people, and I will continue to do all in my power to bring back better times.

RECOVERY FIGHT IS STEADILY WINNING

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, many other recommendations await the action of the Democratic Congress, which recommendations, I am satisfied, will shortly be enacted into law.

That business as well as reemployment is advancing is even admitted by this Professor Wirt, as the Steel Trust reports tremendous increases in its business. Every day the financial pages of all newspapers show that many industries have turned from losses in 1930, 1931, and 1932 to gains and profits in 1933, and have increased employment immeasurably, in contrast with the decrease of employment in 1930, 1931, and 1932. President Roosevelt, in his program to effect these necessary and marvelous achievements, has surrounded himself with the brainiest men obtainable, who are laboring under his direction day and night for a mere pittance. These are patriotic men whom the vested interests cannot influence or sway, and whose brains and services nobody can improperly purchase, because they are honest and honorable men, with unsullied rectitude of purpose, having the best interests of the Nation at heart, and whose patriotism it is a shame to question.

No, Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen, they are rendering real efficient service to the people of the country, and whatever danger there is to the Nation and our institutions and our Government comes from the avaricious, greedy coterie of selfish financiers and industrial leaders, who, through their hirelings, professional lobbyists, and propagandists, are determined to secure complete control so that they may reenthrone the dastardly practices which fell with such devastating effect upon our beloved country. Never before has the Capital been infested with a greater number of the most efficient, high-powered lobbyists than it has harbored in the last 3 months, hiding behind the various organizations and associations they have formed under the various high-faluting, innocent-sounding names that have flooded the Nation, and especially the Capital, with the most shameful propaganda in the history of our Nation. The propaganda against stock-exchange control, against the Wagner bill, unemployment insurance, and old-age pensions has assumed unbelievable proportions.

In 1929 each and every seat on the New York Stock Exchange sold for as much as $650,000, while today the privilege to sit in that gambling den has fallen to $100,000 each. It shows that rake-off has diminished, and consequently they are stopping at nothing in their desperation to delay, yes, and to defeat this proposed beneficial legislation, and in despair they are using otherwise well-meaning men and women in every walk of life. Now, Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, there is nothing to be feared from honest, sincere, and patriotic men, but there is something to be feared with these profiteers, racketeers, manipulators; and whatever danger there is, is on the part of those of the Republican Party whom the President felt he could trust, but many of whom are not in sympathy with his program and are undermining his efforts. The sooner he purges himself of these unworthies, the easier he will be able to accomplish his aims and the better it will be for the Nation. Republicans have been in control and in positions of trust for 12 years. They have repeatedly demonstrated they have not the interest of the people at heart. They cannot be trusted; they cannot be depended upon. I urge the President, for his own sake, for the country's sake, to get rid of those who are not in accord with his policies. Then, and not until then, will he attain his accomplishments and the good and well-being of 124,000,000 American people, who trust and have implicit confidence in him. Do not permit a few selfish bankers and their agents, the Wall Street wolves in sheep's clothing, to deceive you, Mr. President, as they did Presidents Coolidge and Hoover.

Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago a particularly vicious attack was made upon the President and the Postmaster General because the Postmaster General had canceled the fraudulent air-mail contracts, which cancelation was ordered upon the advice and assurance of the War Department, not from the so-called "brain trust", but the War Department, I repeat, to whom the Postmaster General assigned the continuation of that service. I concede that it would have been more prudent if the Postmaster General had not relied upon General Foulois' assurance and had satisfied himself in his usual way that the Army Air Service was equipped to handle the situation; but having the right to believe in their knowledge and judgment, he assigned the activities to them. Had not the Postmaster General the best interest of the country at heart, or had he been political-minded, he could have permitted these fraudulent contracts to remain in force and have waited for better weather conditions before taking the action that he did. And because, unfortunately, 13 Army flyers have lost their lives, which I greatly deplore, and which General Foulois states is not extreme and is really below the number of lives that have been lost in the flying of private and commercial planes in the same period, the Republican leaders carried on an inspired crusade such as has very seldom been witnessed before, even charging the administration with legalized murder.

It is indeed most astounding that these very men that were jumping up to attack the President and Postmaster General from day to day on the floor of the House were the very ones who defended the makers of the Republican-built dirigible Akron whose collapse destroyed the lives of 54 courageous and brave men, including that great admiral, William A. Moffett. But the effect of that catastrophe had abated, and new attacks perforce must be made upon the Roosevelt administration.

So this Dr. Wirt is discovered and, in their desperation, the Republican publicity racketeers are frantically endeavoring to assail and besmirch the names and characters of the efficient, patriotic, and capable young men who, for a mere pittance, are giving their all to aid President Roosevelt in his effort to reestablish and rebuild what has been destroyed by the very financial and industrial leaders whom these same publicity assassins are now serving.

As a reward for their patriotic services the President's assistants are being branded as traitors. I concede, Mr. Speaker, that I am not a financial expert or an economist; but by the eternal gods, God has given me some horse sense and I yield to no one in patriotism and love of my country, and I would not hestitate this very minute to give my all, yes, my life, if need be, for the preservation of our Democratic form of Government.

I wish I were possessed of such power of speech and knowledge of the language that I could express my true sentiments against this unmanly attempted assassination of men of real character and sterling patriotism who, I am satisfied in my heart, far excel in patriotism and love of country those who for contemptible political reasons are now attacking them. It seems to me that the Republican Party and its leaders, who have been and still are domineered by the Banking and Steel, and other "steal" Trusts and vested interests, are not familiar with anything but the great corporations and trusts. They are as a class deaf and blind to the misery and despair that they have brought upon millions of men, women, and children of this country. No one is so blind as he who absolutely refuses to see. In Republican desperation to regain power the Republican publicity agents are trying to create in the public mind one more trust, namely, the "brain trust" which they are endeavoring to "sell" to the country, realizing that they cannot use it or control it for the advantage and benefit of their Wall Street masters.

For years the vested interests have combed the country and hired and acquired and are now utilizing the outstanding brainiest and the most efficient men they can obtain to serve their purpose of fooling the people. It is generally known that they have had, and now have on their pay rolls, professors of many universities, economists, and expert publicists. In justice to some of them, at least, I will say that I believe they are serving big business principally because of desperation, fear, and intimidation. On the other hand, when President Roosevelt obtained the services of a few of the best of these patriotic men to enable him to carry out his ideals and plans, those patriots are subjected to the most shameful villification and abuse.

Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I am for the widest possible investigation and, as I have stated on the floor before, if there are any men holding public positions who are not in full accord with the President's program, policies, and principles, let us here and the country at large know who they are, and I will be the first one to insist on their separation from the public service.

Some months ago I called President Roosevelt's attention to the fact that there are many men still in key positions that I am satisfied are not in sympathy with or in accord with his views. Those are men who were inherited from former Republican administrations, many of whom were placed there to serve the interests of the Republican Party but not our country's best interests. Those interests contributed millions toward Hoover's election and for his campaign for reelection; and I fear, as I have stated before, their appointees still in office do not cooperate with and are not helpful but are detrimental to the present honest, efficient, economic Democratic administration.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, let us have the truth; let us identify the selfish and disloyal. Let us not stop half-way. Let there be a thorough investigation, not only of those in the Government service, but of those who, because they cannot control, are willing to destroy the Government. Let us ascertain to what extent the stock exchange, the high financiers, and each of the big industries not only inspire but finance these vicious propagandas against our President and our Government.

Mr. Hearst and his papers rendered the country a great service a few years ago in unmasking the machinations and activities of the Power Trust, wherein evidence was disclosed that they used our universities, colleges, and schools for their unholy work. Today there are still greater opportunities for all truly great newspapers. There is a real duty to be performed, and I have the utmost confidence that in the interest of our institutions and form of government Mr. Hearst and other great publishers will insist upon all the facts being brought to light, to the end that the American people may know the full truth.

In the meantime a few gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol, who appear recently to have graduated from the ranks of progressives to ultraconservatism, are obtaining a little publicity by appearing to take the Wirt incident seriously. I believe they are but building a house of cards that will collapse utterly once the investigation gets under way, for I am satisfied Wirt's charges are but political buncombe.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Tuesday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

THE TARIFF BILL

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, at the time of the roll call on the tariff measure today I was unavoidably detained. I arrived in the Chamber just after the roll was called. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee tell us the program for Monday and Tuesday before we adjourn?

Mr. BYRNS. As the gentleman knows, Monday is Unanimous Consent and Suspension Day. I am hoping that the Unanimous Consent Calendar may be called. I have no knowledge of just what suspensions the Speaker has in mind.

It is my present belief that on Tuesday the bill guaranteeing the home-loan bonds will be taken up and disposed of. Further than that I cannot give the gentleman any information.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, merely to ask a question—of course I shall not object: Is there any reason in the world why this House will not be through with its business in 2 weeks?

Mr. BYRNS. The answer to that question presents many difficulties, because the gentleman is aware there are a number of bills pending before committees.

Mr. BLANTON. We ought to be through with our business in 2 weeks and ought to adjourn in a month; ought we not?

Mr. BYRNS. I think so, undoubtedly; I certainly hope so. [Applause.] The gentleman knows that the District appropriation bill is yet to come in. I hope the District bill may be taken up early next week.

JOHN D. CREMER

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, on last Tuesday evening, in the city of Washington, John D. Cremer, for many years an Official Reporter of Debates of the House of Representatives, passed into the Great Beyond.

Mr. Cremer was born in Huntingdon, Pa., and was for some time connected with the reportorial staff of the Philadelphia Press.

Mr. Cremer came to Washington in 1888 with Samuel J. Randall. He was employed by the Committee on Appropriations of the House. Later he was appointed an official committee stenographer by the late Speaker Joseph G. Cannon, and still later appointed an official reporter of debates. For 23 years he was our companion on the floor of this House. He was respected by the Members of this House and a friend of all the Members during his entire service.

He was an unusual man in many respects. He was an author. He purchased his home here from the proceeds of his writings. He was a poet, and I am informed that he had one of the finest libraries of poetry in the United States. He was our friend and he has gone to the Great Beyond, and I think it well that we should pause for a moment to pay respect to his memory at this time. I deem it an honor to say these few words as a fellow Pennsylvanian.

CORRECTION IN COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct a misprint in the report of the Committee on Labor. The middle initial of my name is given as "T." This should be changed to the letter "P." My name is Patrick.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The Chair laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

MARCH 28, 1934.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I beg to inform you that I have received from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a subpena duces tecum, directed to me as Clerk of the House of Representatives, commanding me to appear before said court on the 10th day of April 1934, at 9:45 o'clock a.m., as a witness in the case of The United States v. James Cannon, Jr., and Ada L. Burroughs (no. 51159, Criminal Docket), and to bring with me certain and sundry papers, therein described, in the files of the House of Representatives.

The papers in question were filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives pursuant to the Federal Corrupt Practices Act and are now in possession of the House of Representatives in the custody of the Clerk.

Your attention and that of the House is respectfully invited to a resolution of the House adopted in the Forty-sixth Congress, first session (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 680), upon the recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

"Resolved, That no officer or employee of the House of Representatives has the right, either voluntarily or in obedience to a subpena duces tecum, to produce any document, paper, or book belonging to the files of the House before any court or officer, nor to furnish any copy of any testimony given or paper filed in any investigation before the House or any of its committees, or of any other paper belonging to the files of the House, except such as may be authorized by statute to be copied and such as the House itself may have made public, to be taken without the consent of the House first obtained."

And to a resolution adopted by the House in the Forty-ninth Congress, first session (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1295), from which the following is quoted:

"Resolved, That by the privilege of this House no evidence of a documentary character under the control and in possession of the House of Representatives can, by the mandate or process of the ordinary courts of justice, be taken from such control or possession but by its permission.

"That when it appears by the order of a court or of the judge thereof, or of any legal officer charged with the administration of the orders of such court or judge, that documentary evidence in the possession and under the control of the House is needful for use in any court of justice or before any judge or such legal officer for the promotion of justice, this House will take such order thereon as will promote the ends of justice consistently with the privileges and rights of this House."

These resolutions resulted from the issuance of subpenas duces tecum upon the Clerk of the House to produce certain original papers in the files of the House.

Permission to remove from their place of file or custody any documents or papers was denied by the House, but the court was afforded facilities for making certified copies. This seems to have been the uniform practice in respect to subpenas duces tecum issued by a court upon the Clerk of the House to produce in court original papers from the files of the House.

The subpena in question is herewith attached and the matter is presented for such action as the House in its wisdom may see fit to take.

Very respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

[From the Women's Wear, Mar. 28, 1934]

FRENCH WARNED JAPANESE TEXTILE COMPETITION IS A LIFE OR DEATH TRADE THREAT—MOREL-JOURNEL REPORT OF REMARKABLE POWER LOOM ADVANCES AND OTHER ADVANTAGES RESULTS IN RESOLUTION URGING DRASTIC IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Demanding that imported Japanese manufactured products be restricted to the average obtaining for the 3-year period from 1929 to 1932, the chamber of commerce of Lyons, France, acting on a report submitted by its president, Henri Morel-Journel, passed a resolution containing this and other demands, sending a copy of both the report and the resolution to the French Government.

A translation of the report and the resolution has just reached this market and in full is as follows:

"The question of Japanese competition has become really a question of life or death for many of our industries. In today's confusion our attention has been so completely absorbed by the dangers of internal trouble, especially financial trouble, that we have not, unfortunately, given first place in our thoughts to the competition from Japan. The situation is so serious, and it has been remedied up until now so incompletely that it is urgent that public opinion be aroused and that the Government be exhorted to undertake strong, immediate action.

"To believe that Japan has been dumping abroad is an error; the situation is more serious, for it is a question of exporting at prices which for the most part are normal for the manufacturer, although they may appear to us to be abnormal.

CITES LABOR ADVANTAGES

"The Japanese manufacturer actually benefits by:

"1. A good supply of labor, Japan having twice as many inhabitants per square mile as has France, and its population of 69,000,000 increasing at the rate of 1,000,000 a year.

"2. Labor which is skillful, diligent, disciplined, and sober, which with lower wages has a wholesome standard of living which is satisfactory to it.

"3. Wages which have recently been increased—although lagging a year behind the devaluation of the yen—but which are still, all other benefits considered, 20 to 40 percent below ours for working hours 10 to 20 percent longer.

"4. Modern equipment, the industrial development of the country being recent (62,000 mills in 1930 against 7,600 in 1896), and the large profits made during the war having been for the most part reinvested in industry.

"5. Labor laws less rigorous than ours. (Labor is not subject to the regulations of the Washington Conference and can work 54 to 60 hours per week.)

"6. A solid organization of guilds and unions with which the Government cooperates actively and which are subsidized by the Government.

"7. Devaluation of the yen, which gave such an effective push to Japanese exports in 1932 and 1933; this is repeated simply as a reminder, since it has now been largely offset by the increase in wages and by the rise in prices in Japanese money or raw materials, which industry is obliged to import.

"Aided by these advantages, inspired by a live nationalistic pride, and spurred on, perhaps in error, by the example of the Americans, the Japanese have launched themselves headlong into the production of manufactured articles.

"In cotton they have today 9,000,000 perfected spinning spindles—nine times more than in 1900—and 350,000 looms. They export eight times more cotton cloth than Lancashire, most of whose external markets they have taken.

"In silk they have 400,000 reeling basins producing 100 times more than we have in France—and in 1933 they exported 30,000,000 kilograms, 66,000,000 pounds of the total world production of 37,000,000 kilograms (81,585,000 pounds).

"In artificial silk the increase in spinning plants is perpendicular; from 350,000 kilos (771,750 pounds) in 1923 their production surpassed 40,000,000 kilos (88,200,000 pounds) in 1933, and Japan, no producer at all 15 years ago, has become second largest producer in the world.

"The Japanese had already, in 1930—and the number has since been increased—132,000 power looms weaving large quantities of standard articles in both silk and artificial silk. They have remarkable looms, one weaver operating as many as 15, and they speak of a new power loom of which a weaver will be able to operate 50. The result is that they sell in France, in spite of the tariff, all silk crepe de chines. The export of Japanese artificial-silk fabrics jumped from 48,000,000 yards in 1929 to 90,000,000 yards in 1931, and to 249,000,000 yards in 1933—an increase of 500 percent in 4 years.

INCREASE FROM 9 TO 55 PERCENT

"In Indo-China, where Lyons has important interests, the percentage of imported Japanese fabrics has increased from 9 percent in 1930 to 55 percent in 1932, and at the time that the minimum tariff was applied to Japanese products at the end of 1932, French silk fabrics lost the Indo-Chinese market, when they were able to import only 400 kilos (882 pounds) during the first 3 months of 1933.

"The textile mills comprise almost 40 percent of Japanese industry, but in addition to this, numerous industries were established and modernized, thanks to the war of 1914–18, and further development has not ceased since then; the metal industries have increased tenfold their total business from 1914 to 1933; the chemical industries sixfold, the food industries fivefold.

"Assisted by a merchant marine which has now attained third place in the world, Japanese exports have thus developed to a point where French external and even internal commerce is endangered.

"The Chamber of Commerce of Lyons would have preferred to be able to wait until this problem, so serious to our country, might find a natural solution in the sobering that must come to industries and nations which develop their production blindly, but natural solutions are often slow, and especially under present circumstances each day of delay puts our economic situation in danger. Furthermore, not wishing our colonies or the mother country to perish in preference to our principals, we cannot wait until commercial agreements shall have reestablished international exchange with consideration to the shifting of the center of gravity of world production.

ACTION URGED

"Consequently, I move you to take action as follows:

"Whereas the Lyons Chamber of Commerce having received from its members more and more complaints of greater and greater urgency on the character of invasion made by Japanese exports during the past few years, not only on our own internal but on the external markets upon which we have been accustomed to sell; and

"Whereas the cost of our products is augmented by factors which do not exist in Japan, the latter not being subject to the international conventions which regulate our labor; and

"Whereas to be able to compete on an equal footing it would be necessary for us to renounce those conventions which have improved conditions for the working classes and to lower the wages of our civilization to the level of the Far East: Be it

"Resolved—

"1. That the working conditions in all countries be equalized by international convention, permitting no exceptions, and that importation of products proceeding from countries not included in the conventions shall be prohibited in concert by all signatory nations.

"2. That in the meantime competitive Japanese products be placed under an equitable quota, bearing in mind the need of the Japanese to export and the fact that during the war of 1914–18, when all our resources were devoted to the defense of our soil, the Japanese were developing their industrial equipment with which they are today taking possession of our markets.

"3. That corresponding measures be taken so that French products may conserve their markets in the colonies and countries under mandate (in these latter, Japan sells more and more and buys almost nothing).

"4. That chambers of commerce be consulted for articles which have not yet been covered by special contingency measures or by paragraphs 2 and 3 above, and that as soon as an opinion can be formed the Government take the necessary steps to protect the life of our industries and our export commerce."

This resolution was sent to the Government.

Resolved, That a committee of the House be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. POU in the House of Representatives at 2 o'clock on Monday, April 2, 1934, and that the House of Representatives attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the remains of Mr. POU be removed from Washington to Smithfield, N.C., in charge of the Sergeant at Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these proceedings to the Senate and invite the Vice President and the Senate to attend the funeral in the House of Representatives and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the House.

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard to attend the funeral in the Hall of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in the absence of both of the Senators from North Carolina, I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S.Res. 216) was read, considered, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. EDWARD W. POU, late a Representative from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed by the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Senate accept the invitation of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased to be held in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 2 o'clock post meridian on Monday, April 2, instant.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Under the resolution, the Vice President appointed the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] the committee on the part of the Senate.

PROBLEMS FOR THE BAR—ADDRESS BY ATTORNEY GENERAL CUMMINGS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address on Immediate Problems for the Bar, by Hon. Homer Cummings, Attorney General of the United States, delivered at the silver anniversary banquet of the New York County Lawyers' Association at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, on March 14 last.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, members of the New York County Lawyers' Association, ladies, and gentlemen: As, of course, you are aware, the Department of Justice has, for nearly a year, been conducting what is popularly known as "a campaign against crime." Manifestly, the situation is one calling for unusual and intensive effort.

The cost of crime has cast upon the people of the United States an annual burden of appalling proportions. In nearly every sizable community throughout our country heavy tribute is exacted from honest enterprise by the threats and violence of the racketeer. Roving criminals, engaged in various kinds of predatory offenses, constitute a serious menace to life, property, and personal freedom. Instructed as to the relative security which lies in the twilight zone between Federal and State authority, these roaming groups seek safety there—and all too often find it.

Moreover, it must be confessed that there exists a distressing break-down of the law-enforcement agencies in many parts of our land. Interwoven with these various factors are to be found the subtle and evil influences which characterize the alliance between the lower grade of politicians and the criminal classes. We are forced, also, to recognize the fact that certain members of the bar, skirting close to the verge of criminality, permit the cloak of our profession to protect notorious enemies of society.

I do not pause to discuss the manifold aspects in which the crime problem presents itself. It is enough to say that there is no question confronting the American people which is of more immediate and vital consequence.

In the difficult and important business of meeting this emergency some degree of leadership must be afforded by some agency that can deal with the subject with a fair degree of authority, and with a Nation-wide approach. It is for this reason that I have felt that a high duty rested upon the Department of Justice.

I have not entered into this matter impulsively or with any illusions. I have fully realized that it presents difficulties which cannot be solved by a dramatic coup or by sporadic and intermittent attack. It presupposes a long and persistent campaign, supported and encouraged by the earnest cooperation of all who respect law and believe in orderly government.

At the outset the Department of Justice set up a special division to deal with racketeering and kidnaping. We strove, also, to bring about a more intimate, friendly, and cooperative spirit between the Federal and local law-enforcement agencies. This was a matter of the highest consequence. We have established at Alcatraz Island in San Francisco Harbor a new penitentiary which will supply an essential and necessary link in our coordinated prison system. We have sought also to improve our scientific facilities, strengthen our organization, advance the training of our personnel, and last but not least, stiffen our own morale. I am happy to report that the results already achieved have been distinctly gratifying.

Moreover, the Department of Justice (in collaboration with the Senate Committee on Crime, represented so efficiently by Senators COPELAND, MURPHY, and VANDENBERG) has caused to be presented to the Congress a 12-point program of proposed laws. I do not pause to discuss these bills because I desire quickly to pass on to certain problems with which we here tonight are more intimately concerned. It is enough to say that these measures are not calculated to place the Federal Government in control of the crime situation of the country. It is not our purpose to invite local organizations to turn over their problems to the Federal Government. Law enforcement, now and hereafter, must, for the most part, be a matter of local concern. Moreover, there are constitutional limitations which have ever been kept in view. The bills, in general, deal with the menace of an armed underworld and with that aspect of the problem which has been brought so dramatically forward of late by roving groups of criminals, passing and repassing State lines and bent constantly upon predatory crimes of violence.

I cannot rid my mind of the insistent thought that all the matters I have heretofore mentioned merge into certain other problems with which we, as members of the bar, are related by direct obligation. "The law's delay" has been a byword since Shakespeare's time, and the activities of certain unscrupulous lawyers who seek to bridge the gap between respectability and crime have brought grave reproach upon the profession.

Let me take up these two problems in their order:

I am persuaded that if the Federal courts could reform their procedure and render it not only simpler but more responsive to actual needs, the example of such a system would have a powerful and corrective effect upon the practice in the several States.

Courts exist to vindicate and enforce substantive rights. Procedure is merely the machinery designed to secure an orderly presentation of legal controversies. If that machinery is so complicated that it serves to delay justice or to entrap the unwary, it is not functioning properly and should be overhauled.

When the details of procedure are prescribed by statute, errors can be cured only by legislation. Regulation follows regulation with bewildering multiplicity until there is created a morass of laws in which the whole profession is mired. Thus the Field Code of Procedure adopted in New York in 1848 contained only 391 sections. It later grew to 3,397 sections. The California code was amended 340 times in 10 years. Manifestly, procedural questions are too technical and too lacking in popular appeal to receive adequate consideration by any legislative body.

The Federal Conformity Act of 1872, regulating actions at law in the district courts, provides that practice and procedure in such actions shall conform, as near as may be, to that which is followed in the State in which the court sits. Whenever the Congress has legislated as to a particular matter, the statute thus enacted is, of course, controlling. The words "as near as may be", under the liberal interpretation given to them, have introduced a bewildering mass of exceptions. A litigant in an action at law in a Federal district court is, therefore, compelled to study, first, the State system of practice; second, Federal legislation relating to procedure; and, third, judicial decisions sanctioning departure from State practice. As the practice is not uniform in the 48 States, a serious burden is imposed upon lawyers who appear before Federal courts in more than one State, and also upon judges who are assigned to sit outside their immediate jurisdictions. Perhaps the most vital objection is that the Federal courts are tied to the antiquated system of statutory regulation now generally prevailing in the various States. Reform and improvement are, therefore, hopelessly stalled at the outset.

Let me turn, by way of contrast, to the manifest advantages of a system under which rules are adopted by the courts. Clearly this centers authority and responsibility in qualified hands. If changes are required, they are readily perceived by those who function under them. Surely rules of court can be applied with less rigidity than statutory provisions. Under such an arrangement we would have every right to anticipate fewer decisions based upon technical questions of procedure while the attention of the bench and bar could be directed to the substance of right rather than to its form. Moreover, such a system tends to preserve the true balance between the legislative and judicial branches of the Government and is, therefore, in harmony with basic constitutional principles.

The policy I am advocating is not an untried, theoretical reform. It has been in full force in England since the Judicature Act of 1873. The English administration of justice is rightly renowned. Legal writers attribute no small share of its celerity and success to the fact that practice and procedure are regulated by rules prescribed by a rules committee, consisting of 8 judges and 4 lawyers.

In our country, for more than a century, the United States Supreme Court has been permitted to regulate practice and procedure in equity cases The results have been highly satisfactory. If this power could be extended to actions at law, the Court would be in a position to unite the equity and law practice so as to secure one form of civil action and procedure for both. This would constitute a legal reform of the first magnitude.

For more than 20 years the American Bar Association has advocated the granting of such power to the United States Supreme Court. A bill of this character was first introduced in 1912, and, although it has never reached a vote, it has been brought forward in almost every succeeding Congress.

The proposal was endorsed by Attorneys General McReynolds, Gregory, Palmer, Stone, and Sargent. Mr. Elihu Root and the late Judge Alton B. Parker have personally appeared before a committee of Congress in favor of the measure. In 1921 a questionnaire submitted to Federal judges disclosed that, of those replying, more than 80 percent of the circuit judges and 75 percent of the district judges favored the proposal.

Legal, commercial, and business organizations have, with striking unanimity, approved this reform. It has been endorsed by 46 State bar associations, the conference of Commissioners of Uniform State Laws, the executive committee of the Association of Law Schools, the United States Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Credit Men, the Commercial Law League, the National Civic Federation, and the Southern Commercial Congress. It has been approved by present or former deans of many important law schools, including Harvard, Yale, Cornell, and Virginia.

In 1910, in a message to Congress, President Taft sponsored the proposal. Two years later it was unofficially approved by President Wilson. In a message to Congress President Coolidge made similar recommendations. I am authorized to say here tonight that this proposed reform also carries the endorsement of President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Persuaded that this is the course of right and reason, I have recently communicated with the chairmen of the appropriate Senate and House committees suggesting the reintroduction of this bill. I earnestly urge its passage.

Our one great enemy is inertia. But surely the hour has struck. Let us not confess that we are so disorganized, so indifferent, so lazy, so ineffectual, and so impotent that we cannot marshal our forces in behalf of a measure of reform which the leaders of the bar have so long and so overwhelmingly approved.

The other matter of major importance to which I direct your attention has to do with the problem growing out of the improper activities of certain members of the profession in their contacts with the criminal classes.

There are at least three methods of dealing with lawyers of this type.

Under certain circumstances they may be prosecuted for the violation of Federal or State criminal law. There are many available statutes which seem to have fallen into relative disuse. Other offenses may be reached by fine or imprisonment for contempt of court. Finally, there is the powerful weapon of censure, suspension, or disbarment.

A wider use of these powers would, I am sure, not only bring about a better discipline and eradicate many evil practices but would rid the profession of undesirable elements we have suffered far too long. Courts, bar associations, grievance committees, and individual practitioners should not shrink from performing their full duty in this crucial matter.

The privilege of practicing law is a public trust. Of course, no one challenges the duty of a lawyer to represent his client with loyalty and to the utmost of his ability, but it must not be forgotten that his paramount obligation is to the court of which he is an officer. An attorney who prevents or obstructs justice, or attempts so to do, is guilty of a grave breach of duty. Even if his conduct is not sufficiently serious to warrant indictment for a crime, there is no reason in justice or decency or in self-respect which requires honorable members of the bar longer to tolerate his presence.

I am pleading here tonight, not only for the cooperation of those present at this meeting but for the support of those who are doing me the honor of listening in over the radio. I have sketched earlier in the evening the things done, the new laws proposed, and the immediate program of tonight. I cannot leave this latter topic with a mere admonition and appeal. I realize that adequate means of contact must be set up, so that what has been achieved will not be lost, and that further gains may be made. With this in view, I have asked three eminent members of the bar to act as a board of advisers, with headquarters in Washington. These gentlemen have consented to serve without remuneration, and simply from a sense of public and professional duty. I also expect, after consultation with them, to designate a special assistant to the Attorney General who will devote the greater part of his time to following up the various matters to which I have referred, supplying, as it were, a clearing house for information and mutual help. This nonpartisan board of advisers will be made up of Hon. Frank A. Thompson, of the St. Louis Bar, Hon. George W. Whiteside, of the New York Bar, and Hon. Donald Defrees, of the Chicago Bar.

In essence, I am placing at the disposal of the courts, the bar associations, and the grievance committees of the bar the facilities of the Department of Justice, with a view to bringing about a greater coordination of effort in this matter of grave and common concern.

I say to you with the utmost earnestness that this subject has become a matter of such wide-spread interest that its consideration has reached far beyond the limits of our profession. The press and the public are watching, I fear somewhat critically, our efforts to speed up justice, to simplify procedure, and to purge the profession of its unworthy members. The task, admittedly, is one of great difficulty, but I am persuaded that it is far from being impossible. And, above all, it is one that cannot be delayed. The dignity of our calling, the progress and development of the law, the security of our institutions, the protection of property, the safety of our people, the sanctity of life—all these things, and many more, plead to us here at this hour that we shall not fail in our duty to the profession we love and to which we have given the devotion of our lives.

JOHN A. SIMPSON MEMORIAL EXERCISES

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the recent death of John A. Simpson, president of the National Farmers Union, occasioned wide-spread mourning. Mr. Simpson was always the farmer's friend. This has been particularly evident during recent days in the form of tributes paid his memory.

On March 24 memorial exercises were broadcast over the radio, which were participated in by several of our colleagues, including the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], my colleague the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and others. I ask unanimous consent that the addresses delivered on that occasion may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL BROADCAST MARCH 24, 1934, IN HONOR OF JOHN A. SIMPSON, PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL FARMERS' UNION, WHO PASSED AWAY ON MARCH 15 AT WASHINGTON, D.C.

After two beautiful musical selections the announcer introduced Mr. Frank E. Mullen, the National Broadcasting Co.'s director of agricultural programs:

Mr. MULLEN. Good day, my friends.

We have a sad duty to perform today, and yet it is one which we are proud to fulfill. As you know, the fourth Saturday of each month on the National Farm and Home Hour has for several years been under the auspices of the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America, and today is Farmers' Union day. The Farmers' Union has lost its great leader, John A. Simpson, whose voice was so familiar to many of you, and today we are paying tribute and honoring the memory of this militant personality.

The men you are to hear on this memorial program furnish in themselves eloquent testimony as to the esteem in which John Simpson was universally held. As for myself, I shall miss him and his forthright denunciation of those things which he fought so vigorously. To me it makes no difference whether he was always right; the important thing is that he had the courage of his convictions and did not hesitate to voice them. He had the respect of his fellow men, and is not that the big thing in life? And now, without more ado, I want to present Mr. Simpson's closest coworker for the Farmers' Union, Mr. E. E. Kennedy, national secretary. Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. KENNEDY. This is the fourth Saturday of the month, the regular Farmers' Union hour. It is fitting and in keeping with the expressed wishes of thousands of members and listeners that this hour today be dedicated by the National Farmers' Union to the memory of a great leader in a great cause, John A. Simpson, our departed chief. At the studios of the National Broadcasting Co. at Chicago and at Washington there are gathered men who have worked with Mr. Simpson for many years and who wish to do honor to the memory of one of America's greatest citizens and patriots. In many thousands of homes and at innumerable meeting places men and women are grouped around radio sets to take part in this Nation-wide tribute to Mr. Simpson. His powerful voice that was ever raised against the wrong and that eloquently drove home the truth in the cause of humanity can never reach them again. But while that voice has been stilled, the forceful messages which Brother Simpson has delivered over the radio to the Congress and from the public platform will be carried on and on by thousands of other voices from thousands of platforms, and the work will go on.

After having served for 14 years as State president of the Oklahoma Farmers' Union M.r. Simpson was elected national president in November 1930. This was a crucial hour in the history of agriculture in America and the Nation. President Simpson immediately began to point out with unerring accuracy the errors of the Government's policy toward agriculture and the danger to the farmers and to the Nation. He contended vigorously that it must be the policy of our Government to treat agriculture as it treats business and industry; that it is the duty of our Government to refinance the farmers' mortgage indebtedness on as favorable terms as it accords to business and industry; that it is the duty of Government to see that the farmer receives the cost of production plus a reasonable profit for his products; that it is the duty of Government and not the privilege of bankers to issue the currency of the Nation. Under the leadership of Mr. Simpson the National Farmers' Union embodied these principles in the Frazier-Lemke bill to refinance the farmer at 1½ percent and the Swank-Thomas bill to give the farmer the cost of production plus a reasonable profit for his products consumed in our home market, the Wheeler bill to remonetize and provide for the free coinage of silver. Ever taking up the cause of the victims of the vicious World War, he was one of the most effective champions of the soldiers' Adjusted Compensation Act.

During the 3½ years of his presidency of the National Farmers' Union, Brother Simpson has caused the principles embodied in these measures to be better known and more fully understood than any laws proposed or passed in the last century. Stark necessity, an aroused sense of justice, and public demand will compel the establishment by law of these principles as the policy of our Government toward agriculture. Mr. Simpson believed in and consistently advocated in his speeches that farmers should work together in buying and selling cooperatively.

I wish to summarize a few of the outstanding characteristics that I have had many excellent opportunities to observe in my work with Brother Simpson. The problem of any farmer, no matter how humble was never too small to get his personal attention, and no problem was too big but that it received his unerring decision. Fear of personal or political consequences never influenced or altered his decisions. He constantly insisted in telling committees of Congress what they should know and what should be done. He constantly worked for results rather than effect. He never sacrificed a fundamental principle for the sake of expediency. The fine example of his courageous leadership in this battle for human rights has left with us a heritage. Every union member and friend of the cause is the beneficiary.

It may be likened to a fertile field—the soil has been carefully prepared; there is an absence of weeds; the seed is planted and has sprouted. It is our duty to keep it clean, to provide the showers and the sunshine, to protect it from the enemies that would gnaw at its roots and blight the growing plants.

We will continue to work together in this field with President Everson as our leader, and we will be together at the harvest, the harvest that will bring security in the right to live.

John A. Simpson shall not have lived, neither shall he have died, in vain.

Mr. Milo Reno, of Des Moines, Iowa, is filling several speaking engagements in the State of New Mexico and is therefore unable to be with us in person today. Mr. Reno has been associated with Mr. Simpson for a long time in the battle for justice for agriculture. He prepared a message, however, and has asked me to deliver it for him. This is Milo Reno's message:

"John A. Simpson, our great president and our brother and friend, has passed on to his rightful place among the immortals. He spoke for truth and righteous causes in sincere and simple words. His voice is stilled forever; but the plain, honest thoughts and deeds of this great Farmers Union leader will echo eternally in our homes and in our meeting places. Farmers of America will never forget this good man.

"It was my privilege to work with Brother Simpson in the great battle for justice to agriculture. We enjoyed a fellowship and real friendship that is rare and precious among men. His program and his purposes ran so deeply true to the rights and needs of farmers that all honest-thinking men could stand shoulder to shoulder with him in the fight he made for the plain folks on our American farms.

"And so we know you farmers out there in the cotton fields of the sunny South, and you farm folks of the great Corn Belt and Middle West understood John Simpson as your defender and your friend. The humblest farmer on the bleak prairies of the great Northwest, the laborer in the mines and factories, the man without a job, hungry in this land of too much food, you knew John Simpson as your spokesman, your fellow worker, and your true friend. His voice was the voice of the Farmers Union, his message was the program of the Farmers Union. His fight was the Farmers Union fight for social justice and economic decency. Surely if America is to live again and to prosper again, John Simpson pointed the true way. Surely if farmers and honest workmen are to regain a level of decent, honorable, American living conditions, John Simpson has not lived in vain.

"The great souls who have made our Farmers' Union have met and welcomed John Simpson to the sphere beyond that veil which separates men from the infinite. What a gathering, my friends. Newt Gresham, of Texas, father and founder of the organization we love; John Tromble, of Kansas; George Loftus, of the Dakotas; Dr. Philpott, of Colorado; Charles H. Watts, the pioneer of cooperative marketing—these and many others who sacrificed themselves for the cause of truth and justice to farmers. Such men as these must inspire us to carry on the good fight. Heartbreaking to lose such men; and yet they are a challenge to the very best we have in us. Without them the Farmers' Union could not continue to live and battle for agriculture. Yet to each and all of them, and especially to John Simpson, the plainest and humblest Farmers' Union member, stood first and greatest of all things. It was to serve and not to command that Simpson lived.

"John Simpson was a real man, a loyal friend of good men, and a champion of good deeds. He was an implacable, uncompromising foe of men and things that seek to destroy simple human happiness. It is impossible to realize that this active, militant spirit has passed on. We find consolation in great work well done, and the splendid record of his thoughts and his deeds stands without a blemish. Fortunately, every Farmers' Union member and every farmer has full access to his writings and his speeches at any time. No greater tribute could be paid him than to reread and review his thoughts and teachings now.

"Words could not express my depth of feeling for John Simpson. I can only say, as he would himself say, carry on the Farmers' Union struggle for justice for agriculture. This was his life and in the reaches of the Great Beyond I know it is his wish for you and for me."

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. E. H. Everson, of St. Charles, S.Dak., who was vice president, became the president of the National Farmers' Union after the death of Mr. Simpson. Mr. Everson is a South Dakota farmer. For the past 6 years he has been president of the South Dakota Farmers' Union. He is a worthy successor to our late president—honest, straightforward, and unafraid. I now present Mr. E. H. Everson, president of the National Farmers' Union. Mr. Everson.

Mr. EVERSON. Members of the Farmers' Union and friends out in radioland everywhere, it is with a profound feeling of sorrow and regret that through the death of our beloved national president, John A. Simpson, it has become necessary for me to hoist the Farmers' Union banner and place it securely at the masthead and carry on the fight for justice to our basic industry, agriculture.

I fully realize the tremendous weight of the duties and responsibilities he has just laid down, and how difficult it will be for me to carry on the work which he has thus far so nobly advanced. However, we must carry on, and I appeal to the membership throughout the length and breadth of this land to bear with me while I familiarize myself with these duties and responsibilities, and I assure you that, with an abiding faith in our noble principles and purposes and with a courageous determination that these principles and purposes can and must prevail, we will go marching on.

I say to you members and officers throughout the various States that, knowing Brother Simpson as I did, I am sure that he would feel that we could erect no greater monument to his memory than that of building a great and powerful farmers' union in every State of the Union.

Let us accept this loss as a challenge to our cause and, fired with the righteousness of our cause and with a dauntless courage and determination of which John Simpson was a living example, march onward and upward to loftier heights, where through a multitude of counsel we shall have a clearer vision of the problems of life. I believe John Simpson was the type of man Reverend Holland had in mind when he wrote his well-known poem, God Give Us Men.

John A. Simpson was a courageous champion of human rights. He believed in approaching our agricultural problems from the grass roots upward rather than from the swivel chair downward. He was a man of ideals such as I had in mind when I penned the following poem entitled "Ideals of a Noble Citizen." I wish to dedicate this poem to all the listeners:

IDEALS OF A NOBLE CITIZEN

A heart that's so tender, so kind, and so true
That its kindness and tenderness grips your heart, too;
A mind that's so keen it can always discern
'Twixt the good and the bad, that the good we may learn.
A vision so clear it can see in the distance
The wrongs that are threatening and need our resistance—
A courage so dauntless to uphold the right,
No matter how stormy and bitter the fight;
A foot that dares tread where'er duty calls,
A hand that gives help to a brother who falls;
A voice soft and mellow, yet firm as a stone,
Telling truths to the masses, that they may be known;
A conscience so clear where justice sublime
Keeps out envy and malice toward all mankind.
All these are ideals you should strive to attain,
So that Truth, Love, and Justice o'er our fair land shall reign.

Our Farmers' Union program for the solution of our farm problem is through an aroused and enlightened, organized cooperative agricultural democracy, and I assure you we must concentrate our efforts in its development with greater vigor and energy than ever before. I assure you that just in proportion as we do this, just in like proportion shall a confused and bewildered, burdensome, encroaching, dictatorial governmental bureaucracy recede.

Mr. KENNEDY. The next part of our program will be given in our Capital City, after which we will return again to Chicago. We shall hear messages from Senator ELMER THOMAS, of Oklahoma Senator THOMAS R. GORE, of Oklahoma, Senator LYNN J. FRAZIER, of North Dakota, and Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, of Montana, also from Congressman F. B. SWANK, of Oklahoma, and Congressman WILLIAM LEMKE, of North Dakota. Former Congressman John M. Baer, of Washington, D.C., will also speak, and he will introduce the different speakers from there. I now present John M. Baer, our friend.

Mr. BAER. It is to be regretted that this hour over which the late John A. Simpson has made such eloquent appeals to the Nation for distressed agriculture should be given over to memorial exercises for him. But it is highly fitting that a few of his many friends here in the Nation's Capital gather to pay tribute to his great work.

All the remedies offered for agriculture by the National Farmers' Union have found expression in bills which are now before Congress. It was in an effort to obtain the passage of this remedial legislation that John Simpson gave his life.

The speakers who will follow are the authors and sponsors of these farm measures.

The first speaker is United States Senator ELMER THOMAS, of Oklahoma. Senator THOMAS.

Senator THOMAS. This is John Simpson's hour.

John is not here today, hence some of his friends are substituting for him.

Substitute is all we can do—his place we cannot fill.

John Simpson—the clay—has gone the way of all the world, but John Simpson—the positive, radiant, and dominating personality lives on and is with us still.

While not born in Oklahoma, the State I love gave John Simpson to the Nation and to the world.

From Alpha to Omega I knew his active private and public life.

From farmer to banker, from banker to legislator, from legislator to organizer, from organizer to spokesman, and from spokesman to leader, John Simpson became the oustanding agricultural leader of his time.

He was created to be a leader.

His origin, education, and experience prepared him for the task which destiny had decreed.

John Simpson believed that Government should be maintained to protect the weak and to restrain the strong.

He believed in equal rights and condemned privilege in every form.

He believed that those who toil should enjoy some of the wealth they produce and create.

He believed that money and credit should be available on equal terms to great and small; to the proprietor of the farm as well as to the captain of industry.

He believed that those who feed and clothe the world should have not only cost, but in addition, a reasonable profit.

He believed, insisted, and demanded that agriculture be recognized as a part of the capitalistic and governmental system of America.

Upon this program John Simpson stood.

From conquest to conquest, in the South and West, he moved on to the Nation's Capital.

Washington was to become his major battleground.

The first fight he sought was with a giant of industry, and when the battle ended a colossus of monopoly resigned his Federal post and retired to private life.

Some men use language to conceal, to cloud, and to camouflage their thoughts.

John Simpson used language to disrobe and expose sham, pretense, and falsehood so that truth might be beholden to the people.

With him he brought the problems of the farmer to the Capital of the Nation.

He presented the program of agriculture to every bureau of the Government and to every committee of the Congress.

No responsible representative here, from President to clerk, has been in doubt as to the things for which he stood.

Because of the clarity of his program, the zeal of his advocacy and the justness of his cause, he went from victory to victory until the Congress was his agent.

Yet, well he knew that there are forces operating here greater and more powerful than even the Congress itself.

John Simpson soon discovered that industry controlled the tariff; that railways controlled transportation; that banks controlled money, credit, and finances; and more recently he learned that Aviation controlled the mails—if not the air.

During all this time the farmer, forming the most numerous group, and agriculture, constituting the most valuable industry, were forgotten and neglected.

Such neglect brought on decay, and decay was leading rapidly to dissolution.

John Simpson stated and restated the doctrine that none can live and survive if the masses remain impoverished.

Then, suddenly and almost too late, it dawned upon America that our whole economic system and even our form of government could not long exist unless agriculture should be revived.

Today official Washington and impoverished industry, great and small, concede the Simpson claims, that prosperity cannot return until farmers and wage earners regain their buying power.

Agricultural equality was the Simpson creed.

John Simpson led the leaders in this drive; and if those he left behind carry on, the fight he launched will yet be won.

John Simpson is dead, yet the John Simpson we knew still lives.

Mr. BAER. The next speaker is United States Senator THOMAS P. GORE, of Oklahoma. Senator GORE.

Senator GORE. Friends of agriculture, friends of peace, friends of freedom, you and I have lost a friend. You can say, I say of John Simpson, as Marc Antony said to Julius Caesar, "He was my friend, faithful and just to me."

There were many ties which bound us together like hoops of steel. Far back in 1901, in the morning of our lives, Simpson and I settled in the new country, settled in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservation down in Oklahoma. He came from Nebraska. I went up from Texas. The first time I ever saw John Simpson he was living on a farm. He was living in a dug-out. This was in 1902. I was then a candidate for the Territorial senate.

In my first race for the United States Senate, in 1907, John was the only man in Oklahoma who sent me a campaign contribution—the only man. The contribution was small, but the heart was big that sent it. My appreciation was not measured by the size of the gift but by the spirit of the giver. I have never forgotten that timely, that kindly act of friendship. I lost a friend when Simpson died.

Another tie that bound us was a common desire, a common demand that the American farmer should receive justice at the hand of his Government. I attended the first two meetings of the State Farmers' Union in Oklahoma. Simpson afterward became the State president of the Farmers' Union. He proved himself "faithful over a few things." He afterward proved himself "faithful over many things." He was called to the national presidency of the Farmers' Union.

The farmers lost a friend when Simpson died.

Still another tie that bound us was a common desire for peace—a common abhorrence of war—a common belief that our country should not have entered the World War. We both believed that the war was ruining the world and that our entrance into the war would lay the burdens upon the bended backs of our taxpayers too grievous to be borne—believed that we were sowing the wind and that we would one day reap the whirlwind. We are today in the midst of that harvest—a harvest of disaster. John Simpson and I were both the victims of the hatred and the intolerance of war. Peace lost a friend when Simpson died.

I have often thought that the finest characteristic of our friendship was the fact that we could differ without permitting that difference to affect our friendship or our mutual respect for each other. We had found the rare, rich jewel of tolerance in the ugly toad's head of intolerance.

My friends, the living cannot help the dead. They are indifferent alike to our praise and to our blame. We can do honor to their memory. But we honor them most by emulating their example. We honor them most by perpetuating their influence. We honor them most when we see to it that the good which they did is not interred with their bones, when we see to it that the good which they did shall not perish from the earth.

Humanity lost a friend when Simpson died.

Mr. BAER. United States Senator LYNN J. FRAZIER will now address you. Senator FRAZIER.

Senator FRAZIER. I deem it a special privilege to have this opportunity to pay a brief tribute to our friend the late John A. Simpson. Mr. Simpson will long be remembered as an outstanding farm leader. His radio addresses were eagerly awaited and greatly appreciated by his innumerable farm friends throughout the Nation. He was a leader among men. He was a logical thinker and possessed exceptional ability and, above all, was thoroughly sincere and had the courage of his convictions to carry on a consistent fight for the rights of the American farmers.

When the new-deal agricultural program was being worked out, Mr. Simpson insisted upon the average-cost-of-production provision for the basic farm commodities, which had previously been adopted by the National Farmers' Union organization, being included in the bill. His proposal, known as the "Simpson amendment", was adopted by the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate and was likewise adopted by the Senate itself, only to be finally stricken out by the House conferees.

The Simpson amendment provided for a fixed price based on the average cost of production for the percentage of the basic farm commodities used for domestic consumption within our own borders. The principle involved in this amendment was fundamentally sound and just as essential for the restoration of agriculture as was a similar provision for industry, which was later included in the National Recovery Act. Mr. Simpson demanded that agriculture should be put on a parity with other business industries.

His leadership will be greatly missed. His place will be mighty hard to fill. We have lost a true and tried friend. His untimely death was a great blow to the welfare of American agriculture. We who mourn his loss must carry on the fight that he had so courageously waged.

I know I voice the sentiment of the American farm people and of thousands of others when I say that our deepest sympathy goes out to Mrs. Simpson and her family.

Mr. BAER. The next speaker is the Honorable BURTON K. WHEELER, of Montana. Senator WHEELER.

Senator WHEELER. In the death of John Simpson the farmers of America lost their most fearless champion.

Greater love has no man than this: That he give up his life for a fellow man. Exactly this, John Simpson did—surrendered his for the farmers of America. Warned by physicians that he risked his life if he continued his strenuous efforts in behalf of the farming interests, he smilingly persisted. He was stricken in the service of his country as truly as a soldier who gives up all on the field of battle; but Simpson fought on the dull and dreary economic front, without martial music or the roar of cannon, without the fanfare or the trappings of the warrior to sustain him.

He was not a conformer. He was a fighter for righteousness. Often he did many things that shocked the smug and conservative. He had no reverence for antiquity. Thus he made many enemies, and in the fiery ordeal of politics there beat about his head as fierce a storm of abuse and slander as ever in this day has assailed a man of statesmanlike character, consistently patriotic, essentially pure and unselfish.

He was a lover of nature in all her moods, in all her display of sublimity or beauty. He loved all growing things. He could bend over violet or cotton plant, over rose or field of golden grain, with a rapt enjoyment which never grew cold, never grew old. His love of the good earth and of her products embraced the tillers of the soil and gave him a fiery enthusiasm as he championed the cause of the distressed and dispossessed farmers and made his championship doubly effective.

In a spirit of veneration for the worthy dead I am here to express my deep admiration and my feeling of genuine sorrow at a great personal loss. He was my friend, deep, lasting, tender—a splendidly loyal friend. He was just the sort of man patriots would trust, bigots hate, friends blindly follow and sincerely respect, cynics shun, children adore, fakers ridicule, and neighbors love and impose upon.

He was as deserving of genuine affection as any son of Adam I have intimately known, as any I have known who has fought long and hard, as any whose hands were ever given from youth to age to the molding of better laws, better institutions, and better conditions for the common people of America.

Mr. BAER. Congressman F. B. SWANK, of Oklahoma, will now address you.

Congressman SWANK. Ladies and gentlemen of my radio audience, I have been invited during this memorial service over the N.B.C. network to address you for a few minutes upon the life and service of Hon. John A. Simpson, president of the National Farmers' Union.

It was my good fortune to be acquainted with Mr. Simpson for many years, and I repeat now what I have said before, that he was the greatest farm leader in the United States. He was a man of strong convictions and was fearless in the advocacy of the principles of government and of life which he thought were in the best interests of the citizens of our country. John Simpson was a scholar, a statesman, and a born leader. His preparation for the work in which he was engaged was built upon a solid foundation. He was a college graduate and a man of varied business experience. I am glad that he used his wonderful talents for bettering the conditions of the producers of this country.

He was a man of strong character, unquestioned integrity, and devotion to duty. He was man "whom everybody knew, who stood foursquare to every wind that blew." He was not only one of the leading citizens of our beloved Oklahoma and of the United States but, best of all, he was a devoted husband and father. John Simpson was a family man, and nothing pleased him more than to talk to his family as they gathered around the evening fireside.

The facile pen of a Shakespeare or the eloquent tongue of a Webster could not exaggerate the character and good qualities of John Simpson. He was a man who loved his friends and was never timid in speaking of their good qualities.

When John Simpson died, the farmers of the United States lost one of their best friends and the most forceful and eloquent advocate of their rights. He always maintained and many times told me personally that there could be no recovery in this country until agriculture was rehabilitated. He realized that the farmers were engaged in the only business that produces the absolute necessities of life and that agriculture is our basic industry. His theory was, and he was right, that when we aid agriculture we help all lines of business and industry.

John Simpson was personally acquainted with and had the respect of different Presidents of the United States for several administrations. He was personally acquainted with many Members of the United States Senate and of the House of Representatives, and they were all his friends. Even if any of them differed from John Simpson in their views, they had the highest respect for his personal integrity and his ability.

His departure from this life was a great personal loss to me, but we cannot be with our friends always. John Simpson was a kindly man, and his heart always beat in the deepest sympathy at the trials and troubles of his unfortunate fellowmen. He loved children, and his life is a worthy example for their emulation. He was a Christian gentleman and believed in the doctrine promulgated by the Carpenter's Son.

His passing is a distinct loss to our State and to the Nation. If every person to whom John Simpson spoke a kind word or for whom he did a favor were to say a word about him, these words of commendation would make a large volume. If mortal man was ever borne by angelic hands to that eternal home beyond the etherial blue, John Simpson at this moment is resting there. In the language of the poet:

"Green be the turf above thee,
Friend of my better days;
None knew thee but to love thee,
Nor named thee but to praise."

Mr. BAER. Our last speaker on this program is Representative WILLIAM LEMKE, of North Dakota. Congressman LEMKE.

Congressman LEMKE. In paying tribute to John A. Simpson, national president of the Farmers' Union, we feel that we are in the presence of departed greatness. We realize that we are paying tribute to the greatest agricultural leader of our time—to a philosopher and statesman—to a friend of all mankind—to one of America's real great men. The millions who today are paying their respect to their departed friend feel that this is not so much an occasion of sorrow as of sublime solemnity. A grateful Nation today honors itself by honoring the memory of John A. Simpson.

Great men are part of the universe—brothers to the mountains, the hills, the valleys, and the plains, part of all there is, part of a great human cause that is limited only by infinite space and by an eternity of time, the cause of justice for struggling humanity. John A. Simpson lost himself in that cause, the cause of the "forgotten man", the cause of the men and women that, through their labor feed and clothe the Nation. He gave his life to and for that cause.

Just a few moments after he had testified before a Senate committee in an endeavor to get justice, a more equal distribution of the good things of life for the people of this Nation, and while sitting on the steps of the Senate Office Building talking to friends, he quietly passed into unconsciousness. Later, in the Emergency Hospital, and with his latest breath he said, "I am glad I was able to put that over." So as he lived he died, battling for those who labor, feed, and clothe not only this Nation but the world.

John A. Simpson not only visualized but actually felt the suffering and mental anguish of the millions of men and women who during the last few years lost their homes and their all through mortgage foreclosure; of the millions of men, women, and children who suffered the pangs of hunger and want. He opposed the cruel system that starved millions in the midst of plenty. He hated the man-made depression that caused rivers and rivers of tears. It was his purpose to change those tears into miles and miles of smiles and contented homes. He had no patience with the ignorance that destroyed and would curtail the production of food in order to feed the hungry—no patience whatever with the ignorance that would destroy or curtail the production of cotton in order to clothe the ragged. To him such a system and such a philosophy were a disgrace to the intelligent age in which we live.

He advocated that the Government refinance farm indebtedness at 1½ percent interest and 1½ percent principal on the amortization plan, not by issuing interest-bearing tax-exempt bonds but by issuing Federal Reserve notes secured by the best security on earth—first mortgages on the farms of this Nation. He insisted that the farmers be given the cost of production plus a reasonable profit for that part of their products consumed within the United States. He felt that no intelligent or honest person would want to eat or consume the farmers' products for less than it costs to produce them.

John A. Simpson is not dead—great men do not die. His wisdom and his courage have been disseminated and diffused into every nook and corner of this Nation. It has become part of all of us—part of the life of this Nation. Millions are today repeating his words, his wisdom, and sharing his courage. Millions have drunk deep from the fountain of his knowledge. This Nation is a better place to live in and is safer because of the life of John A. Simpson.

Farmers of this Nation—you 30,000,000 men, women, and children who live on the farms—and all friends of liberty, may we not call upon you to pledge anew that you will carry on the work of John A. Simpson until there is a more equal and just distribution of the wealth of this Nation, until justice triumphs; that you will not permit to be established in this Nation a feudal system—a system which would make feudal serfs out of tillers of the soil and lords and barons in the departments in Washington.

In conclusion, may I say that we will carry on the unfinished work of our departed friend; that we feel as if in his living presence is the coming of a new era, of a new civilization—a civilization in keeping with the teachings of the Nazarene.

Mr. BAER. John Simpson died as he lived—on the firing line. He was always in the front-line trenches in the battle for human progress. Up to the last minute he was fighting for genuine measures to relieve our distressed agriculture. The untimely death of this greatest of all progressive farm leaders will be a great loss to the American farmers.

John Simpson believed that the workers on the farms and in the factories should have a greater share of the wealth which they produced. His plan was to establish a new and scientific system of marketing which would eliminate many unnecessary intermediaries and allow the farmers through their own cooperative marketing associations to fix a just price based upon the cost of production. With his excellent education and his thorough business training, coupled with his successful experience he had had in his own State of Oklahoma, John Simpson would have been the ideal man to head such a gigantic undertaking. He has, however, richly endowed us with his principles and ideals, and it is our duty to enter into his fighting spirit and carry on his practical program.

This great farm leader not only supported beneficial farm legislation but he advocated measures endorsed by organized labor. He believed that the interests of the farmers and the city workers were identical. He realized that the major consuming power of farm products is the industrial worker. He often said, that if workers in industry received adequate wages, the farm problem would take care of itself.

In closing, let me again extend our heart-felt sympathy to his bereaved family. His associates in the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America, and the vast host of followers he had on the radio, through the courtesy of the National Broadcasting Co., will greatly regret that they will not hear the sound of his silver-tongued voice, but they will not forget the great principles and ideals which this honest, sincere farm leader advocated.

Mr. KENNEDY. Tribute has been paid to our departed leader in words which will live because they are the truth. I now wish to pay tribute to the one who was nearest and dearest to Mr. Simpson—his wife—who today is listening in on this program, surrounded by her 4 daughters, 2 sons, 1 daughter-in-law, and 3 sons-in-law, as well as the 2 grandsons in their comfortable farm home 10 miles out of Oklahoma City. Few men and fewer leaders of men go through life so loved, strengthened, heartened, and inspired, day after day for more than 37 years as John Simpson did. John was a noble soul; he was a true Christian; and when returning from the Marshfield meeting in Wisconsin on February 8 last, he told me that as long as he had known Mrs. Simpson she had been his guiding star; that her absolute faith in him, her complete and unfaltering support and true companionship was the greatest blessing in his life. His daughter Mildred and his son William were his close associates in the union work. His entire family were his first and most loyal supporters. I wish to say to all of them now, on behalf of this radio audience and the National Union that, while mourning for him who has gone, thousands of heads are bowed and God's blessing is being asked for you whom he left behind. You too will carry on.

I now wish to make a few announcements. The national board of directors has authorized the establishment of a memorial fund the purpose of which is to finance the publishing of a book which will contain a brief history of the life of Mr. Simpson—much of his writings and the radio addresses he made in the last 3½ years. Complete details will be given in the special memorial issue of the Oklahoma Union Farmer of April 15, which will also contain a copy of this memorial broadcast of today. Those of you who would like to have a copy or those who would like to have information and instruction about how you may become a member of the Farmers' Union, write Edward E. Kennedy, national secretary, Kankakee, Ill. President E. H. Everson and I will be leaving for Washington, D.C., tomorrow to carry on the battle for the Farmers' Union legislative program there. We may be reached personally at the Cavalier Hotel.

Remember, the Farmers' Union hour will be on the air over the N.B.C. as usual on the fourth Saturday of the month. The next broadcast is on April 28. Mr. Simpson had planned an organization trip through the South and West in April and May. He had already asked me to make the April radio address, and Brother Everson, who now is our national president, to make the May address. This arrangement will be carried out.

In closing this memorial hour I wish to thank the N.B.C., and particularly Mr. Frank E. Mullen, the director of agricultural programs, for their wonderful help and very special effort to make this radio broadcast today an outstanding event of the year. Mr. Simpson thought a great deal of you, Frank. I am sure the radio audience joins in expressing their deep appreciation, and I wish to do so personally and on behalf of the National Farmers Union. We thank you and all the N.B.C. folks.

I sincerely hope that all the listeners of today will be with us again on April 28 at this same hour. I expect to greet you again at that time.

MONETARY USE OF SILVER

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article on proposed silver legislation appearing in the New York Times of March 25, 1934, and also an article dealing with the same subject appearing in the Washington Herald of March 25, 1934.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Mar. 25, 1934]

BENEFIT TO COTTON SEEN IN DIES BILL—PLAN TO INCREASE OUR MARKET ABROAD FOR SURPLUS CROPS ENCOURAGES SUPPORT—OPPOSITION IS EXPECTED—INFLATIONARY CHARACTER OF SILVER PROGRAM REGARDED AS CONTROVERSIAL

The cotton trade is much interested in the Dies silver bill, which passed the House of Representatives last week and on which public hearings are expected to start before the Senate Agricultural Committee this week. The consensus is that enactment of the bill would benefit cotton more than any other agricultural product, since the surplus is large and cotton is the chief export agricultural product of the United States. The Dies measure provides for the acceptance at a premium of foreign silver for American surplus agricultural products.

Since the Dies measure provides that the silver received in payment for agricultural surpluses shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall issue silver certificates against silver received, the bill is considered inflationary in character. For this reason opposition to it is expected at the hearings before the Senate committee. In view of the claims of its sponsors that the plan will dispose of surplus agricultural products without resorting to curtailment of production, there is in some quarters considerable support for the measure as the lesser of the evils.

As the measure provides for the creation of a board composed of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out its provisions, and as this board will have more or less discretionary power, the feeling is that in the event of its enactment it will be operated on a basis where the monetary system of the country will not seriously be interfered with. Opponents of the bill are not so sure of this and fear that the demands from the agricultural sections may be such that for political reasons or otherwise the board may embark on a heavy program of exchanging agricultural products for silver in foreign markets. This, they maintain, will in time result in a further serious disturbance to our monetary system.

ECONOMY SEEN IN PLAN

It also is provided in the bill that the amount of premium or excess above the world-market price which the board is authorized to agree to as payment for the products sold to foreign buyers shall not exceed $400,000,000 a year. Thus, it is pointed out, the loss to the Federal Government on such a venture other than the inflationary feature of the act, will not exceed $400,000,000 a year. If the expenditure of that sum for the disposal of surplus agricultural products abroad would eliminate processing taxes and other measures already in effect to restrict the production of agricultural products in this country, the enactment of the Dies bill, it is contended, would be the best way of disposing of surplus farm products and by far the cheapest.

The bill further provides that silver taken in exchange for agricultural products shall not exceed 25 percent above the world-market price for silver. On this basis, $2,000,000,000 in agricultural products could be sold abroad each year while the measure is in effect, for which the Treasury would receive $1,600,000,000 in silver at the world-market price. At current quotations of around 45 cents an ounce for silver bullion, approximately 3,500,000,000 ounces of silver or almost one third of the silver reserves of the world would be required yearly. This would result in a demand for silver, and the consensus is that the price would advance sharply.

The Dies bill is considered generally as a subsidy for agricultural products. Because of the provision that silver be accepted at a premium of as much as 25 percent over the world price, it means that surplus American agricultural products sold abroad will be 20 percent cheaper than in the domestic markets, if the full premium is allowed. The farmer, however, would receive the domestic-market price, while the difference would be absorbed by the Federal Government. Some agricultural products, which are selling above the world price, such as wheat, would be less in demand than cotton, for which the domestic and foreign price is virtually the same.

The enactment of the bill, it is contended, would put American agriculture on a parity with other countries. It is pointed out that the cost of producing most crops in the United States because of higher prices for labor, taxes, machinery, and other items would be offset by such an act.

Because of the reduction of the gold content of the dollar to 59.06 percent of its former parity, the current price of American cotton in foreign markets is placed around 7 cents a pound at the old gold value of the dollar. The passage of the Dies bill, it is contended, would result in a further reduction of about 20 percent in the price of cotton abroad. At present prices, cotton would be reduced to around 5½ cents a pound in gold on the old basis, which, with the exception of one or two periods of short duration, is the lowest level at which American cotton ever sold abroad.

This situation, it is believed, probably would discourage foreign growths of cotton. Consequently it would not be necessary to curtail American production in order that cotton farmers would receive a fair price. On the other hand, it is contended that without the enactment of some such plan whereby the prices of American cotton abroad can be kept in line with world economic conditions, the drastic curtailment of production of cotton here will result in loss to the United States of its dominant position in the world cotton market. Restricting cotton production here is to raise prices, it is pointed out, and there is little doubt in the trade that production abroad would be increased approximately as much as production is decreased here.

Until a few years ago most American agricultural products could compete in the world markets. At that time it was the American manufacturer who could not compete with foreign-made goods. As a result high import duties were levied on foreign manufactured goods to protect American industry. Consequently, it is pointed out, American industry has advanced to a high degree of efficiency, but at the same time prices of American goods, a large part of which are consumed by agriculture, have been higher than manufactured articles in other countries. Because of this farmers in other countries, it is said, have an advantage over American agricultural producers. In order that the American farmer may regain his former advantage, many believe it necessary for the Federal Government to aid in the disposal of farm products abroad.

IMPORTANT LEGISLATION

By Robert H. Hemphill, financial authority

The Dies silver bill, which passed the House March 19 by a vote of 258 to 112, provides for the sale of surplus agricultural products to foreign countries in return for payment in silver at not less than 10 percent nor more than 25 percent above the world silver price.

The silver will be taken by the Treasury, which will issue silver certificates for the full purchase value. With these certificates payment for these surplus products will be made to the farmer.

To assure stability, the bill provides for the redemption of these certificates at the option of the monetary board, also created by the bill, and consisting of the President, Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of Commerce, and Secretary of Agriculture, at their face value in silver, as measured in terms of gold.

Therefore this money will be redeemable in the equivalent of gold and in fact, might be redeemable in gold at the option of the Treasurer of the United States.

These certificates will become lawful money of the United States, and as such, will be legal for bank reserves and receivable for all public or private debts, being full legal tender.

The total amount of silver which may be received in payment for surplus agricultural products, assuming the maximum of 25 percent above the world price is always paid, will be $1,600,000,000 annually, for the 3 years which the bill is apparently designed to operate.

How does this legislation affect you, Mr. Average Citizen? Let's analyze.

Assuming that this bill is passed, and $1,600,000,000 of surplus farm products find a market in the silver countries, and that as a result $1,600,000,000 of new money is put into circulation in the United States, it will increase the annual gross business of this Nation $57,600,000,000.

As there is an average of 12 intermediate transactions between the production of the raw material and the finished product delivered to the consumer, this amount of total transactions will result in the creation and exchange between producer and consumer of $4,800,000,000 of new wealth per annum, or to put it in simpler words, will increase the national income (which means the aggregate of your income and mine and all the others of our 125,000,000 people) $4,800,000,000 per annum.

As a side issue, the results of this bill will undoubtedly elevate the world price of silver to fully absorb the premium which this Nation will undertake to pay.

It will open up to our producers trading relations with 1,000,000,000 people who have no gold with which to buy our products from whom we have been divorced since the shrewd manipulators of the Bank of England in 1873, by the judicious use of a slush fund of £500,000 and aided by their satellites in this country, certain of our international bankers put over on the American Congress a fast one entitled "An act revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States."

This act, whose real purpose was kept secret until the Congress had adjourned and which four fifths of the House and Senate understood to be an act relating solely to the operation of the mint—and providing a more scientific method of coining money, demonetized the standard silver dollar, which at that time was the favorite money of America.

To the students of finance, the gradual development of our financial maturity furnishes hopeful assurance that perhaps within the near future we may succeed in divorcing ourselves from the apron strings of the Anglo-American banking group who for 2 centuries, with diabolic cleverness and the assistance of a misguided but tragically effective conservative press, have dictated and controlled our monetary system, and through it our economic development and destiny.

It is a sound bill, and proposes to issue sound money for our surplus agricultural products, and this money when received by the farmer will be expended by him for the diversified products of the Nation, and go into circulation passing from hand to hand 36 times per year in an endless chain of transaction by which we create and exchange goods and services.

It is a distinct, important, and substantial step toward recovery.

RECTIFICATION OF RIO GRANDE—ADDRESS BY AMBASSADOR DANIELS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD extracts from an address by Hon. Josephus Daniels, American Ambassador to Mexico, in El Paso, Tex., Saturday, March 17, 1934, at the celebration of the adoption by the Mexican and Federal Governments of the treaty for the rectification of the Rio Grande.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I highly appreciate the honor done me by the chamber of commerce in its invitation to speak at the celebration of the adoption of the treaty for the rectification of the Rio Grande and the welcome by the mayor of El Paso and officials of the city and chamber upon my arrival here. This pleasure is heightened by the tender by the mayor and officials of the freedom of the city of Ciudad Juarez and the honors by the Twenty-fourth Cavalry under the command of Col. Rodolfo Rivielo, of the Mexican Army, and by like receptions and military honors by Brig. Gen. Walter C. Short, of the American Army, commanding the increasingly important Army establishment at Fort Bliss, and by the cordial welcome by the residents of both cities. I rejoice to have a part in this celebration, both as a citizen of the United States and as the Ambassador to the country which has joined with my own country in agreement upon a tangible plan which is a real exemplification of a forward step essential to both countries. What I have seen in my brief stay in Ciudad Juarez and El Paso today is evidence that the practice of neighborliness is most keenly appreciated by those who dwell on the border of these two sovereign Republics, where its observance blesses every phase of private and public endeavor.

The concept of neighborliness by those living close together remains either a vacuous theory, sterile and unproductive of any real good, or, on the other hand, has breathed into it the life-giving spark of actuality by zealous application in practice. Like many other worthy ideals, this one, unhappily, sometimes remains but a shibboleth reposing, undisturbed by exercise, in the minds of men. There is every reason why the people of this continent, animated, as they are, by the same fundamental desire—the desire that the social order shall always guarantee for all men the great principles of liberty, of equality, and of justice—should find much common ground for putting this principle into practice. Each has much to contribute; each has much to learn from the other.

These two splendid, modern cities of El Paso and Juarez (almost a twin city), with their good schools, railroad and industrial facilities, and the many other things which make for urban welfare, supplying and being supplied by almost countless miles of surrounding country both to the north and to the south of the Rio Grande, with their potential wealth of precious metals and vast herds of cattle and flocks of sheep, have much in common.

Both of the sister slopes of this pleasant valley, through the art of irrigation, have seen the desert converted into a giver of good things almost with a semblance of the magic of the bloom springing from the flower pot in the hand of the East Indian magician. To these broad and fertile acres the fearsome threat of drought is unknown. By the reservoiring of water against the time of need, the threat of drought, otherwise always present in the vagaries of season and nature, has been stripped of much of its danger. The banishing of the uncertainty of moisture by rainfall, and the resulting boon to the peoples of both banks of the Rio Grande in this valley, serves as another and earlier example of what may be done when good neighbors set out to solve their common problems by a community of endeavor and purpose.

I have always liked to visualize boundaries—whether municipal, State, or international—not as lines of division or separation, but rather as lines by which neighboring peoples are joined. Indeed, it is only the earnest and sincere application of such a concept by both national principals to engage upon it as would render conceivably possible the cooperative erection of the extensive works about to be here undertaken, which upon its completion will pay lasting homage to the reality of such conception.

The project for the rectification of the Rio Grande over many miles of its course common to both neighbors and of common utility to both, and the subjugation of its flood threat of destruction to the great storehouse of urban and rural wealth reposing in the El Paso-Juarez Valley, is one which testifies in most eloquent terms to the material as well as civil and social good that may be attained by carrying into practice the true spirit which animates good neighbors.

* * * * * * *

For many years Old Man River, called "Rio Grande" in the United States and "Rio Bravo" in Mexico, which constitutes the boundary between Mexico and the United States, has been an unruly fellow. The Spaniards, evidently first seeing the river at its flood, called it the Rio Bravo del Norte, meaning the swift, tumultous, and intractable river of the north. Long before Cortez and Malinche had conquered Montezuma and the adventurous Spaniard had made himself master from Veracruz to Acapulco, and from California to Guatemala, and centuries before Sam Houston had laid down his honors in the volunteer state to lose himself for a time in the then hinterland beyond the Father of Waters, and then to win fame for himself and Texas, the music of this river had been the lullaby of children of countless centuries, and its banks have constituted the hunting ground and its waters the reservoir for fish for Indians from the time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary.

At times this untamed stream had held itself between its banks. Its course had been supposedly fixed by the Guadalupe Hidalgo Treaty of 1848, but no law or treaty was strong enough to curb its riotous habit of life. At other periods, with a mighty torrential movement, it has not deigned to pay the slightest attention to any metes or bounds either provided by nature or by treaties or governments. Sometimes, as a matter of fact, "worn thin by drought and bled by irrigation, it is not a river at all but only a wide strip of white sand, baking and glaring in the sun, becoming an imperious stream only in times of flood, and then it runs in a red torrent often half a mile wide, lifting an angry crest of sand-waves, devouring its own lower banks, earth, trees, and all, as though in a furious effort to carry away the whole country and dump it into the sea."

Indeed, Old Man River has insisted upon being a rugged individualist, living a quiet life or going on a rampage, as suited his mood, without regard to the feelings of peoples or the rights of property or the rules of society. Throughout the aeons he has seemed to resent any attempt at controlled circulation or collective bargaining or any other social reform which in the least affected his unrestrained comings and goings. The result of this meandering has been that one year he would with perfect disregard of all titles and hereditaments made and provided cut across individual ownership or national integrity of territory, wantonly, and merrily, and audaciously, without even saying "by your leave", remove large expanses of Texas territory and transfer ranches bodily into the Republic of Mexico, and the next year would change the channel so that Mexican haciendas would find themselves on the northern banks and in the domain of Uncle Sam. He has, without notice or regard for the wishes of denizens on either side of the banks, which the commissioners in 1848 thought were permanent boundaries, made it impossible at times for a man to know whether he was a Mexican or a son of the more northern Republic. He is not at all friendly to any men for a long period and is a menace to what man builds or plants in the valley. He has been a vagabond, so to speak, here today and gone tomorrow. Always, however, this itinerant nomad has been welcomed and loved because he carried fructification wherever he decided to take up his abode. Refusing to be tamed, he has brought fertility and beauty to whatever place he has decided to hang up his hat for a long or short stay. He has always seemed to serve notice, however, that he was a rover, gathering the sweets of today in one terrain, and the next year, like an unfaithful suitor, hurrying on to bestow his presence and affection elsewhere, or to abandon to grief any who had been endowed with his fugitive love. In his youth he was an inconstant lover. In the meridian of his career he was not much improved.

The time came when those who wished this merry rover well and depended upon him for the waters which made possible the production of crops for food and raiment agreed that an end must be made of his wanderings and frequent changes of affection, followed by disappointment and devastation. They said Old Man River must settle down and become a steady family man, staying by the hearthstone and making provision for his increasing progeny.

If Uncle Sam is his mother, seeing he comes from the womb of Colorado, and Mr. Mexico is his father, seeing he needs the Solomonic rod to keep him in order, the Governments of Mexico and the United States recognized they must act together, as neither parent alone could lasso the philanderer. The mother had tried in the fastnesses of the mountains, where he issued forth on his uncertain career. She learned to her sorrow that maternal love and pleadings were of little or no avail. The father, wearing a sombrero and attired in the garb of a parent who practices discipline, learned that not even the use of the Solomonic rod could effectively "haud the wretch in order."

The separate efforts of the two parents, exercised with diligence for the three quarters of a century since Gadsden thought he had devised a disciplinary check, utterly failed to keep the wanderer in the straight and narrow way. In fact, the hobo refused to be obedient to maternal pleadings or to the use of the rod by the father. Therefore, after exhausting every effort by each, both finally agreed that they must jointly make or find a way to say to the river: "Here are your limits. You must cease to roam. We will tie you into a fixed enclosure. Within the set limits your freedom is unrestricted. You may travel from El Paso and Ciudad Juarez and beyond to the Gulf without restraint along the route marked out as the result of the convention of 1933. You may even disport yourself on the waters of the Gulf. But outside the channel surveyed and fixed your orders are: Thus far shalt thou go and no farther."

When both parents thus spoke with authority, Old Man River, more amenable to family regulations than when he disported himself on wild rampages in his youth, saw that his roustabout days were over. Under the chaperonage of Mr. L. M. Lawson and Mr. Armando Santacruz, commissioners from the two Republics, the rather erratic vagrant ageed to settle down, to put on the harness of domesticity, and become a solid and staid and fireside-loving citizen, neither going out at night nor disturbing the peace of neighbors.

It is in recognition of this new attitude of Old Man River that we are gathered here to celebrate the return of the prodigal. Father and mother have united in killing the fatted calf in his honor, fashioning rings to put on his fingers and robes to cover his shoulders, saying: "This wanderer has returned to the fireside, all is forgiven, henceforth his vagrant ways will be remembered no more against him." In fact, today we think rather of his service in repairing his ravages, for while the river destroyed the forest on one side he was giving life to new trees sprouting up on the opposite bank.

The Rio Grande, accepting with good grace the restraint which the boundary commissions of the neighbor Republics have imposed upon him, now makes ready to go into retreat comforted with the favorite song of the workers on the mighty Mississippi. By the accompaniment of the music of his rippling waters the reformed and regulated Old Man River will console and comfort himself by warbling the famous ditty of the toilers along the banks of the Mississippi:

Old Man River,
That Old Man River,
He must know something,
But don't say nothing,
He just keeps rolling,
He keeps on rolling along.

He don't plant taters, he don't plant cotton,
And them that plants 'em are soon forgotten,
But Old Man River, he justs keeps rolling along.

Heart gets weary, sick of trying,
I'se tired of living and feared of dying,
But Old Man River, he just keeps rolling along.

Old Man River,
That Old Man River,
He must know something,
But don't say nothing,
He just keeps rolling,
He keeps on rolling along.

Old Man River has a notable history. If it could talk, what stories it could tell of adventures, of love, of passion, of broken hopes, of religious zeal, of friendship, and of war! Along its banks in the whole length of its sinuosities over its rocky and sandy and shifting bed of over 2,000 miles it witnessed the tread of the Indians long before the white man from Spain or the Atlantic seaboard came to seek gold, some to find their graves when they encountered deserts without a sign of life-giving water. The early settlers found a country of long isolations and long journeys, a place of rebellions, prolific of intriguing legends, and strange myths of fantastic shapes. Above all, as Harvey Fergusson says, "They found it a land where water has always been scarce and therefore precious, a thing to be fought for, prayed for, and cherished in beautiful vessels—a land where thunder is sacred and rain is a god."

There is romance and tragedy and progress from its source in the mountains of southern Colorado through the long stretch of 700 miles to El Paso and 1,300 miles from El Paso to the Gulf of Mexico. It is this latter stretch with which we are most interested today, for this celebration is held to commemorate the beginning of the rectification of the river as to the international boundary between the two countries.

Part of the international boundary was established from 1852 to 1854 by Major Emory, the United States commissioner, and Mr. José Salazar, the Mexican commissioner. The Rio Grande is a meandering and uncontrolled stream, subject to changes and creating detached areas known as "bancos" from one country to the other. The towns and agricultural lands on both banks of the river suffer much loss and damage due to devastating flood conditions.

The boundary problems covered by conventions negotiated between the Governments of the United States and of Mexico may be reviewed as follows:

The fixing of the Rio Grande as part of the international boundary between the two Nations was determined by the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo of February 2, 1848. Changes were introduced by the Gadsden Treaty, also known as the "Treaty of La Mesilla", of December 30, 1853.

Article V of the Treaty of Guadalupe specifies that the boundary line between the two Republics shall commence in the Gulf of Mexico, 3 leagues from land, opposite the mouth of the Rio Grande, otherwise called "Rio Bravo del Norte", or opposite the mouth of its deepest branch, if it should have more than one branch emptying directly into the sea; from thence, up the middle of that river, following the deepest channel, where it has more than one, to the point where it strikes the southern boundary of New Mexico; thence westwardly along the whole southern boundary of New Mexico (which runs north of the town called "Paso") to its western termination. The southern and western limits of New Mexico, mentioned in this article, are those laid down in the map entitled "Map of the United Mexican States, as organized and defined by various acts of the Congress of said Republic, and constructed according to the best authorities. Revised edition. Published at New York in 1847 by J. Disturnell." It was declared that the map was added to this treaty, bearing the signatures and seals of the plenipotentiaries. It was agreed that the boundary line then established should be religiously respected by each of the two Republics, and no change should ever be made therein, except by the express and free consent of both Nations, lawfully given by the general government of each, in conformity with its own Constitution.

Under article I of the Gadsden Treaty, the boundary, insofar as the Rio Grande is concerned, was fixed as beginning in the Gulf of Mexico, 3 leagues from land, opposite the mouth of the Rio Grande as provided in the fifth article of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo; thence as defined in said article up the middle of that river to the point where the parallel 31° 47′ N. crosses the same.

Owing to difficulties regarding the exact location of the boundary line established in accordance with the terms of the treaties referred to above, the two Governments concluded a convention on July 29, 1882, providing for the restoration of boundary monuments and the erection of new ones. It also created the International Boundary Commission, having the power and authority to exercise certain functions along the boundary. While other boundary conventions were concluded between the two Governments, the basic convention now in force is the one negotiated on March 1, 1889, and designed to facilitate the principles contained in the treaty of November 12, 1884, and to avoid the difficulties occasioned by the changes that were taking place in the bed of the Rio Grande.

In reviewing the boundary conventions, mention should be made of the convention of March 20, 1905, providing for the elimination of bancos in the Rio Grande from the provisions of the convention of November 12, 1884, and to the convention of March 21, 1906, providing for the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande.

The most recent boundary convention is the one signed in Mexico City on February 1, 1933, by Dr. José Manuel Puig Casauranc, Minister for Foreign Affairs of Mexico, and the Honorable J. Reuben Clark, Jr., my predecessor in the office of Ambassador. It provides for the rectification of the Rio Grande, which is one of the giant projects of this century, characterized by giant feats of engineering.

The works contemplated by this project are about to begin.

The problem of the rectification of the Rio Grande has been under study and consideration since 1924. Reports have been prepared in the past by the El Paso chapter of the American Association of Engineers and by engineers representing various services of the Governments of the United States and of Mexico and interested in boundary problems. These studies were of great assistance in the preparation of Minute 129 of July 31, 1930, submitted to both Governments by the International Boundary Commission, and which is the working plan of the Rectification Convention. Briefly speaking, the plan provides for the construction of a flood-retention dam at Caballo, N.Mex., above the cities of El Paso and Ciudad Juarez, and of a rectified river channel. The engineering features involve the shortening of the river from the eastern outskirts of Cordoba Island to Box Canyon from 155 miles to 85, the construction of parallels along this floodway, and an increase in the slope.

There is one phase of the joint report of the consulting engineers that merits special attention, and that is the principle of segregated tracts. In order that neither Nation shall sacrifice national area, the plan provides that the total land to be segregated or cut off from one country shall equal that segregated or cut off from the other. An inspection of the corresponding maps shows that 59 separate tracts will be cut off from Mexico and 65 from the United States. The total area to be cut from each country is approximately 3,460 acres.

The total cost is estimated at $6,000,000, of which about $5,000,000 are proratable between the two Governments. The share of the United States is about four and one fourth million dollars, or about 88 percent of the proratable cost, and that of Mexico under $600,000, or about 12 percent.

The benefits to be derived from the straightened and rectified channel plans are mutual to the two Governments. They afford flood protection and permit cultivation, improvement, and settlement of even larger areas adjoining the Rio Grande than are now possible under the meandering river conditions.

Approximately 70,000 acres on the American side and 35,000 acres on the Mexican side would receive the advantages arising from added irrigating facilities.

Other benefits may be mentioned. They include the establishment of a definite water boundary which can be controlled between El Paso and Box Canyon; the prevention of future changes in the river channel involving the detachment from one country to the other of areas of land, which in the past have given rise to legal and economic difficulties; the rendering less difficult the enforcement of the national law of both countries by fixing the rectified river as the international boundary as contemplated by the treaties now in force between the two countries.

The rectification convention of February 1, 1933, disposes of one phase of the boundary problems between the two Governments. There remain still other problems that must be solved. They affect not only the Rio Grande but also the Colorado River. Let us hope that satisfactory formulae may be found by both Governments that will early eliminate all controversial issues between countries which today set an example to the whole world in enlightened and unselfish friendship.

This celebration would be like the play of Hamlet without Hamlet in his proper role if honor and just praise were not given to the commissioners and engineers whose wisdom and expertness made possible the plan which both Governments have approved. It was once said that all wealth came from three sources—the land, the mines, and the sea. True enough, but the extraction of the increased and increasing abundant wealth of all three waits upon the magic touch of the engineer. Let us, therefore, pause as we pay tribute to former Commissioner Gustavo P. Serrano and his successor, Commissioner Armando Santacruz, for Mexico, and Commissioner L. M. Lawson for the United States, and to the consulting engineers of both countries, who, like other men of vision, have shown themselves masters over the forces of nature and caused hitherto turbulent waters to contribute to the weal of man and advance helpful intercourse and accord between nations.

There is an old maxim—I do not know whether it originated along with the category of wise Spanish sayings or proverbs—that "money makes the mare go." At any rate it has been long current in the domain above the Rio Grande and below the Rio Bravo. The work of engineers, the agreement upon conventions, and the signing of treaties were essential preliminary steps to construction inaugurated here today. Scientists and statesmen may plant, but the rock of credit must be struck or cash forthcoming if streams of money—"the wherewithal"—may gush forth to carry on the actual inauguration and completion of the giant project. There might have been a long wait for a congressional appropriation for the American construction if the new deal had not been inaugurated in March of last year. Among the first fruits of the Public Works organization was the allotment of $2,800,000 of the $5,256,634 of the part to be paid by the United States, which makes available now half the money needed for the rectification of the river from El Paso to the Gulf. This allocation was made on February 7 of the present year. As we celebrate the work of American and Mexican commissioners and engineers and give a vote of confidence to the men who will do the actual work of construction, we rejoice that the plan of American construction was advanced and guaranteed by the inauguration of new policies of expedition and devotion to the development of natural resources. This new policy foreshadows a new and better day, envisioned by President Roosevelt in his inaugural address, and in his address to the Pan American Union.

The rectification of the Rio Grande is more than changing the ancient course of an historic river. It is the outward symbol of something greater and more beneficial than confining a stream between stable and enduring banks. In fact this constructive international achievement is the result of a rectification and perfection of the relations between the peoples of Mexico and the United States. There was a time—happily long since gone and remembered only as a bad dream—when periodically there was lack of complete understanding between the peoples of the two countries. Misconception of what was in the heart of each resulted now and then in causing the peoples of Mexico and the United States to erupt in harsh words or deeds, imitating the unruly outbursts of Old Man River. As he overflowed his banks, so passions aroused for lack of knowledge and appreciation witnessed strife and even war between peoples who could have lived like brothers if waters and mountains and deserts and mental myopia had not prevented their seeing eye to eye. Territorial separation, love of military glory, and the lure of conquest blinded Americans and Mexicans to the real sentiment and true interests of both countries. As passion and hate overflowed their banks, they called each other names, and sometimes the air resounded with epithets of "Gringo" and "Greaser", misnomers happily entombed in dishonored graves. They, and like outpourings born of ignorance of one another, have all gone into the limbo of discarded error. Today Mexicans and Americans are coming to be the David and Jonathan nations of the Western Hemisphere.

Rivers and other bodies of water were once believed to have been created to separate peoples. That was the ancient creed. In those days the Rio Bravo del Norte was a barrier, and later, when it was fixed as the boundary line, it was regarded as separating the two countries. We have learned that the old conception was based on lack of understanding of the mind of the Creator when he fashioned the waters for man's enrichment and not to divide nation from nation.

Today the Rio Grande is not looked upon as a warning to people of each country "shinny on your own side." In Europe forts and bayonets are military sentinels of boundaries between states. Here this Old Man River is becoming a safe means of travel and communication by which friendly neighbors more and more bridge the stream for the exchange of amenities and commerce. The rectification of the river will make easier ingress and egress from one country to the other. As all good citizens on both sides of the river rejoice in the rectification of Old Man River, we know that there will come with it a spiritual rectification and a new birth of regard and the brotherhood born of mutuality of interest and ambitions.

There exists today no chasm between Mexico and the United States. Old Man River, rectified and strengthened, is the outward expression of the cordial neighborly feeling which is more and more to bind the peoples of both countries in the lasting bonds of amity and friendship. This day attests to the world that as the souls of Jonathan and David were knit together, so the hearts of Mexico and the United States beat in unison.

This relationship, cemented in the celebration of an event made possible only by joint action, recalls a beautiful sentiment which was expressed by a schoolgirl in France during the days of the World War. She wrote:

"It was only a little river—not much larger than a brook. It was called the Yser. It was so small that you could talk from bank to bank without raising your voice. The swallows could fly across with one sweep of their wings. On those banks millions of men were standing—eye to eye, but the distance that separated them was as great as the distance that separates the stars; the difference between right and injustice.

"The Atlantic Ocean is a vast body of water, so great that the sea gulls cannot fly across. It takes the great American liners 7 days and 7 nights, going at full speed, before they sight the lighthouses of France, but from shore to shore hearts are touching."

Old Man River, tamed and harnessed, is the bond of union which makes Mexico and the United States as united for today and tomorrow and all the tomorrows as were the French and Americans in the World War.

CERTAIN PHASES OF THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION—LETTER FROM E. P. CRAMER

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in full in the RECORD a letter which I have received from Mr. E. P. Cramer, of Plainfield, N.J., on certain phases of the present administration.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PLAINFIELD, N.J., March 20, 1934.

Senator W. WARREN BARBOUR,
United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We have now had a year of that strange thing called the "new deal." To me it was cause at first for amusement, and now for alarm.

Beginning last March I saw one hastily formulated bill after another sent to the Congress from the White House and as hastily made law. Through many of these bills Congress abnegated to the White House its rightful constitutional powers, thus giving us government by fiat.

I saw a law passed taxing the consumer in order to support in idleness an excess agrarian population, thus encouraging people to stay on farms who ought to enter other occupations as soon as business recovers, who otherwise would do so, and who have in fact been doing so since 1900—a law, in brief, which stays the natural process by which agrarian population has been for 30 years correcting its excess, and which, until corrected, will continue the real cause of deficient farm income. A law no more sensible than one to tax automobile tires in order that the excess tire manufacturers who went out of business between 1919 and 1929 might be kept in business. A law exalting the droll philosophy that if we collectively produce less there will be more for us individually to divide.

I saw a law passed promoting labor-union domination of industry as inclusive as that begun on the railroads by the Adamson Act in 1916 and completed by Director General McAdoo during the war. The Congress would have done well to have informed itself of the needless employees railroads are today forced to carry on their pay rolls, of the ridiculous lost motions they are forced to make—all as a result of arbitrary union rules—of the effect this has had in raising costs and rates to a level that drove traffic from the rails to the highways and all but destroyed railroad credit, and finally of the resulting railroad unemployment of the past 4 years, mute testimony to railroad labor's attempt to mulct the stockholder, which ended by destroying the jobs of more than half its own number since 1916. An investigation into these conditions by the Congress would probably be of greater service to the country than 100 investigations of banking and the stock market.

I saw a law passed providing for a Railroad Coordinator empowered to do anything to cut waste except cut the pay roll—a singularly appropriate effort in the railroad business where the pay roll absorbs some 60 cents of each dollar of income.

I saw a law passed to improve the Tennessee Valley at public expense, a project private capital was never attracted to even in the 1920's, when it flowed abroad by the billion and feverishly went about at home seeking employment. Among the taxpayers at whose expense this grandiose scheme is going forward are to be found the owners of the utility enterprises which now serve that territory and which are to be destroyed.

I saw a law passed to relieve unemployment by the spending of some three billions more of taxpayers' money on numerous other projects in the same class with the T.V.A. in that they are projects which private capital never cared to undertake and which, like the T.V.A., are slated to destroy other privately owned enterprises. It has not been demonstrated that Federal unemployment relief is necessary, but if we assume it is necessary, certainly only 10 to 15 percent as large a sum would have sufficed as a frank dole.

I saw a law passed to protect investors which contains such extreme punitive provisions that for all practical purposes private corporate financing has been brought to an end. Without this law private financing by this time would have equaled, perhaps exceeded, the sum appropriated for the P.W.A. This would have brought an equal, perhaps greater, stimulation to business recovery.

I have seen a law abnegating to the White House the power to monkey with our money, and I have seen him monkey with it under the advice of a college professor who is a poultry expert, with the end in view—so far as there is any sense in it at all—of relieving the debtor by defrauding the creditor, of glorifying improvidence and shiftlessness, of crucifying industry and thrift. A series of acts that makes a scrap of paper out of the sound-money plank in the Democratic campaign platform on which the "new dealer" was swept into power.

I have seen a law passed by which the Government has violated its citizens' constitutional rights to undisturbed enjoyment of their property if perchance it be in the form of gold, and by which it has abrogated its solemn covenant to pay its bonds in the same kind of dollars it borrowed and by which it makes equal dishonor mandatory upon its citizens who have borrowed under similar covenants.

These and many other strange, unsound, and dishonest laws have I seen framed in the White House and enacted in the Congress. I have seen the chimera of political opportunism and demagogery spring into activity and run rampant. I, for one, am tired of it.

I, for one, should like to see the Congress stop giving the White House any more wildcat laws to prop up the new deal. At the same time I should like to see the laws already passed repealed as soon as legal and practicable. Quit the expenditures, the hypocrisy, the undermining of our institutions, the dishonesty, the hocus-pocus. Let the abolition of child labor remain; for that is at least one wholesome fragment of the noisome whole. The new deal is probably unconstitutional anyway. Certainly those who framed the Constitution would be appalled if they knew.

In South America I have seen constitutional government overthrown by armed rebellion. Only in the United States have I seen it attempted through subterfuge by an opportunist administration under solemn oath of office sworn to protect it.

Very truly yours,

E. P. CRAMER.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR WHITE TO REPUBLICAN CONVENTION OF MAINE

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on Friday, March 23, 1934, the distinguished junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] delivered an impressive and important speech to the Republicans of Maine and the Nation. I ask unanimous consent that the speech may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Republicans of Maine, in convention assembled, the circumstances under which we meet are unusual in that for the first time in the 76 years of the life of the Republican Party, the country found itself in 1932, during a Republican administration, suffering from wide-spread economic distress. The significance of this fact looms larger when we recall that during every period of Democratic control in this three quarters of a century industrial stagnation has been the accompaniment of such political domination. It will be more amazing than either of these facts just stated if general and permanent betterment comes to our people from the efforts and the policies of a Democratic administration.

I speak to you as one whose belief in the principles and in the high purpose of our party is unshaken. We have suffered serious political reverses in the past and have emerged triumphant. There is definitely in my mind that in the mid-term elections of our first great Republican President, political defeats everywhere overtook Republican candidates. In that election the Republican majority in the State of Maine almost reached the vanishing point. Ohio elected in that year 14 Democratic and but 5 Republican Congressmen; New York, New Jersey, Illinois, and Indiana were Democratic. In Pennsylvania the congressional delegation was divided, and the Democratic vote exceeded the Republican vote in the State. Had Lincoln been running for office that year, upon the votes cast he would have been a beaten candidate. Political defeats did not daunt Abraham Lincoln. They did not lead him to disloyalty to fundamentals. They did not move him to compromise with that which was expedient and unsound. From the disasters of that year Lincoln and our party rose with new strength, and for almost a half a century, with but two brief interruptions, the people of the Nation committed the destinies of America to Republican leadership. In those years is written the story of a Nation's development which finds no parallel in the world's history.

The compelling reason for this persisting faith of the people in the Republican Party and in its candidates was their belief that our party had high political and governmental standards and deep and abiding convictions concerning them to which it gave continued devotion. Loyalty to ideals always commands respect. Today the need for adherence to principles is as great as it was in those dark days of 1862. The response of the American people to political sanity and to the defense of American institutions and conceptions is as certain now as the response of the people following that disastrous year of 1862 was decisive.

As one surveys the political and economic events of the present, definite facts stand out in clear relief. No one should fail to note and to acknowledge the extraordinary popularity of the President and the inclination of the people to yield their judgments to his leadership. This springs from his gracious personality; from a belief in his humanitarian purposes; from an admiration of his swiftness of decision and of act; and from a recognition of the gravity of the problems and the weight of the burdens that rest upon him. We should recognize also that within the year there has come a betterment of conditions in many lines of activity and in the lot of many Americans. A third fact of significance is that throughout the world there has come an undoubted improvement in social, industrial, and economic conditions which find reflection here. Why is it, then, that America's business life is still hesitant? Why is it that America, more richly endowed than any of the other nations of the earth, lags behind them in recuperation from her economic ills? Why are thoughtful men and women in our country so gravely disturbed by the conditions in which we now are, by the tendencies of the moment? Why are they so concerned as to the future?

I answer, first of all, because it is apparent that in the legislation of recent months, in administrative act, and in executive purpose, as it is made known to us, we are following a course charted by neither of the great political parties of our country nor by the free will of our legislative body chosen to express the thought and purpose of the people of America. For the first time in our political history the policies now in force and which from day to day are extended in new applications are the determinations of a personal government rather than a government of a party or of a representative body or of the people. We rightfully wonder to what extremes we are being carried and what our situation as a government is to be when the dominating and the persuasive force of the President passes from the political scene. Are we of America willing that all future Presidents shall have the authorities which are asserted and which are exercised by the present President? Must we not have in mind that powers once conferred upon an Executive are reclaimed by the people and by the legislative body with difficulties, if at all? Who is there that does not know that in a time of peace, as never before in our history, we have ceased to be a government of laws and have become a government of men? Who does not recognize this truth and its significance to America?

Are we not also concerned because of the knowledge that the program inaugurated and put into effect since the 4th of March a year ago is a repudiation of every principle for which the Democratic Party has stood through the more than a century of its political life; of its last adopted platform; of the recent preelection utterances of its Presidential candidate; and that it equally violates the tenets of Republicanism? Have the great political parties and their leaders been wrong in the principles they have declared and in the policies they have pursued through the long years? Are we assured that the new road upon which we are now traveling, and which turns sharply to the left from that heretofore followed by our country, is the one on which we should intrust the institutions of America and the future well-being of our people? The signposts along this road as far as we have journeyed tell us that it leads to a further surrender of local self-government; to a further encroachment on the rights of our States; to an abandonment of the functions of our legislative branch of government; to the building-up of a great centralized Federal State beyond the direct control of our people; to a Government under which the social, the economic, and the industrial life of the Nation is regimented and ordered by a bureaucratic regime. I cannot believe this to be the reasoned desire of the American people.

We are disturbed, too, because the history of the world teaches that a government asserting such wide-flung authority as that now urged and exercised in Washington always continues to answer and to meet every challenge of its rights and of its wisdom with new claims of authority and the exercise of new powers. This tendency is visible and vital in Washington today. Inevitable also in such a government is the asserted right to appoint and to control those administering its wide activities. From its very necessity for self-perpetuation it becomes a political government. Such is your Government today. At no time in half a century, since the fight against the spoils system began, has merit in appointment and efficiency in the public service counted so little. Civil-service reform has been made an empty phrase.

If history teaches truth, in such a Government as has been developed, the practice of binding sections of the Nation and groups of people in loyalty to the central authority by payments from the Public Treasury is a certain consequence. In Roman days such contributions were called donatives. Roman Emperors first bought the loyalty of the Praetorian Guard. They extended their benefactions to the Roman legions scattered throughout the empire. The evil habit then forced them to secure the loyalty of the senate and of the people of influence in Rome with like favors. The historians of the past and of our modern day single this practice out as an outstanding contribution to the break-down in the morale of the Roman people and to the disintegration of the Empire.

Something of the same sort is going on here in America today. We built Boulder Dam, not because of its contributions to the well-being of all our people but at the behest of a few States through which flows the Colorado River. We appeased the people of the Tennessee Valley with Muscle Shoals. In the far Northwest there is authorized a great power plant on the Columbia River. We temporarily satisfy the farmers of the Midwest with the processing tax on wheat and hogs, and we fatten the purse and sweeten the temper of the cotton grower of the South with a like tax. These projects and expenditures are sectional in demand, and they are local in their benefits. Maine shares only in the burden of their cost. What is to be the end? It promises to be an exhausted Treasury; new and heavier taxes; an enormously increased debt; and a constantly mounting deficit.

In these general terms I have briefly described the country's situation and have sought to assign reasons for our anxieties. I avail myself of the right and I meet the duty of a member of the minority by emphasizing the truth of these assertions of specifications.

EXPENDITURES—DEBT—DEFICIT

Within the year of Democratic control of the Nation our public expenditures have mounted to unprecedented peace-time figures. Our Democratic friends promised an immediate and a drastic cut in governmental expenditures and a balanced Budget. The painful truth, however, is that in last July the Federal Government was spending nine millions a day; in October, sixteen millions a day; in December, twenty-four millions a day; in January of this year, thirty-two millions a day; and there are ominous signs that this figure may soon be greater.

The Nation's debt in 1930 was sixteen billions. It is now set at twenty-seven billions and soon will be thirty-two billions, and this is borrowed money the administration is spending! Instead of a balanced Budget the President, in his Budget message, estimated our deficit for the current fiscal year would total $7,309,000,000. Later estimates reduce this figure. What it will be no man knows. Have these expenditures been productive of national recovery in the degree promised by them? The negligible reemployment of men in productive and self-sustaining industry, the millions dependent upon charity and upon artificial activities financed by public funds return an emphatic negative answer. We look to other nations—to Canada, to England—and we see them, without such lavishness of outlay and without abandonment of their basic conceptions of government, farther along the road of material recovery than are we of the United States. Their experience asserts in words that should be heard in every governmental place that a nation may no more spend or experiment itself into prosperity than can the individual. Our people, our towns, our counties, our States, and our Federal Government made a large contribution to their present plight through recklessness of expenditure, and it is folly to believe that the same habits which brought our difficulties can now free us from their consequences. Thrift and economy would have saved millions of individuals and political units everywhere from their present distresses, and they will make the mightiest contribution to the return of better days.

I have said that the Government deficit for the present year was originally estimated to be $7,309,000,000. Upon the basis of population, Maine's part of this deficit and of the estimated cost of the Government for this year is approximately $74,000,000. Expenditures within the State by the Federal Government are but a small part of this total of Maine's obligation. I ask the business man of Maine, and the workingman dependent upon industry, the farmer of our State, and all our other citizens, of what profit to Maine are the few millions expended within our borders by the Federal Government when compared with this burden of obligation directly resulting from such expenditures and such debts? Let the citizen of Maine figure his proportion of $74,000,000. It amounts to more than $92 for every man, woman, and child within our State, a total of $460 for every family of five members. Are you getting your money's worth? And threatening to make the burden of these debts still heavier, there looms before you new and increased taxes by the Federal Government. Yet we were promised reduced expenditures, economy in government, and a balanced Budget.

CODES—N.R.A.

I have said that our form of Government was undergoing startling changes, and I have made specific reference to the grant to our President of extraordinary powers. An illustration constantly before us is the N.R.A. and its activities. Industry was authorized to establish codes for its regulation. Abuses and defects in the functioning of our complex industrial life were recognized. The original conception to which Congress gave approval was that industry through voluntary agreements to be embodied in codes, might shorten hours, spread employment, raise wages, eliminate ruinous price cutting and unfair trade practices, and lift the standards of our business life. The plan was proposed for industrial and trade groups. It did not by the authority of the statute extend beyond this. These codes were to be submitted to the President for his approval. When so approved, they were to constitute the guide for the business life of the industries involved.

Such a plan and purpose appealed strongly to the citizen and to the legislator. Evils inherent in the program and errors in administration are today so obvious as to bring regret to all.

There have been approved and put in operation approximately 324 of these codes. In limited respects there has been good in them. Child labor has been restricted, if not eliminated, in our industrial life, and there has been, through shortened hours, some distribution of employment opportunity. But these gains have not compensated for the disturbing effects of the codes upon our industrial life. Neither have there been encouraging increases in the weekly pay envelops. In defiance of the clear intent of the law, there have been written in these codes wage and cost differentials based on the geographical location of competing factors in the industry involved. These differentials are arbitrary, assuring economic advantage to one section of the country as against another. The results are prejudicial to Maine. It is clear, too, that the codes are not the voluntary agreements of industry, but in many cases and particulars they embody the rules and conclusions of the code authority unsought and undesired by industry.

We find as we survey the results that the codes have not tended toward regulated competition, but to arrogant monopoly. They have brought arbitrary increases of prices to consumers, and they have shut the door of opportunity in the face of the smaller business man. They have filled factories with rules and regulations and agents of Government, all business with the fear of Government and with paralyzing doubts as to the future. It has been written that if you examine a code carefully, you will find hidden or open somebody's scheme to set up a monopoly, or at least to limit production; to fix prices; to guarantee profits; and worse, in many cases, the joker that would put somebody out of business or keep somebody in business who ought to be put out, which would keep a new man from getting into the game and a new idea from being adopted. In other words, freeze the business as it now is for the people now in it.

In late days Washington has been visited with critics of codes, and their administration and defects in the system have been admitted by the administrative chief, General Johnson. Most enlightening as to present tendencies and most sinister is his assertion that in the administration of codes there can be no distinction between interstate and intrastate business; that the code authority must control workers and employers wholly within a State in order to protect interstate industry. This doctrine of the administration is the assertion of an authority superior to that of a State over its citizens and over their business carried on wholly within that State. Of very necessity it denies the right of the State of Maine to fix hours of labor; to establish a minimum wage; and to regulate the practices of industry within its borders.

The authority to approve these codes, the dictation of their terms, and the enforcement thereof present a question of the gravest import to America. We must recognize that the final authority with respect to the great and intricate business life of America has been vested in a single man, whose decision in all these matters is the law itself, and whose power is more arbitrary than was ever given in the modern world to any individual. Whatever may have been the initial purpose, these codes in their latter-day terms and operation have become the breeders of industrial strife; the destroyers of opportunity; the weapons of dictatorial power; a menace to industrial recovery. Is this America in which we live?

FARM RELIEF—PROCESSING TAXES—MAINE'S CONTRIBUTION

Agricultural relief has engaged the attention of this administration. Its worth-while activities within this field found original authority in legislation enacted during the administration of Mr. Hoover and his Republican predecessors. The Agricultural Adjustment Act passed by the present administration extended provisions of previous law, but special interest attaches to the processing taxes authorized in this act. The legislation declares that it is the policy of Congress to establish prices for farm products at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy, equivalent to their purchasing power in the period between August 1909 and July 1914. In order to bring about this result, the scheme was hit upon of hiring farmers to reduce their acreage and then to destroy crops and products in existence. It was assumed that as acreage was reduced and products destroyed, the price of these basic commodities affected would automatically rise. To the thrifty New Englander the thought of destroying property comes as a distinct shock—but this destruction was not going to be at the cost of the farmer who plowed in his crops or destroyed his hogs, for you and I were to reimburse him for that which was destroyed through a processing tax laid upon the people of the country who use these commodities.

Now, although Maine does not share in these processing taxes, and although Maine farmers have not destroyed crops, yet under this beneficent scheme Maine has been called upon to pay. The figures reported to the Congress bring home the unpleasant truth that to the end of this last year there was collected in Maine on these processing taxes a total of a million and forty-three thousand dollars and that not a single dollar was repaid to us on this account. The figures show that $959,000 was collected in our State from the processing tax on cotton. I cannot wax enthusiastic over a system which takes from our hard-pressed people this amount of money to be paid to the people of other States for the wanton destruction of crops and farm products. This is a sales tax, not of the character often urged, but one upon the necessities of life. I had not supposed Maine approved such a tax.

COMPENSATORY TAXES ON PRODUCTS OF MAINE

Further hardship results to our Maine people from this processing tax. The legislation which authorized it permitted the Secretary of Agriculture, if satisfied that the result of cotton-processing tax would be an excessive shift in consumption from cotton to a competing commodity, to impose a compensatory tax upon this alleged competitive commodity. Under this authority the Secretary of Agriculture decided that he was justified in imposing such a compensatory tax upon certain paper products. He determined the need for the tax, the articles to be subjected thereto, and the amount of the tax. He levied a so-called "compensatory tax" upon the various paper products of our State, including paper cement bags and paper towels. A careful analysis of the taxes imposed upon these articles shows that the tax levied upon paper cement bags upon the basis of use is 600 percent greater than the tax upon a cotton bag, and that the tax on paper towels, when the average number of uses is compared, is 1,100 to 1,300 percent greater than the tax per use on cotton towels. I condemn such inequality in the imposition of the tax burden.

TARIFFS—RECIPROCAL TRADE ARRANGEMENTS

The Republican Party of Maine believes in a protective tariff. The agricultural and the industrial life of our State is dependent upon the maintenance of this principle. We recognize that with changing economic and industrial conditions, modifications of tariff rates must be made from time to time to conform our tariff policy thereto. We believe recommendations with respect to such adjustments should come from the study and the findings of an independent and bipartisan commission. The President, however, has recently asked that the Congress give him power to make trade arrangements and to increase or lower tariffs to the extent of 50 percent. Involved in this proposal are major considerations of principle. It contemplates a surrender of the authority of the elected representatives of the people and the building-up of executive power. It is an assault on the independence and the usefulness of a bipartisan tariff commission of permanent character, long advocated by both political parties. The right to arrange these contemplated reciprocal agreements vests in the President the power of life or death over American industry. Reciprocal agreements involve giving as well as receiving. They involve the sacrifice of one industry that another may secure favor. The exercise of the power requires decision as between clashing interests, the preferment of one class as against another, discrimination against one section that another may be accorded trade advantage. I oppose such despotic power in any individual from whose decisions there is no appeal.

We of Maine may well be pardoned if we look at this proposal through the eyes of self-interest and reach a conclusion concerning it because of its possible effects upon our State. The President does not ask authority to transfer products from the free list to the dutiable list. It is clear, then, that under this requested authority we may hope for no protection for pulp, pulpwood, newsprint, lobsters, and other products of our State now unprotected. As to those products of Maine now upon the dutiable list, what is liable to happen in the event of a reciprocity treaty with Canada? What concessions will Canada ask in the American market? The answer to this question is to be found in what Canada produces. In the eastern portions of the Dominion her outstanding products are lumber, dairy products, poultry products, apples, hay, potatoes—indeed, every product of a Maine farm and every product of the sea.

In the event of a negotiated reciprocal-treaty arrangement with Canada, how can Maine hope to escape the direct and the destructive competition of favored Canadian products? Whatever is given to Canada will be at our cost. How can any citizen of our State look with favor upon a proposal so fraught with danger to us as this? It is the gravest threat to the welfare of our State ever seriously advanced.

MONETARY POLICY

This administration has breached the Government's contracts with the millions of our people who bought its bonds, by their terms to be paid in gold of a definite standard. It has depreciated the value of our dollar in the markets of the world; it has authorized the issue of billions of irredeemable currency. By its monetary policy it has brought confusion, has impaired our credit, and has taken from millions of our people a substantial portion of their savings, has lessened the value of their insurance and other investments, and has reduced the buying power of every person living upon a salary or upon wages throughout the length and breadth of our land. In these matters we find further illustration of Executive domination. The single act which has tended to stability and to renewed confidence in our monetary and banking system is that guaranteeing bank deposits, forced upon the administration by Republican insistence.

RELIEF—SECTIONALISM—PARTISANSHIP

Other activities of this administration give evidence of its attitude toward our State and its people. Legislation has been passed under which Federal direct relief was to be made available to the several States in the Union. The figures show that of the amounts spent for relief in the State of Maine less than 15 percent came from the Federal Treasury while more than 85 percent was from funds furnished locally and by our own State government. As against this 85-percent contribution by our own people, I find that other States, including some of those to whom we of Maine have contributed $959,000 in cotton-processing taxes, have contributed less than 1 percent to the relief of their own people and that the Federal Government has contributed 99 percent and more. Such an inequitable distribution of public funds, such evidence of sectionalism in works of charity, is a shock to every sense of right. The need for relief was urgent and great. Distress and human suffering impose a special obligation upon those responsible for the administration of relief measures. Throughout the land charges of waste, fraud, and partisanship have marked the organization of the Civil Works Administration. Maine, happily, has escaped such public censures. Relief must be continued, but how long are we to give countenance and support to such practices in its administration?

SOLDIERS—PENSIONS

The soldier of the Nation has always had the solicitude of the Republican Party. Most of the legislation written upon our statute books in his behalf and for his widow and his dependents has been placed there by Republican Congresses. We have recognized the Nation's obligation, and we have been eager to meet that obligation. As a party we find no justification for the attitude of the present Democratic administration toward the defenders of our flag. During the period of their Spanish War service more than 10,000 of our military and naval forces died; within less than a year after their discharge 7,000 more died of diseases contracted in the war. Tens of thousands more died of diseases incurred in the Tropics and in unsanitary surroundings in our own country. Since this administration came into power, some 230,000 Spanish War pension cases have been reviewed. Of that number, including those of all the widows and the dependents of the 17,000 who died during the war or within the year after the termination of their service, only about 5,500 were held to rest on service-connected disabilities. Of the World War veterans less than 8 percent were found by this administration during the last year to have service-connected disabilities. These two statements attest the harshness of the regulations put into effect by the administration.

If further proof be needed of the unwarranted treatment of the soldier, it may be seen in the fact that 25 modifications of the original Presidential order have been made during the year. The Republican Party is not willing that the Federal Treasury should be opened without limitation to the soldier, but it is against regulations and administration so severe that less than 8 percent of the World War veterans and less than 6 percent of the Spanish War veterans upon our pension or compensation rolls are able to prove service origin of their disabilities. We propose to see that justice is done the American soldier.

PLANNED ECONOMY—GOVERNMENT INTERFERENCE

Of greater consequence than particular acts of the administration is its philosophy. It believes in a planned economy. It proceeds on the theory that it is both the right and the duty of the Federal Government to merge the individual in the mass and to regiment and control the life and activities of this mass man. Under its plan we face a future based on quotas, allotments, and market allocations; a future in which wages, hours of labor, practices, all factors entering into the costs of industry are controlled, prices fixed, and distribution directed by the Federal Government; a future in which all is artificial, arbitrary, uncertain—dependent upon the dictatorial power of Government; a future in which our antitrust statutes are to stand suspended that combinations approved by the Executive may engage in practices now frowned upon, in which taxes and tariffs are imposed by Executive authority, in which the gold content of our dollar, the issuance of currency, the convertibility and the redemption thereof, our whole financial system and policy are subject to Executive determination and dictation; a future in which freedom of speech and of the press is in jeopardy, in which criticism of the Executive or of the administration's policy is an offense, in which loose charge of wrongdoing is accepted as proof, and in which punishment to individual and to business is meted out without opportunity for hearing or defense; a future in which men and industry are no longer free but are coerced and terrorized by an all-powerful central authority; a future in which we find in America not a Government of coordinate branches, with the checks and balances of our Constitution respected and observed, but rather a Government in which the Executive asserts and exercises authority and power foreign to every American tradition. This is the creed of the Democratic Party of today.

The Republican Party challenges this Democratic conception. Combinations and trusts are the enemies of that competitive business spirit which has made our industrial world great. We must choose whether we shall be free men or 125,000,000 subjects of experimentation in the planned economy of the Democratic administration. We must preserve freedom of action in a free market if we wish to retain a liberal democracy and the forms and substance of representative government. The Republican Party demands that the antitrust laws shall not be abandoned but strengthened if necessary to preserve this opportunity and this principle. Our party believes that the great contributions to thought, to science, to moral and material progress have not been mass-inspired. Individuals have given inspiration to human forward movements. Circumscribe the individual, and the leavening power is gone, and the retrogression of mankind will have begun. The Republican Party believes in the individual; in the largest measure of social, industrial, and political liberty. Without this liberty the human mind is in chains! Our party believes in local self-government. It would maintain the dignity and the responsibility of the States of the Federal Union. It pledges anew its loyalty to representative and to constitutional government. It stands, as did its first great leader, for these underlying principles.

The Republican Party must continue to be forward-looking. It came into being as the champion of human rights. It has written upon the statute books of the Nation a great body of social legislation. Remove therefrom Republican contributions and how pitifully inadequate would be that which remains. We of Maine must champion the rights of labor, including that of collective action and bargaining; welfare work in all its phases; the cause of education, always the enemy of ignorance. We should provide against the hazards of disability and unemployment and the infirmities and misfortunes of old age; and we should give encouragement to all those proper activities of government making for human betterment and human happiness.

These beneficent ends may be achieved within the forms of our Constitution and in harmony with its spirit.

My appeal goes to you before me, to all citizens of our State, to unite in militant opposition to those vagaries in government toward which in our temporary distress we have been beguiled, to join in a new pledge of loyalty and devotion to the America conceived and dedicated by the fathers, the America which has been the inspiration and the hope of freemen everywhere.

A DANGEROUS TARIFF EXPERIMENT—ARTICLE BY HENRY P. FLETCHER

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send to the desk a recently published article by Mr. Henry P. Fletcher, formerly Chairman of the Tariff Commission, entitled "A Dangerous Tariff Experiment", which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

[From the Awakener of Apr. 1, 1934]

The President has asked Congress to surrender almost complete control of our tariffs by granting to him, for a 3-year period, the right to lower or increase import duties by 50 percent and the right to use this power in bargaining with other governments for broader outlets for our products in foreign markets, without further reference of these agreements to the Congress or the Senate.

This is a radical request. It goes to the roots of popular government. It is an undisguised grant of legislative power. The Constitution says in its very first article, "all legislative power shall be vested in Congress", and I do not believe Congress can constitutionally delegate this power nor divest itself of it. This should be made clear at the outset of any discussion of the subject.

It is true the Supreme Court has upheld the so-called "flexible provisions" of our present tariff law, which enables the President to raise or lower the statutory duties within 50 percent, but only if the facts, as found upon investigation by the Tariff Commission, show that a measured reduction or increase is necessary in order to equalize the costs of production here and abroad of the product in question, and the costs of its transportation to our principal market or markets.

The Congress has not thus delegated its legislative powers; it has merely intrusted an administrative agency (for, at the present, if the President acts at all, he can act only upon the facts as found by the Tariff Commission) with the duty of ascertaining certain facts and of applying to those facts a definitely fixed yardstick. Inasmuch as neither the President nor the Tariff Commission can use their discretion, but must be governed by the facts, the courts have upheld the constitutionality of the flexible provisions.

This distinction should be borne clearly in mind in any discussion of the President's present request. For he now asks that he be allowed to change the rates (within 50 percent), irrespective of any formula or set of facts, but only upon his judgment as to what is proper and best. To my mind it is a clear and unconstitutional delegation to the Executive of legislative power.

But supposing that a so-called "liberal" construction should be placed upon this grant of power by the Supreme Court, and we must assume constitutionality of all acts of Congress until the Court has spoken. In spite of the fact that tariff bargains and arrangements can obviously be made more advantageously by the Executive than by the Congress, I firmly believe that it would be an unwise and dangerous innovation to delegate this power to the Executive. Those Democrats and Republicans who believe in the efficacy of our form of constitutional government and have the courage to act upon this belief seem to be in the minority, at least in the House. The President, though he has lost some of his magic power and influence, seems still able to force his will upon his party in Congress. True, many conscientious Senators, both Democrats and Republicans, are hesitating, and more will hesitate, to yield this vast power over our industrial and agricultural life into the hands of the President already overwhelmed and weighed down by more onerous duties than any other chief of state in the world. But they may do it. The first surface indications point in that direction. This being so, I think this grant of power should be hedged about with as many safeguards as it may be possible to impose.

Anyone will admit that the Executive can make a better tariff bargain than a deliberative body like the Congress. That is the reason he is intrusted by the Constitution with the conduct of our foreign affairs. One might even admit that an impartial Executive could make a better tariff law than the Ways and Means Committee or the Congress; but when you admit that, you admit the failure of our system of government and you accept the dictatorship formula of government. Certainly the Republican Party is not willing to do that, even if the so-called "Democratic Party" may be.

What safeguards can we suggest? But first, are safeguards really necessary? I think if we realize that this is but one more step in the development of the new deal—and that, as the President has practically stated in his message, it must be considered as part thereof, it becomes clear that this grant of power must, if possible, be safeguarded. Any industry, even including our agriculture, which is now as fully protected as our manufactures, can be made to do the Government's bidding under threat of reduction of duties on foreign competing products. It is not likely, in the present situation, that the present duty of 45 cents a bushel on wheat or of 25 cents a bushel on corn, or 7 cents on long-staple cotton, will be reduced. It is politically unthinkable in view of our agricultural surpluses and the frantic and uneconomic efforts that the administration is making to curtail crops. Inevitably, such reductions as may be made will fall on industry and will be primarily and principally for the supposed benefit of agriculture.

Tariff bargaining, if carried out on any important scale between any two countries, is bound to provoke similar bargains among other groups in self-defense. These bargains, if they amount to anything, are a species of economic alliance; and as political alliances tend to provoke other counterbalancing alliances, so we may expect similar results in the economic sphere. International politics, like national politics, is essentially but the outward and visible form of economic interests.

FForeign trade is extremely desirable and important, and tariff bargains may protect us against sudden imposition of duties and quotas in our trade; but a tariff truce can do that more simply than could the proposed measure, and without risk of retaliatory bargaining.

Above all, no tariff bargain or arrangement is definite, stable, or even worth while as long as the currency of either country which is a party to the arrangement is fluctuating and unanchored. This requires no argument. In most cases larger imports must displace a similar quantity of home-produced goods, necessarily reducing the price level and certainly not increasing employment.

To return to the compulsive features of this requested Executive power, it is clear that a very powerful weapon will be handed to the administration in its attempt to regulate and regiment our economic life. Industries which are in any way dependent upon tariff protection for profitable operation can be forced to accept the form of collective bargaining the administration desires them to adopt, the hours of work, wages, salaries, etc. Indeed, the administration will be in control of all these industries, and they will do as they are told or go out of business or into the hands of those whom the Government may designate to run them. This is possible; indeed, it is in line with the aims of the so-called "brain trust."

Some of the bad effects of the proposed plan might be mitigated if the President would consent to an arrangement by which no changes of duty would be ordered, or no bargains made, until after thorough and impartial survey of the industries to be affected by an enlarged and more permanently constituted Tariff Commission. Such a commission should necessarily be composed of the highest type of appointees—men unbiased, and specially qualified, appointed for life, as are our Federal judges, and equipped to make impartial surveys of our economic structure and needs. This body, under the direction of the Secretary of State, could have complete charge of all details of negotiation of tariff bargains, and no reductions or increases could be ordered unless upon and after its survey and published report.

This might be some safeguard; but it would be far safer that the Congress should retain a veto voice on any arrangement which shall be made, by a provision that no reduction or increase can take effect until approved by joint resolution, or, as is the usual course, by consent of the Senate.

Also, if we adopt the new and radical course proposed by the President, we shall have to abandon our present most-favored-nation policy because, under that policy, whatever benefits or opportunities in our market we may extend to one country, we must extend to any other country which will give us the same advantages as does the first country we have bargained with.

In short, the proposed new policy, in spite of certain mechanical advantages, is likely to prove—

1. Unconstitutional.
2. Dictatorial and coercive.
3. Provocative of international ill will and retaliation.
4. Unworkable in the face of the most-favored-nation clause embodied in practically all our commercial treaties.
5. Even if certain benefits and advantages could be obtained, which were not canceled by adverse or retaliatory action of other governments, they would not justify this radical innovation and inroad upon the powers of the Congress.
6. And, finally, without stabilized and anchored currency and international exchange, no agreement or tariff bargain is worth making, for either party by depreciating or devaluing its currency can vitiate it or radically change its effect.

Until international currencies are once more stabilized and have a more or less fixed relative value, international trade must be a gamble in exchange and cannot be revived, even by the piecemeal method which is proposed by the Doughton bill.

DR. WILLIAM A. WIRT

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I desire to read to the Senate a telegram which I have received from the Rotary Club of Gary, Ind.:

GARY, IND., March 29, 1934.

Hon. ARTHUR ROBINSON:

The Rotary Club of Gary ask that Dr. William A. Wirt be given a full, broad, and complete open hearing. Representing as we do a cross section of business and professional men, and knowing Dr. Wirt's keen intellect, his honesty, character, and integrity, and his ability to analyze any subject in which his great mind is interested, feel that only through such open and full hearing will justice be given to the American people. We who have had Dr. Wirt before our organization to discuss the present depression problem numerous times feel the citizenship of our country should have whatever information he has to give.

THE ROTARY CLUB OF GARY.

I ask that there may be inserted in the RECORD at this point a resolution along the same line adopted by the Lions Club of Gary, Ind., and also one from the Hammond Allied Organizations, of Hammond, Lake County, Ind., bearing on the same subject.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Dr. William A. Wirt, superintendent of Gary public schools, has heretofore expressed his views concerning the trend of our present Government, and his opinions have been given wide publicity through the public press and in the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas Dr. William A. Wirt is well known to the members of the Gary Lions Club, who appreciate the value of considering the views of Dr. Wirt: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the Gary Lions Club hereby recommend the serious consideration of Dr. Wirt's assertions by the public officials of our country, to the end that a complete investigation may be had and proper weight be accorded any findings obtained; be it further

Resolved, That the Gary Lions Club go on record at this time as having full and complete confidence in the integrity, ability, and sincerity of Dr. William A. Wirt, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to Senators FRED VAN NUYS and ARTHUR ROBINSON and also to Congressman WILLIAM T. SCHULTE.

We, the members of the Hammond Allied Organizations of Lake County, being a patriotic American organization banded together for the promotion of national and local civic welfare, do hereby resolve that:

Whereas you, Dr. Wirt, of the city of Gary, have taken the noble, patriotic stand against the so-called "brain trust" and their communistic inclinations, that we hereby commend your attitude and offer to you our hearty support in your activities toward the end that our Nation may be rid of this evil forever: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Dr. Wirt.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I sympathize very fully with the concern felt by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] over the charges of Dr. Wirt. In fact, I felt so much concerned that I requested a newspaper friend of mine to conduct an investigation of Dr. Wirt's charges, and I now have his report, which I wish to read for the reassurance of the Senator from Indiana. The report reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 28, 1934.

Hon. BENNETT CHAMP CLARK,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: Like all loyal American citizens, I was deeply stirred by Dr. William Wirt's revelation that a revolutionary junta is plotting the overthrow of the Republic and the establishment of a communist government, and since I have had some experience as an investigator, I made it my business to conduct a thorough probe of the charge. The facts revealed by my inquiry are so ominous and so fraught with significance for the future of the Nation that I deem it my duty to bring them to your attention.

In the main, these facts afford overwhelming confirmation of Dr. Wirt's startling allegation. He does not appear to be fully informed about minor details, but the existence of the conspiracy is established beyond peradventure of a doubt. The diabolical cleverness of the plot is sufficient proof of the Machiavellian minds which conceived it.

The first step in this appalling conspiracy would be the abduction of the President during his sleep. At first blush this would appear to be a difficult if not impossible escapade, because the President is carefully guarded at all hours of the day and night. Nevertheless, the conspirators hit upon a scheme for surmounting this obstacle. They decided to inveigle the President into attending a speech by Representative HAMILTON FISH, of New York—a sedative so powerful that it has heretofore triumphed over the most persistent cases of insomnia.

Then, after the betrayed President had been spirited away to a secret hiding place (said to be the same spot where J. P. Morgan and Charlie Mitchell have kept their incomes since 1930), the conspirators would set up a triumvirate of dictators, consisting of the Senator from Ohio, Mr. FESS, the Senator from Iowa, Mr. DICKINSON, and the Senator from Indiana, Mr. ROBINSON. The theory behind this move is that after about 2 weeks of this dictatorship the American people would either turn to Bolshevism or turn on the gas. As you will see, the traitors are thoroughgoing realists, intimately acquainted with public sentiment.

The person from whom I obtained these harrowing facts is a noted educator. It was he who first taught ostriches to run backward in order to keep the sand out of their eyes. He also excels in many other lines. He introduced America to the popular sport of wrestling on horseback; he perfected the left-handed monkey wrench, and even now he is working on a device whereby eggs may be fried on the upper, or Republican side, before they are fried on the under, or Democratic side.

Although you have doubtless guessed his name by this time, I think I should state it for the record, together with his address, so that he may be available for the official investigations which seem to be inevitable. I allude, of course, to Dr. Filbert J. Squirrelfood, who at this time is a somewhat unwilling tenant of an institution supported by public funds.

I remain, sir, your most humble and obedient servant,

PAUL Y. ANDERSON.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the revenue bill being now before the Senate, I desire to make a preliminary statement, brief in character, explanatory of some of the changes made in the bill by the Finance Committee of the Senate. It will not take very long for me to do this. I am informed there is to be a recess then to enable Senators to attend memorial services in the House. I hope then the Senate will return immediately to its Chamber to continue the consideration of the revenue bill.

Mr. President, this proposed legislation is designed to accomplish two main purposes—to raise additional revenue and to stop the loopholes in the present law which our experience has shown to exist.

The bill as it passed the House was estimated to provide additional revenue in the amount of $258,000,000 for a full year of operation. The House bill added no new taxes except an excise tax on coconut oil and small additional taxes on crude petroleum designed to carry the cost of administering the oil codes. The House bill did not repeal any of the existing taxes except the tax on unfermented fruit juices and the tax on checks, which was repealed as of January 1, 1935, instead of July 1, 1935.

The bill as reported by the Committee on Finance will provide approximately $70,000,000 more revenue than the House bill, or a total of $330,000,000 more than the present revenue law in a full year of operation. This increase over the yield of the House bill is obtained mainly by the addition of the capital-stock tax, which, together with an excess-profits tax, it is estimated will raise approximately $95,000,000 in a full year of operation. The Finance Committee also concluded that the check tax should be continued until July 1, 1935, as is now provided in the law, but repealed the tax on soft drinks, the tax on clocks, and the tax on furs sold for less than $20. Various other changes were made in the income-tax provisions of the bill as it passed the House, designed to make the bill operate more equitably to taxpayers generally, although some of these changes result in loss of revenue to the Treasury.

The estimates which I have just given are based on a full year of operation of the new provisions of the bill. The income-tax provisions of the bill take effect for taxable years beginning on and after January 1, 1934. Consequently, the changes in the income-tax title will not commence to yield any revenue to the Treasury until the calendar year 1935. The additional revenue from the capital-stock tax will not come in in any substantial amount until July 1935. It is estimated that for the fiscal year 1934–35 the bill as reported by the Committee on Finance will yield approximately $175,000,000 more than the existing law. All this additional revenue is badly needed by the Federal Government in view of the heavy emergency expenses which must be met. Consequently, although I should like to see the elimination of many of the excise or nuisance taxes, I do not believe it is feasible to eliminate them earlier than July 1, 1935, which is the date on which many of them will be automatically repealed. The President in his Budget message anticipated additional revenues of approximately $150,000,000 from the changes proposed to be made by the new revenue bill. The bill as reported to the Senate complies with the President's request, with a slight margin for safety.

Your committee did not change the income-tax rate schedule provided for in the House bill, although I may say it is anticipated that there may be a moderate change in the rates, as has been pointed out by the Senator from Michigan; that in the lower bracket there might be a slight modification. Our expert is working on that subject. We did decide, however, that additional recognition should be given to earned income. The House bill provided for a credit against net income for purposes of the normal tax equal to 10 percent of the amount of the taxpayer's earned income up to $8,000. Your committee has increased this maximum to $20,000. Since this earned-income allowance applies only to the normal tax, the greatest tax reduction possible to any one taxpayer amounts to $80, as compared to $32 under the House bill.

The House bill simplifies the income-tax rate structure by providing for one normal tax rate of 4 percent instead of the two normal tax rates of 4 percent and 8 percent contained in the existing law, and by reducing the number of surtax brackets from 53 to 28. Notwithstanding these changes in the rate schedule, the rates themselves are very much the same as those of the existing law in the case of earned incomes. The bill, however, considerably increases the amount of taxes payable on incomes derived from dividends and interest on Government bonds which is exempt from the normal tax only. While we reduced the normal tax from 8 percent to 4 percent, we increased the surtax of 4 percent in order to get at these tax-exempt securities which heretofore have been exempt. This increase is due to the elimination of the 8-percent normal tax rate, with a corresponding increase in the surtax rates. Although the surtax is technically applied to "surtax net incomes" in excess of $4,000, instead of $6,000 as at present, the personal exemption and credit for dependents under the bill may be used in the computation of the surtax as well as in the computation of the normal tax. Heretofore they could be applied only to the normal tax. In reducing the surtax from $6,000 as in the present law to $4,000, we make these exemptions apply to the surtaxes the same as to the normal taxes.

The net result is that in the case of the single man the surtax rates will in fact apply to net incomes in excess of $5,000 approximately, while in the case of the married man with no dependents the surtax rates will apply to net incomes in excess of $6,500 approximately. Your committee believes that these changes are desirable, since it appears that in the past dividend income has not been bearing its fair share of income taxation. Furthermore, the recognition of the desirability of a lower rate of tax upon earned income is an advance over the present law. The changes in the income-tax rate schedule are expected to bring in approximately $20,000,000 additional in a full year.

The bulk of the additional revenue expected to be obtained from this bill results from stopping various methods of tax avoidance which have flourished in the past. Although many of the new provisions are much more severe than those of the existing law, it is the opinion of the Committee on Finance that the changes proposed are fair and are no more stringent than is necessary to meet the conditions with which we are confronted. The Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance both conducted public hearings, and both committees endeavored to meet every legitimate criticism which could be leveled at the proposed changes. Although cases will no doubt be presented in which the bill operates severely, it is our judgment that the bill is perfectly fair to the great mass of honest taxpayers. It is possible to stop the known instances of tax avoidance without causing hardship in some cases.

I shall not endeavor to discuss at this time each of the technical and administrative changes which are proposed in the bill. As we proceed with our consideration of the bill, however, I shall be glad to explain in detail any section that I can. At this time, however, I do wish to direct attention to some of the major changes which have been made with a view to preventing tax avoidance.

First. Perhaps the most important change in the bill is that relating to the taxation of capital gains and the deduction of capital losses. In the past few years the revenue from the income tax has been enormously reduced by deductions on account of sales of securities at a loss. In many instances these losses were no doubt legitimate. The attention of the taxpayers of the United States has, however, been directed to numerous instances of wealthy individuals who have completely eliminated their income taxes by taking losses on sales of stock made to members of the taxpayer's family or to business associates. Frequently the taxpayer has reacquired the securities within a short time after the sale. In other words, the sale was simply for the purpose of taking a tax loss; and in many instances, after the transaction was concluded, the taxpayer held precisely the same property as before. The House bill and the bill as reported by your committee provide that losses on sales of capital assets shall be allowed only to the extent of gains from the sale of such assets, with an exception which I shall describe hereafter. In other words, the bill recognizes the fact that capital gains and losses differ from ordinary income and deductions, and puts them in a separate category. This amendment carries to its logical conclusion the restrictions imposed by the 1932 law upon the deductions of losses on sales of securities held for less than 2 years. To avoid hardship to taxpayers with relatively small net losses from sales of capital assets, your committee inserted a provision permitting the deduction from ordinary income in any year of a capital net loss of not to exceed $2,000. In my judgment, this provision will take care of the bulk of hard cases. It certainly will help out the man of small income.

Profits from sales of property cannot fairly be subjected to the same graduated rates which are applicable to other types of income, because of the fact that the gain realized by a sale in a particular year often represents a profit which has accrued over a number of years. The bill represents a great advance over the existing law in providing that the amount of capital gains or capital losses to be taken into account shall depend upon the length of time that the property sold has been held. For example, if the property sold has been held for 2 to 5 years, 60 percent of the gain or loss is to be taken into account in computing net income. Senators will recall that now the period is 2 years. If the property has been held for more than 10 years, 30 percent of the gain or loss is to be taken into account. These provisions give a proper recognition to the length of time during which the profit or loss has accrued, while at the same time the capital gain or loss which is taken into account is subjected to the graduated surtax rates. In our opinion these provisions are a notable improvement over existing law, which subjects any gain from the sale of property held over 2 years to a flat 12½-percent tax. We estimate that $30,000,000 additional revenue will be secured by these provisions. They are certainly a simplification. I may say, in that connection, that while there is no capital gain and loss tax in England, while we retain these provisions, they have a tendency toward simplification.

Second. One of the devices most frequently used to avoid the high surtaxes has been the personal holding company, or incorporated pocketbook. A wealthy man subject to total income taxes reaching a maximum of 63 percent has obviously much to gain by the organization of a corporation to take title to his securities, since corporations are ordinarily subjected to a flat tax of 13¾ percent. Although the income tax laws from the beginning have contained provisions for an additional tax upon corporations formed or availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of surtaxes upon their shareholders, these provisions have been difficult to enforce in practice because of the necessity of proving the intent or purpose of the shareholder-to-be, to keep from paying the tax.

The pending bill, therefore, contains a provision imposing a surtax upon personal holding companies in addition to the normal tax applicable to corporations generally. The bill as it passed the House laid this tax at the rate of 35 percent. Your committee has changed the rate to 30 percent on the undistributed adjusted net income up to $100,000 and 40 percent on the income in excess of $100,000. The Government is trying to force them to distribute these accumulations, in order to obtain the tax.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did not the committee also provide that they could accumulate a reserve against deficits?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I shall come to that. The interest on Government obligations, which is exempt from the normal tax, will be subjected to this surtax. The bill provides that in determining the undistributed adjusted net income to which the tax is applied there shall be deducted dividends paid during the taxable year; a reasonable amount used or set aside to retire indebtedness incurred before 1934; and, finally, a 10-percent reserve. It was presented to us that there are many holding companies which permit reserves to be accumulated in order to pay off some maturities which might come due in the future. We have made provision for that, changing the bill as it passed the House in that regard.

These deductions will provide for the reasonable business requirements of legitimate personal holding companies. Furthermore, these companies will not be liable to the surtax if they distribute their earnings to their shareholders. The estimates show that approximately $20,000,000 will be realized directly or indirectly from the application of this provision.

I may say that a good many individuals interested in real estate came before us and told us that these rents should be excluded. They made such a strong case that, in the case of the holding companies, we also excluded rents which might be paid into the reserve.

Third. For many years the law has permitted affiliated corporations to file consolidated returns. The 1932 law, as amended by the National Industrial Recovery Act, provides, however, that affiliated corporations shall pay an additional tax of 1 percent for the privilege of filing such returns. Consolidated returns are of substantial benefit to an affiliated group of corporations, particularly in depression years, since such a return permits the loss of one corporation to reduce the net income and tax of an affiliated corporation. On the other hand, many corporations, such as the railroads, are compelled by State laws to incorporate separately in the various States, and the income of the group as a whole can be reported properly only on a consolidated return. The bill as it passed the House, therefore, provided for the retention of the provisions for consolidated returns, but increased the differential in tax from 1 percent to 2 percent. Your committee retained the provisions of the House without substantial change. It is estimated that the retention of consolidated returns will yield more revenue than would be secured by eliminating the provisions. Our estimates indicate an additional revenue of $20,000,000 from this source. So now the corporation pays a rate of 13¾ percent, and if it files a consolidated return, it pays a rate of 15¾ percent.

Fourth. The capital-stock and excess-profits taxes carried in the bill as reported by your committee were not included in the bill as it passed the House, although these taxes are now in force under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, they will automatically expire this year unless reenacted. The experience with these taxes has been quite satisfactory, since they have been certain in yield, have been easily borne by the taxpayers, and readily administered by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. In view of the state of the finances your committee concluded that it was highly desirable that this considerable source of additional revenue should be retained. Your committee has made various perfecting amendments in the provisions of the law as now in effect, but the rates of tax of the existing law have been retained. Since taxpayers are given a new opportunity to declare the fair value of each corporation's capital stock, there can be no charge of unfairness in the reimposition of these taxes.

That is, one tenth of 1 percent on capital stocks, and after they have made 12½ percent, then we apply an excess-profits tax of 5 percent above that. To prevent any harshness, we permit the corporation to declare its capital stock. If it declares it too low, then we will get it by virtue of the tax of 5 percent over the 12½ percent on the excess profits. In other words, we are using the leverage to make them put in a fair capital stock value.

Fifth. Your committee found that a considerable loss of revenue from partnerships had occurred during the past few years by reason of the fact that losses from the sales of securities by partnerships were permitted as a deduction against the incomes from other sources of the individual partners. Senators will remember the revelations before the Committee on Banking and Currency where it was shown that certain individuals were using the losses of their partnerships in making returns. Of course, these partners were compelled to pay taxes upon the partnership profits in its prosperous years, and in many cases these taxable profits had exceeded the deductible losses recently allowed. The bill safeguards the revenues in the future, however, by the application of the new capital gain and loss provisions to partnerships as well as to individuals and corporations. Under the bill, the partnership will be permitted to deduct losses on the sale of capital assets only to the extent of gains from such sales, and the partner can have no deduction on account of any capital net loss of the partnership. In this way the main source of the tax avoidance by banking and security partnerships in the past has been eliminated. It is anticipated that this change alone will result in $5,000,000 additional revenue.

Sixth. Your committee has also revised the reorganization provisions in order to prevent the various tax avoidance schemes which have been used in this connection. Your committee has modified the provisions of the House in order to provide a uniform rule for reorganizations in all the States which will permit legitimate business readjustments designed to strengthen the financial condition of the participating corporation. The elimination of the loopholes which have previously existed in these provisions will save the Treasury approximately $10,000,000 a year.

Seventh. From 1916 to date the income tax law has provided that dividends from surplus accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, the effective date of the first income tax law, are not taxable to the shareholder, but such earnings cannot be distributed free from tax until the company has distributed its earnings since that date. The House bill eliminated this provision. Not much revenue is involved, but the provision in question is one of long standing and corporations for years have acted in reliance on it. Your committee felt that that date was far enough back, and that we should not go back of March 1, 1913, in fixing values.

Eighth. American corporations doing business abroad are, of course, subject to foreign income taxes with respect to that part of their incomes which is earned abroad. At the same time such corporations can be subjected to tax in this country upon their entire incomes, including the income earned abroad. If the United States exercised its full power in this respect, the result would be to place the American corporation doing business abroad at a serious disadvantage as compared to a foreign corporation conducting the same kind of business in the foreign country, since the foreign corporation would be subject to only one income tax, whereas the American corporation would be taxed twice. Consequently, the existing law contains a provision for a credit against the American income tax of the amount of the foreign taxes paid on account of the income earned abroad. The credit is limited in effect to that part of the American tax which is imposed on the income earned abroad. In other words, the credit for foreign taxes does not in any way reduce the income tax on income earned in the United States. The House bill, in effect, reduces this credit by approximately one half. Your committee believes that the provisions of the existing law should be retained in this respect, since they appear to operate fairly and since it is desirable to encourage the American export business. That was also the view of the State Department.

The bill makes a number of other important changes which I shall not describe in detail at this time. Among these are improvements in the provisions for the administration of the taxes upon gasoline and lubricating oil, which, without changes in the rates of tax, are estimated to produce $18,000,000 additional revenue by insuring the collection of the tax from all persons upon whom it is imposed. The provisions for the taxation of annuities have been revised so that a person in receipt of annuities totaling more than $500 a year—we excluded annuities of $500 and less a year from the provisions of the tax—will be compelled to pay a tax upon that part which is deemed to be interest upon the consideration paid for the annuities.

Under the existing law no tax is imposed upon the recipient of an annuity until he has received back the entire amount paid for it. Since an annuity represents in part interest upon the consideration paid, it seems fair to tax the annuitant currently upon the proportion of the annuity payment which represents interest, and the bill so provides.

The bill also contains a provision which will deny losses in the cases of sales or exchanges of property between members of a family or between a shareholder and a corporation in which the shareholder owns a majority of the stock. In several recent cases losses of this character have proved to be an important method of tax avoidance.

Your committee has strengthened the provisions of the House bill designed to impose an additional tax upon citizens and corporations of foreign countries which impose discriminatory or extraterritorial taxes upon citizens and corporations of this country. We hope that the provision as now drawn will effectively discourage this discrimination.

There are many other technical and administrative changes which will perfect the existing law and in the aggregate will increase the revenue by about $20,000,000.

In conclusion, I believe that the revenue bill, as your committee has reported it, effects a series of major improvements in the existing law. The income-tax rates have not been greatly changed and only one important new tax has been imposed—the capital-stock tax. Nevertheless, by tightening up the provisions of the present law additional revenue will be produced which the Government urgently needs. In my opinion, the great mass of honest taxpayers in the country will approve of the action we have taken, since we have attempted to make the tax provisions effective upon all taxpayers alike and to put an end to the various schemes and devices by which some wealthy taxpayers were evading the imposition of the income tax upon them. The bill distributes the tax burden fairly among taxpayers and in no way impedes legitimate business transactions. I hope that the bill can be promptly passed and carried into effect.

Mr. President, I hope in the consideration of the bill we may in the main hold to the recommendations of the committee and pass the bill as speedily as possible, and as we go along section by section we shall be glad to attempt to explain any of its provisions concerning which explanation may be desired.

ALLEGED COERCION OF DEMOCRATS

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from South Carolina desires to make a few remarks. I shall be glad to yield to him if I can have an understanding that I will not yield the floor by so doing. I yield with that understanding.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, what I have to say will not take very long. It is a matter which I think is of vital interest to every Democratic Senator.

There appeared in the newspapers of my State on Friday, March 30, an article of which I think particularly the Democrats ought to take cognizance. The heading of the article is, "F. D. R. Plans Tightening of Loyalty Lines." I desire to read that article, which is as follows:

> Many stories are going around Washington today as to what President Roosevelt is going to do to Congress for overriding his veto of the independent offices supply bill carrying liberal provisions for veterans and Federal employees. The enactment of the bill puts his operating Budget over $200,000,000 in the red, according to administration leaders.
> There is wide-spread belief that he will call on Congress to raise taxes in this amount before it adjourns. * * *
>
> One thing is certain, Congress will hear more about its vote this week to override the veto when the President returns to Washington from southern waters.
>
> The failure of Senator SMITH to support the administration yesterday may change the complexion of the patronage situation in South Carolina. Senator BYRNES led the fight for the administration, thereby putting him in an even better position to dictate Federal patronage in his State, if he so desires.
>
> Cabinet officers swung into action yesterday in an effort to obtain the 4 needed votes to sustain the President's veto. It was learned that Secretary of Commerce Roper made a spirited appeal to Senator SMITH. Postmaster General Farley, operating from the White House, conducted a telephone-appeal campaign just before the vote was taken. A number of Senators declined to talk with the Postmaster General when he called.
> MARSHALSHIP JOBS
>
> There are a number of Federal places in South Carolina which are open or could be made open. These include the marshal for the western district, judge, district attorney, and marshal for the eastern district, and the collector of port at Charleston.
>
> Senator SMITH has made several direct appeals to President Roosevelt for the appointment of Rube Gosnell as marshal for the western district. This appointment was expected to "break" up until the time the President left for Florida. It is reported here that the President is going to draw the loyalty lines more closely hereafter in giving jobs. If this be the case the chances of Gosnell are not so bright.
> Senator BYRNES has recommended Frank Myers, of Charleston, for judge. Senator SMITH has submitted a list of several South Carolina attorneys, asking that the best qualified man be appointed. Myers' name is not on the list. In view of the veto yesterday in the Senate it will be interesting to see who gets the job.

Mr. President, I desire to repudiate any such insinuation as contained in that article against the President of the United States and his Cabinet. We have not yet reached the point where an administration will attempt to coerce men to do its bidding by the threat of withholding patronage. We are honest in our convictions and we have our duty to perform. I do not believe that any Cabinet officer or the President of the United States would indulge in a practice which runs contrary to the Corrupt Practices Act, even if they did not base their course of action upon a much higher plane than that. They have a right to voice their opinion, but they have no right, and they have not exercised any such right, to coerce loyal Democrats to do the bidding of the administration.

I desire to take this occasion to repudiate any such insinuation as contained in the article I have just read.

Where the correspondent who wrote the article obtained his information I do not know. Subsequent events, however, will prove whether his implied reflection on our administration is true or whether it is not.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I hope my friend the Senator from South Carolina will not be offended when I say to him he may possess his soul in peace.

All the Presidents of the United States, we are proud to say, have been gentlemen.

Mr. SMITH. I agree with the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Scan their lives and it will be found that every man elevated to the office of President of the United States has been a gentleman, and I believe that, without any invidious distinctions, one of the most exquisite, most nearly perfect gentleman among all those who have occupied the White House, is the present occupant. Senators need have no fear, on this side or the other side of the aisle, that any action they take will result in any discrimination or lack of consideration toward them on the part of the President of the United States.

Senators on this side of the aisle may vote their convictions as they should vote them, and they will be secure from any discrimination so far as patronage is concerned. I say here that Franklin D. Roosevelt would despise a Senator—that is a hard word—he would despise a Senator who voted to sustain a veto simply to please a President of the United States.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Arizona will agree with me, and I am sure the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] will likewise, that the newspaper article I just read carries a very humiliating implication, that we are to be punished if we vote our convictions, and rewarded if we vote someone else's convictions.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator, although he is a courageous man, is unduly alarmed. No man who understands men and who so successfully deals with men, as does Franklin D. Roosevelt, would think of drawing the line, or of making any discrimination as to patronage against any Senator.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator need not stand here to defend the President. I do not think anyone here is obliged to defend him.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. PITTMAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that it is the desire to take a recess at this time, and if that is agreeable to the Senator from Arkansas, I will continue my remarks when the Senate shall reconvene after the funeral services.

FUNERAL OF REPRESENTATIVE POU, OF NORTH CAROLINA—JOINT SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senate has accepted the invitation of the House of Representatives to participate in a joint session at which tribute will be paid to the memory of the late EDWARD W. POU, a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of North Carolina.

Mr. POU has served as a Member of Congress for a period of about 33 years. His loyalty to public duty has been demonstrated throughout that long service. In order that Senators may be prepared to participate in the joint session it is desired that a recess now be taken until 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p.m., at which time the Senate will reconvene, be called to order by the Vice President, and proceed in a body to the Hall of the House of Representatives. I, therefore, move that the Senate now take a recess until 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p.m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 2 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p.m.

At the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

DISCLOSURES OF UTILITIES INVESTIGATION BY FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, again the conscience of the American people has been shocked by the disclosures that have taken place before the Federal Trade Commission in their investigations of the Power Trust. Yet, Mr. President, nothing new has developed. The same disclosures, and even worse ones, have been made by that investigation during the last 3 years, the period during which it has been proceeding. The most recent disclosure is one that directly affects the Legislature of the State of New York.

From the files of the J. G. White Management Corporation, one of the subsidiaries of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., were taken copies of letters which were written by a member of the State Senate of the State of New York. A letter dated March 26, 1927, reads as follows:

Mr. S. J. Magee—

He was one of the officials of the electric light subsidiary; also vice president of the Associated Gas & Electric Co.—

NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

MY DEAR MR. MAGEE: In keeping with your instructions of March 22 regarding my expense account for the month of March in connection with the village election, I herewith hand you bill as suggested, made out to the Chasm Power Co.

That is another subsidiary which, I understand, is the operating company in the home town of the State senator in question.

The legislature adjourned last Friday, and I have now returned to Chateaugay and will be here most of the coming summer. If at any time I can be of further service to you, please do not hesitate to call upon me.

Observe, Mr. President, that he says "further service to you", indicating from the letter itself that he has been of some service.

I hope my work during the past session was satisfactory to your company, not so much for the new legislation enacted but from the fact that many detrimental bills which were introduced we were able to kill in my committee.

Very truly yours,

W. T. THAYER.

Mr. Thayer at that time was chairman in the New York State Senate of the committee that had to do with all bills affecting electric light and gas activities. He says:

I hope my work during the past session was satisfactory to your company.

The company was not in his constituency. In the State senate he was serving a senatorial district, but the office of the company and its main activities were outside that senatorial district.

I hope my services have been satisfactory to your company.

Not to his constituents; not to the people of the State of New York but to "your company."

In another letter written by Mr. Thayer on March 15, 1928, nearly a year afterwards, on the stationery of the New York State Senate, Mr. Thayer says again:

THE STATE SENATE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
Albany, March 15, 1928.

Mr. C. A. GREENIDGE,
Care of J. G. White Management Corporation,
33 Liberty Street, New York City.

DEAR SIR: As per our conversation this afternoon on the phone, I herewith hand you original bills as introduced by Assemblyman

Sargent in the assembly, nos. 1889 and 1890. I also attach the amended bills which just came up from the printer since our conversation.

Mr. Sargent advises me that the amendments were suggested by the International Paper Co., and they take care of their objections. From the fact that Assemblyman Sargent secured a rush print order on these amendments the bill will come over to the senate and can go on the calendar for Monday night.

After you have examined them, and if you feel that they should be held up in the senate, you had better call me on the phone at Chateaugay either Friday or Saturday,

Very truly yours,

W. T. THAYER.

There is another letter written by the chairman of this committee to the same subsidiary of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., part of the Power Trust of America.

Again, a letter from Mr. Thayer written on the stationery of the Senate of the State of New York, dated March 17, 1927, reads as follows:

WARREN T. THAYER,
THIRTY-FOURTH DISTRICT,
CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC SERVICE.

S. J. MAGEE,
J. G. White Management Corporation, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. MAGEE: Referring again to Senator Westall's bill no. 898, introductory no. 789, which authorizes two or more municipalities to jointly acquire, construct, lease, and maintain waterworks system, I beg to advise I took the matter up with Senator Westall and he had prepared an amendment to the bill which will make it satisfactory to your people. When this bill is reprinted I will send you a copy of it for your consideration and to see if the objectionable features have been eliminated.

Very truly yours,

W. T. THAYER.

Nothing is said in either of these letters about whether the people of the State of New York desire the so-called "objectionable features" or whether they are just or unjust, but that an amendment had been prepared which would make the bill satisfactory to the Power Trust. "If it is not", as the preceding letter said, "call me on the phone and the bill will be held up in the Senate."

Another letter, written by Mr. Thayer, is to Mr. S. J. Magee, 33 Liberty Street, New York City, N.Y., which reads:

DEAR SIR: During our village election just passed I spent $457 in an effort to win the election. We had many loyal supporters, but the propaganda spread by our opponents, along with the influence of the banks, we were unable to win, but we are not discouraged—we will beat them yet.

The above amount is made up in printing, advertising, attorneys' fees, postage, and automobile hire on election day; also watchers and checkers at the polls during the election.

Will you kindly advise me if it would be satisfactory to put this amount in my next expense account to Mr. Pierce, the same as I did last year?

Awaiting your reply, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

W. T. THAYER.

Remember that this election was in a village where, as I remember, there were fewer than 500 votes altogether cast at the election. It seemed at this election they needed attorneys and other assistance, including watchers and checkers whose employment cost $457.

Another important thing is disclosed by these letters. They indicate on their face that what he is inquiring about, what he is talking about in these letters constitute but a small part of the activities of this man who presided in the Senate of the State of New York at the committee hearings on all bills having anything to do with gas, electricity, or water.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, Mr. Thayer, while he was a member of the State senate, was in the employ as an attorney of certain corporations?

Mr. NORRIS. Undoubtedly. The letters, I think, clearly so disclose. They indicate that he was not only on the pay roll, but he says, "Shall I put this bill in the same way as I put in other bills", as to the amount of which we know nothing.

Mr. BORAH. It is a very objectionable relation for a man in the legislature to occupy.

Mr. NORRIS. Especially when he occupies a key position, as he did.

Mr. BORAH. Even if he had no other power than that of a vote, it would still be objectionable.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; it would be bad then, but it is doubly bad when he is a member of the committee which handles the particular bills; and it is worse yet when he is chairman of that committee, and, as these letters indicate, everything passed through his hands; and, according to these letters, nothing passed through his hands but it was first submitted to his client, the Power Trust. When objection was made by his client, no other conclusion can be drawn from these letters than that he would proceed to hold bills up in the senate.

How many bills, how many acts of the New York Legislature have been held up by this man? How many other key men does the Power Trust have in the New York State Senate and in the New York State House of Representatives; and how many keymen do they have in other legislatures all over the United States?

Mr. President, Mr. Greenidge, to whom some of these letters were directed, vice president of the Utility Management Corporation, a subsidiary, issued a statement in defense of these disclosures. What do these letters disclose? It is not simply what is shown on the face of the letters; it is not simply the particular instances to which these letters point directly; but it is the knowledge one must get from reading these letters that these are only samples. They show on their face that they are only indications pointing to other activities performed for, and other relations held by, this member of the New York State Senate to the Power Trust.

Now, what defense was made when these letters were published?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I did not hear the entire discussion of the Senator. Did he point out the fact that this particular State senator was chairman of the committee which had under consideration bills affecting public utilities?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and he is still a member of the committee.

Mr. WAGNER. He is still a member of the committee?

Mr. NORRIS. But not its chairman.

Mr. WAGNER. It shows what chance there is under such circumstances.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it shows how the Power Trust is safeguarding every avenue through which injury might possibly come to them, and they do not care what means they employ to protect their interests, as I am going to show from the defense which they make of this man.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, the fact that he was chairman of the committee is an exceedingly important item, because, undoubtedly, the Power Trust is looking for men of influence; but, after all, the fact that he was an attorney for the corporation and at the same time purporting to legislate in regard to it is a situation which cannot be defended.

Mr. NORRIS. No, sir; it cannot be defended in a free country.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I agree absolutely with what the Senator says about that; but I wanted to emphasize the reprehensible nature of the whole transaction.

Mr. NORRIS. Now let us see what defense Mr. Greenidge makes for this man. There are the letters published in the newspapers as coming from Washington where the Federal Trade Commission is investigating the Power Trust. This man Greenidge, who defends this man, was vice president of the company. Speaking of the publication of these letters he says:

This is another instance in which the Federal Trade Commission has, without any explanation or opportunity for explanation, given out information capable of being used by the foes of utilities in their campaign of lies against the utilities and slander of honest public officials. We believe that every right-thinking citizen will be justly incensed at such tactics.

Let us look at that defense for just a moment. He says:

This is another instance in which the Federal Trade Commission has, without any explanation or opportunity for explanation, given out information.

Mr. President, would you want the Federal Trade Commission to make an explanation, and if they were as wise as Solomon could they make an explanation of such conduct that would be satisfactory to the utilities and their officials? The truth is that these letters were evidence disclosed at that hearing. The letters were taken from the files of the subsidiaries of the Power Trust itself; this very evidence, these very witnesses are making the case. Unfriendly though they may be, the Federal Trade Commission have done nothing but bring out the evidence from day to day which they are required to bring out by a resolution of the Senate under which they are making the investigation. The writer says:

Without any opportunity of explanation—

At that hearing these same power officials were represented by attorneys who sat there in the presence of the Federal Trade Commission when this evidence was being developed, and not one word of explanation did they utter—and I would rather commend them for being wise and keeping silent, for I do not know what they could have said.

No statement was issued by the Federal Trade Commission. There is the evidence taken from the enemy. There is the mouth of the Federal Power Trust speaking its own language, showing that these men who think such conduct is honest and honorable, regard an attorney who was chairman in the State Senate of New York of a committee having to do with public utilities as being one against whom no evidence should be produced even though he has signed it himself.

Mr. Greenidge says, "By the foes of public utilities in their campaign of lies." If this is a lie, then the Power Trust people themselves stand convicted of perjury. It is their own evidence. It is not the evidence of those who are opposed to the activities of the Power Trust. It is the evidence of the Power Trust itself.

Again, Mr. Greenidge says that it is used "against the utilities and slander of honest public officials." Evidently the Power Trust itself thought the publication of the letters a slander against the New York State senator who wrote the letters and signed them himself. "Honest public officials!" "Slander!" And yet there is no denial anywhere of the truth of any of the statements. The disclosure shows the kind of campaign that was being conducted. They wanted to win the election in northern New York where a village campaign was being conducted. They had as their attorney to help win it the chairman of the Public Utilities Committee in the State Senate of New York. He lived there. He was employed by them and evidently was on their staff, because his letter says, "Shall I send this bill to the same man to whom I sent the other bills?" His letter shows that he rendered a monthly account to the Power Trust for his services, while the people of his legislative district thought he was serving them in making the laws that should govern the people of New York.

This man Greenidge says that the publication of that State senator's letter is "a slander upon honest public officials." I think he is laboring under a false impression when he says that "every right-minded, thinking citizen will be incensed at such tactics." The American people have not fallen yet so low that they think an attorney for the Power Trust, which has its net spread all over the United States, will be able to go to the country and control even village elections when they claim their interests are at stake.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I ask the name of the distinguished gentleman who has made such remarks?

Mr. NORRIS. He is Mr. C. A. Greenidge.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is he an attorney?

Mr. NORRIS. He is vice president of the Utility Management Corporation. According to these letters, he is also vice president of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. That is the company the Federal Trade Commission was investigating. That company in itself is a subsidiary of another branch of the Power Trust.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am wondering and curious to know if he is an attorney and a member of the American Bar Association.

Mr. NORRIS. No; but he is dealing with a man who is an attorney and who is probably a member of the American Bar Association. As to that, however, I cannot speak authoritatively.

Before I conclude I shall show that the disclosures before the Federal Trade Commission in this instance were very similar to some other disclosures that followed the next day which involve Tennessee and Kentucky, and still other disclosures which relate to Texas and other sections of the country, where this same man, Magee, and the same Associated Gas & Electric Co. are manipulating elections, not only in New York but in Tennessee, and have been for years.

I want to invite attention to an editorial which appeared in the Washington Herald of March 31, last Saturday, which I think well describes the feeling of the American people. It reads:

POWER RING ACTIVITIES CALL FOR INQUIRY

The letters of a New York State senator introduced before the Federal Trade Commission, showing the receipt of money and pointing to the rendition of service to public-utility companies, have created a sensation throughout the country.

Not that the link which has long existed in every State of the Union between the utility interests and our lawmakers was ever a matter of doubt. Not that the servile pliancy of legislative bodies to the wishes of the Power Trust was unsuspected. Such connection and subservience has been a matter of common knowledge for many years.

They have been written in the public consciousness by the uninterrupted thwarting of all attempts at genuine regulation, whether by better laws or better supervision, through the political power of the utility interests in every State capital.

I think that is literally true. There is not, in my judgment, a State capital in the United States where the same sort of tactics is not used either by the Associated Gas & Electric Co. or some other member of the great American Power Trust. I am going to discuss some of them this afternoon.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am obliged to leave the Chamber to attend a committee meeting, but before doing so I want to thank the Senator from Nebraska for calling public attention to the subject he is now discussing. When I first heard of the incident, I sent word to Albany that I hoped there might be an investigation made by the legislature of my State. I have been embarrassed in the matter because I might be accused of partisanship, for the reason that it so happens the man charged is not a member of my party. But I do feel that for the good of my own State there should be an investigation of the circumstance. I hope the address of the Senator will result in greater activity on the part of the Legislature of the State of New York.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator.

The editorial continues:

This sinister alliance has been established with almost the force of an admission, by the uniform failure of all bills seeking to limit excessive rates or to curb the exploitation of both consumer and investor by the speculative financiers of the public-utility business.

Mr. President, it is not limited to State legislatures, but it includes the Federal Congress as well. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], who is doing me the honor of listening to what I say, sat with me and with the present

Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], as a subcommittee of that great committee and listened to extended hearings on a bill introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

The Senator from Indiana knows the kind of legislation that was proposed and the way it was fought in the committee. We all know how it was fought here on the floor of the Senate. The measure has passed the Senate and is now pending in the House of Representatives, with opposition and with danger of its defeat through a misunderstanding, I believe, or a lack of opportunity to understand, on the part of the Members of that great body, which, in my judgment, would pass it unanimously if the Members once understood what is at issue and what the issue is.

This editorial says:

But now come three letters from Warren T. Thayer, a member of the State Senate of New York, which put the matter upon a footing very different from mere suspicion.

These letters amount to a confirmation of disclosures made by the Hearst newspapers of Power Trust practices.

Writing on the stationery of the New York Senate, Senator Thayer, in one letter, mentions the adjournment of the legislature and his return to his home.

"If at any time I can be of further service to you", he adds, "please do not hesitate to call upon me."

Do the merchants and the farmers of the district Senator Thayer represents believe, or have they ever believed, that their senator was taking orders from New York City? Do they realize that he was in the employ of a subsidiary of the Power Trust and that his pockets were lined with money to pay his expenses in their own village election?

Quoting further:

I hope my work during the past session was satisfactory to your company—

Imagine a Senator of the United States, for instance, writing to this corporation in New York and saying:

I hope my service here in the Senate, representing a sovereign State, has been satisfactory to your company.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of this editorial be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The remainder of the editorial is as follows:

"I hope my work during the past session was satisfactory to your company, not so much for the new legislation enacted but from the fact that many detrimental bills which were introduced we were able to kill in my committee."

In another letter addressed to C. A. Greenidge, care of the J. G. White Management Corporation, of New York City, one of the operating companies for the Associated Gas & Electric Co. in its up-State power plants, the same senator, referring to certain bills in the New York Senate, said:

"After you have examined them, and if you feel that they should be held up in the senate, you had better call me on the phone at Chateaugay (the senator's home) either Friday or Saturday."

Little wonder that the demand is now heard for a formal investigation by a committee of the legislature.

One of the senator's colleagues demands the institution of impeachment proceedings.

Of course, there should be an investigation of the alliance between the power interests and their obedient tools in the legislature's membership. Its existence is not open to doubt.

The reality of such an alliance has been repeatedly charged. Three months ago, in a brave and sensational speech at Utica, the Republican State chairman, W. Kingsland Macy, called upon the Republican members of the assembly to break away from this alliance and to "come clean" as sincere representatives of the people and the public interest.

There was some insincere splutter by Old Guard Republicans about bringing Mr. Macy before the assembly to substantiate his charges. There was a move, which was transparently insincere, for a perfunctory and whitewashing investigation.

The public easily saw through it and recognized that it was a mere gesture. So did Chairman Macy, who said the only investigation he would countenance would be a genuine investigation by a duly appointed legislative committee, with power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence.

By one of those singular "breaks" of good fortune which revive confidence in the truth—confidence that truth is not without powerful, although unseen, allies—these letters now reach the light of day.

They supply chapter and verse—compelling reason for at last a genuine and effective exposure of the whole mess.

Such an investigation cannot be avoided.

The disclosures are peculiarly timely in connection with Governor Lehman's gallant fight for justice to the consumer and ratepayer, so long helpless in the combined grip of the utility companies and their subservient creatures in the legislature.

No longer can silence keep mum! No longer can guilt sit tight! The tactics of evasion and "the huddle" have broken down. The case is now wide open!

Here at last are facts—facts to begin with, facts to go on with, facts which puncture the hollow disclaimers with which the Power Trust has met accusations in the past—accusations which were true, but not specific.

Let the Governor and the honest members of the New York Legislature, whether Republican or Democratic, now put their hand to the plow and make the furrow straight and deep.

The revelations in these letters constitute a great "break" for the people and the public interest—throughout the country and in every part of it.

The sinister alliance between power and politics—electric power and polluted politics—reaches into every State in the Union.

In every community its baleful effects are felt!

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let us hurriedly go down to Tennessee and see what was going on there about the time these things were going on in New York.

About 75 or 100 miles from Memphis, Tenn., is the city of Paris, a town of between five and ten thousand population, I believe. A little nearer to Memphis is a city called McKenzie, smaller than Paris. These cities were supplied with electricity by their own municipal governments. About 1928, 1929, or 1930 the Power Trust undertook to get control of these city-managed plants. Here is a letter taken from the investigation of the Federal Trade Commission. If you go there and desire to find it, it is exhibit no. 5772. It is written to Mr. Magee. He is the same man to whom Senator Thayer wrote. He is the same man who was operating up in northern New York in a village election, and about the same time was operating down in Paris, Tenn. This letter was written by Mr. Fitch. It reads as follows:

PARIS, TENN., May 15, 1929.

Mr. S. J. MAGEE,
New York:

There is beginning to crystallize at Paris a movement to compromise our difficulties with the city. Under the lease contract, the ultimate price which the city would have received at the time of the deeding of the property to us, and the payment of the $45,000 [was] the sum of $704,500.

In the political mix-up, Jim Porter, the present owner of the opposition ice plant, is a dominant factor in the new council.

Just grasp that. Down in Paris, Tenn., Jim Porter, who was in the ice business, was a member of the city council; and Jim Porter was not friendly. He was not satisfied with what the city was getting out of this sale. He wanted to get more. Notice, now, how the Power Trust undertook to get Jim Porter:

We have set up a very severe ice competition with his property and he is beginning to squeal.

The great New York corporation known as the "Associated Gas & Electric Co.", which the Federal Trade Commission are investigating, of which Mr. Magee is the vice president, went down into Paris, Tenn., where they were trying to get the local plant, and there was an unfriendly man on the council, and they proceeded to get that man. How? They bought out the opposing ice-dealer's business, and they went into the ice business, in the name of somebody else, of course, but they bought the other ice business, and they put the price of ice down so low that this man, Jim Porter, could not live. They were selling ice below cost. They sold it, I understand, as low as 10 cents a hundred pounds to put Jim Porter out of business, because Jim Porter was standing for a larger sum of money to come to the municipality from the Power Trust; and, as they said here—this letter was written to the vice president of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. in New York City—

In the political mix-up, Jim Porter, the present owner of the opposition ice plant, is a dominant factor in the new council. We have set up a very severe ice competition with his property and he is beginning to squeal. He is now anxious that the council effect a compromise of the matter and suggests that the city ought to receive about $600,000 for the property. This information comes—

Now, listen to this. See the connection of these people—

This information comes from the superintendent of the L. & N. Railroad Co.—

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.—

Memphis, a former citizen of Paris, and who was helpful to us in securing the original contract. He also secured for us the power contract with the shops at Paris, and is otherwise very friendly.

That shows the connection between great corporations. The superintendent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. gave this information, which was passed on to the vice president of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. of New York City.

It does seem to me, Mr. President, that this ought to bring the blush of shame to an American's face. Here was a great railroad company, which ought to be outside this contest, ought to have nothing to do with it, ought to have no interest in it. We find from the evidence, however, that there was some coordination between the Power Trust and the railroad company. The general superintendent gave this information, and, as they said—

He was very helpful to us.

That means to the Power Trust—

He was instrumental in getting us the power contract with the shops at Paris, and is otherwise very friendly.

What kind of a government is it in which railroads and Power Trust officials can combine in this way to help each other out of difficulties, to the detriment of the common people of the United States? What does it mean when these high officials undertake to charge the toilers of America an exorbitant price for gas and electricity because it is necessary to use the money in making the various combinations and buying out and driving Government and State officials into doing their bidding? Is it not a sad commentary that there should be a general tendency on the part of these great institutions to help each other out of dishonorable, disreputable, and dishonest difficulties?

The writer of the letter goes on:

The real seat of the trouble at Paris lies in the lease contract, which was so complicated the ordinary citizen could not understand it; and there was a growing belief that in some way not explicable the city would finally get a sum considerably less than $400,000 for its property.

I feel we will finally make some settlement with the city that will even be better than the present contract.

And there is not any doubt that they would have done so if they could have kept on buying city officials, as I shall show later on they did in order to get the contract in the first place. I shall show that by the judge himself, who said this contract evidently was purposely made so that no ordinary citizen could understand its intricacies and its technicalities.

Yours very truly,

H. D. FITCH.

He is the chairman of the local subsidiary in Paris, or was at that time.

The facts of the case at Paris are that after the officials of the city of Paris had sold the municipal light plant to the Power Trust, and after the trust had been operating it for sometime, after new officials had been elected, the people of the city discovered that their officials had been bribed, and they commenced an action in the State court to set aside the sale on the ground that it was brought about by fraud. Immediately that case was taken into the Federal court. If the Johnson bill as it passed the Senate, and as it is now pending in the House of Representatives, had been on the statute books when this occurred, they could not have taken the case into the Federal court. They would have been compelled to stay in the State courts of Tennessee. But this corporation was a nonresident defendant; it was not incorporated in the State of Tennessee; hence, under the law as it stands now, and as it stood then, they immediately took the case away from the State court and went into the Federal court.

The case was tried in the Federal court before the United States district judge, Judge Anderson. I have in my hand his decision. The whole of the decision is interesting reading, but I shall read only some parts of it. In explaining the suit, in the beginning of his decision, he said:

This is a suit removed from the chancery court of Henry County, Tenn. The complainant is the city of Paris, a municipal corporation of Tennessee. The respondent is a corporation chartered by another State, and the amount involved exceeds $3,000, exclusive of costs and interests.

According to the law, under that statement of facts, the Federal court would have jurisdiction, and in this kind of a case, under the same state of facts, if the House will pass the Johnson bill as we passed it, it would not have jurisdiction.

The judge said further on:

The contract was accepted by the officials of the defendant January 19, 1926, and the physical property turned over to it.

The judge in his decision quotes a good deal of the testimony, upon some of which he bases the conclusions which I shall read.

This contract was negotiated by Byrd. The defense claimed in the suit that he had no relation to the power company. The judge found he did have, and that they furnished the money for the bribery. Byrd was represented by an attorney by the name of Rankin. It will be noticed as we go on that some of the testimony relates to McKenzie. That is another city in Tennessee, between Paris and Memphis, which the same power company took over through the instrumentality of the same man, Byrd. It will be explained as the testimony is developed.

After giving considerable of the testimony the judge quotes as follows:

Q. How much did he say that he gave Mr. Dunlap?

Let me here digress and say that Dunlap was the man who put over the McKenzie job and not the Paris job. He comes into the evidence in the Paris case only incidentally. He got $2,500 for putting over that job after another man had tried but failed.

Q. How much did he say that he gave Mr. Dunlap?

Mr. PORTER. Now, if Your Honor please, I would like to state that just as he put it.

The COURT. That is the only thing you can do.

A. He told me Mr. Dunlap was paid $2,500 and that that payment had nothing whatever to do with the deal at Paris. That was in connection with the deal at McKenzie.

Q. Did he state what services Mr. Dunlap rendered at McKenzie, Tenn.?—A. No further than this. He stated to me that he had tried to put over a deal for the water and light property at McKenzie, and the way he expressed it, "it would not stick", and that Mr. Dunlap later went on the job and put it through.

The man testifying is Byrd.

Q. And that he got $2,500 for that?—A. Yes, sir; that is what I understood.

Q. How much did he say Mr. Fryer got?

Let me explain to the Senate that Mr. Fryer was the attorney of the city of Paris, their regular attorney. They paid him $1,200 a year to act as their attorney, and he was the man who, the judge said in his decision, was bribed. So he is talking Paris now.

Q. How much did he say Mr. Fryer got?—A. He said his information from Mr. Rankin was $2,000. He told me he put that much in Rankin's hands. I think Rankin was the one.

That is the $2,000 which the judge afterward found, not only from this evidence but a great deal of other evidence, was paid to Fryer. In fact, it was undisputed. It is a peculiar thing in this case that even the defense admits that they paid to this man Fryer $2,000. They said there was nothing wrong about that, even if he was the attorney for the other side.

I read further:

Q. How much did he say Mr. Hogan received?—A. He told me he put between seven and eight hundred dollars in the hands of another party, who paid it to Mr. Hogan.

Q. Mr. Hogan, I believe, is the foreman of the L. & W. shops at Paris?

It was necessary to buy Mr. Hogan, or important, at least, to buy Mr. Hogan, because he was foreman of a lot of men who worked in the shops, and this man says:

A. He told me he put between seven and eight hundred dollars in the hands of another party, who paid it to Mr. Hogan.

Q. Mr. Hogan, I believe, is the foreman of the L. & W. shops at Paris?

That means the Louisville & Nashville shops, the superintendent of which gave the information to the man who wrote the letter which I have already read.

Q. Mr. Hogan, I believe, is the foreman of the L. & W. shops at Paris?—A. Master mechanic.

Q. Do you know whether or not more members of the legislative council work under Mr. Hogan?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Name the ones who are employed under him.—A. R. E. Hancock and Mr. J. P. Gorman.

Q. How did he say that this transaction with Mr. Hogan took place? Did he say that payment was in cash or how?—A. I don't recall whether he said it was cash or not. He told me there was a man with him that had formerly been in the employ of Mr. Hogan over there, and that he gave this money to Mr. Hogan to be used to take up a note of some kind. I don't know whose note it was or anything about it.

Q. Did he say anything about the note being worthless?—A. Yes, sir; he expressed the opinion that the note was of no value.

Q. Did he make any further statements to you at the time?—A. We had quite a long conversation there, but that is about all I can recall that came up about this matter.

Then the judge who said in his opinion:

The record shows that Mr. Fitch, the president of the defendant, visited Paris in October 1925 and inspected the physical properties of the Paris Light & Water Plant. He denies this in his testimony in the present suit, but he so testified in the previous suit between the city and the defendant.

There was another lawsuit, in which this man testified also, and he testified one way in one suit and the other way in the other suit. So the judge drew his own conclusion as to which statement was true.

The judge said further on:

Before the contract was adopted by the city council on the evening of the vote, Byrd either read the whole contract, or the salient parts, to Fitch over the telephone.

This becomes important to show that Byrd was actually the agent of the defendant, and on the night when the town board put that matter across Byrd read the proposed contract over the long-distance telephone to Mr. Fitch, the president of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., who was at New York City.

The judge said further:

The dominant influence for the adoption of the contract in Paris, the record discloses, was J. H. Dunlap. Dunlap largely drew the contract, visited Fitch—

That is, the president of the power company—at Bowling Green, and went over all the details and discussed its terms. The court gathers that Mr. Dunlap was the power behind the throne under the Arnett administration.

Arnett was the chairman of the board at Paris.

After the deal was closed Mr. Dunlap received a fee of $2,500 from the defendant for acting as agent for it in the purchase of the power plant at McKenzie.

So the court draws the conclusion that he was, as the court says was disclosed from the evidence offered, the power behind the throne. The court further says:

Arnett, the mayor, received a job from the Paris plant, which he held for some 9 months. These are matters which of themselves are perhaps of no great weight, but have some significance when taken into consideration with the corruption of Fryer, the city attorney, and other indicia of improper influence.

I might say that the evidence discloses that in the Paris case Mr. Byrd or Mr. Rankin—I have forgotten which—made a contribution to the building of a church. A church was being built in that town at that time, and he gave a note for $500 toward the building of it. He did not live there. He had no interest in the churches there. There was no reason why he should contribute, but he gave a note for $500 to be paid in case the deal went through, and if the deal did not go through the note was not to be paid. That incident goes to show how this "religious" power company, anxious to build churches all over the United States, was anxious to make a contribution to a church in Paris, Tenn., if the deal went through, and no contribution if the deal did not go through.

I will read further from the statement of the judge:

The contract itself is misleading to an ordinary citizen. In it the defendant appears, at first glance, to pay an annual rental of $30,000. But on examination this is offset by the amount of the interest on the outstanding bonds and also by the assumption of the city of taxes on the plant. Thus the consideration is really the assumption by the defendant of $355,000 outstanding bonds falling due over a period of 30 years and the payment of $45,000 in 30 years when the property is transferred. On a basis of present worth, of course, these amounts are far below their face. The property itself, the record discloses, is worth at least $500,000.

So, after all, they were getting something for very much less than it was worth; they were getting it for $100,000, or perhaps $200,000 less, or even more than that, below the value of the property at the lowest valuation.

This court finds no laches on the part of the complainant. As promptly as possible after the discovery of the transaction with City Attorney Fryer this suit was begun. The record discloses clearly that the city council was not informed of this arrangement for an inconsistent fee to Fryer. It is true Rankin testifies that the proposition to Fryer was based on knowledge and acquiescence on the part of the mayor and council, but Rankin makes no claim that this acquiescence was obtained. That part of Rankin's testimony bears all the earmarks of afterthought. Arnett, the mayor, says he knew of the transaction and expressed approval of it. If Arnett is telling the truth, which the court doubts, he certainly did not communicate this remarkable transaction to the council.

In no sense is the defendant in the attitude of an innocent third party and purchaser for value. The defendant was the principal in this shady transaction and Byrd was clearly its agent. His agency is not even cleverly concealed.

The question of the power of the city in this case to lease or sell its municipal plant is not necessary to discuss or determine, in view of the conclusion of the court that this transaction is a typical case of a contract based on an inadequate consideration and obtained by fraud.

The company, did, however, on taking control of the property, expend considerable money in improvements. It installed an alternating-current system, put up new poles, rewired the city and outskirts, and extended the service. For this, if the contract is canceled, the defendant should be reimbursed. The amount can easily be ascertained by a reference.

The suit now pending between the city of Paris and the defendant in the State courts—

There was the other suit which I mentioned—should be dismissed by the city. There is no inconsistency in the position of the city for the reason that the previous suit developed the facts on which the suit for the cancelation of the contract is based.

I might say the other suit was in relation to the contract in question. It was commenced before the city had knowledge of the fraud. There was a misunderstanding in the construction of the contract and the city sued the defendant. The suit was with respect to some water fountains. It had nothing whatever to do with the case we are discussing. In the case that had been tried the fact of the bribing of the public officials had been brought out, and when that was brought out, suit was commenced to cancel the contract.

This court finds—

Here are the findings of the court that tried the case—

First. That Byrd was the agent of defendant.

Second. That the contract was obtained by the bribery of Fryer, city attorney, of Paris, Tenn., through the agency of Byrd and Rankin, his attorney, the means therefor being provided by the defendant—

That is, the power company—and by other corrupt and unethical practices.

Third. That the consideration for the lease and sale contract was inadequate.

Fourth. That the contract should be set aside and canceled, and the property involved returned to the complainant herein, on the reimbursement to defendant of the amounts spent in improvements and the repayment to the defendant of the $25,000 spent by it in taking up bonds of the city.

Let a decree in accordance with the above be drawn and entered.

H. B. ANDERSON,
United States District Judge.

Mr. President, I know power companies will say that case was appealed by the power company. It was appealed and reversed. After the contract was made, and before the corrupt acts were discovered, the Legislature of Tennessee passed an act validating the contract; not only this contract but several others of a shady kind. That action of the legislature was one reason why the case was reversed. Another reason was that when the case came on for trial, citizens, taxpayers of the city of Paris, were taken in as parties plaintiff. The lower court held that as to the defendant the district court did not have jurisdiction. Whatever wrong there was in the case had been forgiven, anyway, by the action of the Tennessee Legislature.

Mr. President, that causes me to wonder. Why did this power company, if it had an honest, valid contract, go to the Legislature of the State of Tennessee and get the legislature to pass an act to validate the contract? The legislature validated several contracts, of which this was one. I wonder if the power company had in the Legislature of the State of Tennessee some attorneys planted, like they did in the State of New York, as disclosed by the letters of State Senator Thayer. I wonder if the power company was able to get this law through the Legislature of the State of Tennessee by honest means. I wonder if honest men in that legislature were not deceived as to the facts in the case. I wonder also why it should be necessary to have the State legislature validate the act if the act was all right within itself.

Anyway the circuit court of appeals reversed the decision. They did mention the fact of the bribing of Fryer, but they said he was only the attorney; he did not have a vote anyway; and they did not seem to think his actions were very bad. I believe every honest individual who knows anything about the case will agree with Judge Anderson that the buying of the attorney for $2,000—he was getting $1,200 from the city—should in itself justify the setting aside of any contract that he made or that he advised. It is true he did not have a vote, he was not a member, but he was there when the act was passed. The evidence shows indisputably that he advised its passage.

So I simply want to call attention, as we are going along, to the fact that the Power Trust is not acting in New York alone. When we have read the letters of Senator Thayer and get an idea of what is going on in the New York Legislature, let us go down to Tennessee, and go to Paris, and go to McKenzie and see where the same thing was openly attempted, and where it was found by the judge that Mr. Fryer, the city attorney, was bribed by the payment of $2,000 of Power Trust money.

Incidentally it comes out that the same people paid Dunlap, whom the judge says was the power behind the throne in McKenzie, $2,500 for putting through the bill. So New York must not boast of being the only State where the Power Trust is thus active and where citizens may obtain money from it. The evidence shows that in one of these cases, either that of Dunlap or Fryer, Byrd had in his possession from the Power Trust $3,500 with which to bribe attorneys, and it only cost him $2,000 to do it. I have been wondering ever since I read it what Byrd did with the other $1,500. I have been wondering whether the attorney who took a bribe of $2,000 when he might just as well have had $3,500 could not sue the power company and get the balance of his bribery fee.

Let us take another view of the activities of these power interests. The power companies of which I have been speaking are not part of the Insull group, but I want to show the Senate that it is just the same as though they were. I want to show the Senate how cleverly these companies are deceiving the people in order to make them believe that there is some competition between the Insull group and the Byllesby group and the Stone & Webster group and the Associated Gas & Electric group. Here [exhibiting] is a letter which the Federal Trade Commission secured from their files. If Senators themselves would like to look it up, they will find it as exhibit 5715 in the Federal Trade Commission's investigation. It is a letter written September 12, 1930. It is addressed to Martin J. Insull Utilities Co. The other Insull—Samuel Insull—according to what the morning newspapers say, is now "frying" in Greece, but still is not in Greece. This letter is to his brother, who is now in Chicago, having been induced or compelled to return from Canada back to Chicago to answer some court charges after a legal fight lasting some 17 months in which the United States was trying to have him come back. Finally he came back, and he is there now.

Mr. MARTIN J. INSULL,
Middle West Utilities Co., 20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR MR. INSULL: Our client—

This letter was written by the attorney for the Associated Gas & Electric Co.—

Our client, the Associated Gas & Electric Co., thought so favorably of your recent statement made at the Institute for Public Affairs at Charlottesville, Va., that we had excerpts from it, as they appeared in the Wall Street Journal, inserted as an advertisement in newspapers published in the territory served by the properties of this company.

This statement should be of much value to the industry as a whole. It is, I believe, the best one that I have seen setting forth the functions of the utility holding company—

Now bear that in mind; he is defending the holding companies, and he has obtained the idea from Mr. Insull—in promoting the utility industry and increasing and improving service to the public.

Believing that it was desirable to give it wider distribution, we have taken the liberty of reproducing it in the local territory served by the Associated System companies without taking it up specifically with you.

For the obvious reason of avoiding criticism on the part of the stockholders of the company, many of whom still think—

Listen to this—many of whom still think that there is strong rivalry between utility companies.

Let me read it again:

For the obvious reason of avoiding criticism on the part of the stockholders of the company, many of whom still think there is strong rivalry between utility companies, it was thought necessary to omit mentioning your name.

Insull represents one bunch of thieves and the writer of this letter represents another bunch of thieves, and their stockholders, who are innocent, whose money they are using and whose money Insull squandered, were laboring under the terrible delusion that there was some rivalry between Insull and the Associated Gas & Electric Co.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. A great many of us are wondering why it would seem necessary to have a code of fair competition between electric companies when there is not any competition anywhere in the United States between those outfits. I wonder if the Senator had thought of the rather amusing spectacle of a code of competition being organized under the N.R.A. between outfits of that character?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care what kind of a code these companies have; but the only thing that interested me when they were talking about the code was that they ought to leave out of that group all of the municipally and publicly owned corporations that are producing and selling electricity.

Mr. BONE. I think, of their own volition, they are smart enough to stay out.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. He did not want to use Insull's name because it might spoil the beautiful illusion their innocent stockholders had that after all there was competition between these great men. So he said—

It was thought necessary to omit mentioning your name. Stockholders might regard it as advertising a rival company at their expense. Some stockholders criticize any expenditures for advertising. These, however, are relatively few, so that they can be ignored. We want, therefore, all expenditures for advertising as free from criticism by stockholders as possible, particularly in view of the depression in the prices of stocks, which makes them unusually sensitive.

Local publication of this advertisement has elicited considerable favorable comment and hence we have felt that a wider publication of it would be desirable. Before doing so I would like, however, as a matter of courtesy, to secure your permission. I am enclosing a copy of the advertisement from one of the local newspapers in which it appeared.

We should like to publish this advertisement in the newspapers of the larger cities in which we customarily insert advertisements for the Associated Gas & Electric System. I shall greatly appreciate your permission to do so.

Yours very truly.

The letter is signed by Daniel Starck, who was the attorney for the company.

I thought I had the answer here, but I do not seem to have it. It is sufficient, however, to say, Mr. President, that Mr. Insull's attorney wrote and said that he had submitted the letter and the request to Mr. Insull and Mr. Insull had consented to have the Associated Gas & Electric Co. use the advertisement as theirs and not use his name.

I presume now, since Mr. Insull's experience in Canada and his brother's experience over in Greece and on the Mediterranean, that they would consider it a great honor to have his name attached to it. However, I want to call attention to this Insull address to which reference was made in the letter. It is quite a long address and very interesting reading on the subject of holding companies. Here is the conclusion of it. Mr. Insull says:

Regulation of the operating company with freedom of the holding company is to the best interest of the public.

Get that—regulate the operating company, that is the company that makes the "juice", but let the holding companies, which are piled one on top of the other almost without limit, be free of regulation. That is Insull's doctrine, and that is the doctrine that has brought down to despair and ruin millions of honest investors in the Insull properties. That was the doctrine the Associated Gas & Electric Co. wanted to use as an advertisement, but they did not want to use Insull's name, and he consented that they should use it without his name. They did use it, and this is part of it:

Regulation of the operating company with freedom of the holding company is to the best interest of the public. The public is thus protected against monopoly—

I can imagine how they laughed in their sleeves when they read that—and has the advantage of the initiative and enterprise that financially strong private business brings to institutions where its money is invested.

Regulate the operating company, but do not touch the holding company. That is what has brought ruin and destruction all over the United States to millions of honest investors, including, Mr. President, "widows and orphans."

While I think of it, there is one thing that escaped me, and I want to recur to it for just a moment. It has to do with Tennessee. I hold in my hand exhibit 5775 from the Federal Trade Commission's investigation. It is a report from their examiner on the McKenzie, Tenn., investigation. It repeats the evidence I have already read—and I will not read it again—about Dunlap getting $2,500 for putting that deal through, but the man who makes the report says:

When examining the accounts of the Kentucky-Tennessee Light & Power Co.—

That is a subsidiary in this case—

I found that there was an item of $2,000 paid to R. L. Dunlap—

There is confusion there. The evidence shows he got $2,500, but the books show the company only paid him $2,000.

When examining the accounts of the Kentucky-Tennessee Light & Power Co. I found that there was an item of $2,000 paid to R. L. Dunlap, which has been carried in suspense and was transferred to fixed capital in July 1926 "on McKenzie purchase."

There is $2,000 that the people of McKenzie now have in the capitalization of the company, $2,000 transferred to "fixed capital", $2,000 of bribery money that became a part of the valuation of the property upon which the people of McKenzie will be paying a return throughout all time. It is such "investments" that injure not only the present generation but generations that are yet unborn. "Fixed capital", $2,000 of which is admitted in the report to be bribe money!

At Conowingo, not far from Washington, a lot of neckties were capitalized, but that is not so bad as bribery. Here a man was bought, and I suppose in the Paris case the same thing was done. The city attorney was being paid by the other side, and the Power Trust paid him, too. They paid him $2,000, and if they followed the same course they charged that to "fixed charges" and made it a part of the capital upon which they will have a right to receive a reasonable return as long as time lasts. That is one of the great evils of the institution.

Mr. President, if the Johnson bill, which has passed the Senate, should pass the House of Representatives, where it is now pending, what happened in McKenzie, Tenn., and what happened in Paris, Tenn., could not again happen. It would be necessary for the courts of Tennessee to pass on the matter and the Federal courts would have no jurisdiction whatever.

But it is not only in Tennessee, Kentucky, and New York that such things are happening. In Texas the people have had the same experiences. I have here a dispatch, and I know nothing about it except that the dispatch itself is published in a newspaper. The dispatch reads:

While some courts have taken a cue from the new deal and rendered decisions in line with human rights, a Federal judge of the northwest Texas district still thinks in the old terms.

Recently he granted a permanent injunction to the Community Light & Power Co. restraining the city of Plainview from going ahead with the construction of its own electric light and power plant.

There is the case of a city which decides it wants to build its own electric light and power plant, but the Federal judge intervenes and takes jurisdiction. I presume he has jurisdiction because the plaintiff is a nonresident of the State of Texas. If that be so, the passage of the Johnson bill through the House of Representatives would remedy the situation.

A Federal judge issues a permanent injunction and says, in effect: "You shall not build a municipal power plant to make your own electricity, because here is a company known as the 'Community Light & Power Co.' which has issued bonds and is prepared to do business of that kind, and if you fool cities go into the business yourselves, what will become of the bonds the power company has issued?"

The newspaper item to which I have referred continues:

The judge ruled that inasmuch as the power company was the holder of $8,000,000 of bonds of the Texas Utilities Co., serving 52 South Plains towns, its property rights would be infringed by the building of the Plainview municipal plant and that it should not build the plant.

In other words, if I understand the situation correctly, here is a power company operating in 52 different municipalities. In that vicinity is a municipality which is desirous of building a municipal plant. The Federal judge says, "You cannot do that because the private company which is supplying these 52 cities and towns and villages will be bankrupted if you go into that kind of business, and the poor bondholders, the "widows and orphans", will lose their investment in private companies", as they have done in most of the Insull companies.

The disclosures that have been coming out from day to day before the Federal Trade Commission are not confined to New York, Texas, Kentucky, and Mississippi. Following right on the heels of this case comes Oklahoma, where they have a somewhat similar situation. In the case of Oklahoma an attorney named Campbell Russell was fighting to cut the rates charged by the Byllesby subsidiary serving Oklahoma City, according to letters unearthed by the Federal Trade Commission. They came from the Insull files. The Insull Co. put him on its pay rolls at $5,000 a year while the Byllesby interests, the letter said, agreed to pay three fourths of his salary. That is another case where the great Power Trust representatives are making the people believe they are in competition, when there is no such thing as competition.

Letters have been brought to light revealing the Oklahoma situation. They were fished out of the files of an Insull company's office in a cellar in Oklahoma City since the Insull crash. The man who fished them out was McDermott, one of the examiners and investigators of the Federal Trade Commission. The article proceeds:

Earl R. Ernsberger, president and general manager of the Insull property, Southwestern Light & Power Co., wrote on January 17, 1927, to W. C. Sharp, of Chicago, an operating vice president of Insull's Middle West Utilities Co. that Russell had been hired.

The letter said:

"You will recall that I wrote you and also talked with you about the possibility that I should be able to arrange for the employment of Campbell Russell by the utilities association, thereby stopping the prosecution of the suit for reduction of rates against the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. in Oklahoma City before the Corporation Commission.

"I had several conferences with Mr. Russell and he was so thoroughly sold on the Southwestern Light & Power Co., its policies and reputation, that he insisted that he would rather go to work for them. Therefore I have hired him.

"His salary will be $5,000 per year—the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. has agreed to pay three fourths of his salary. I have arranged also with the Oklahoma Utilities Association that Mr. Russell be transferred to that association in the next 3 or 4 months.

"I think it best to handle it as we are for the reason that direct connection with the association at this time might injure the utilities' standing with the legislature that is now in session."

I hope all Senators get that point. Mr. Ernsberger hired this attorney for $5,000 a year, but he had him transferred temporarily to some other company and not to the company that hired him for fear publicity of that fact might injure the standing of the power company with the legislature of Oklahoma, which was then in session, and would cause the legislature to reach the conclusion that the power company had bribed this attorney, who theretofore had been before the legislature fighting for the reduction of the rates of these corporations.

The letter says further:

"You may know that we are working very hard to prevent the repeal of House bill 4.

"I think we have performed a mighty good service in getting Mr. Russell out of the work he has been doing, for that (the) reason that it would have spread from the O. G. & E. case in Oklahoma City"—

That is the case of the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co.—

"to other parts of the State at sometime in the early future."

Now let us see what this other company replied. Let us see what Mr. Insull's company said to that. Here is the reply. The first letter was directed to Mr. Sharp, and the reply came from Mr. Sharp, the vice president of Insull's company. He said:

I showed your letter of January 17 to Mr. Insull and he was very much pleased with the arrangement that has been made, but suggested that perhaps we were asking the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. to bear too much of the burden.

He was quite liberal—quite liberal.

I told him I would take this matter up with you and see how you felt about it. He did not feel that our other companies in Oklahoma should share in this expense for obvious reasons.

Mr. President, again that goes to show that while these corporations pretend to the people that they are in competition with one another, behind the scenes they are making these arrangements, bribing public officials, hiring lawyers who have been on one side of a case to take up the other side, deceiving the people as to apparent competition when there actually is none, working together hand in glove, to the deception even of their own stockholders. There is nothing honest, nothing ethical, nothing fair, nothing honorable about their conduct.

Up in New York the condition is just the same. Down in Kentucky and Tennessee the corporations are doing the same thing. Down in Oklahoma they are doing the same thing, and down in Texas the same thing, and the evidence of the past shows that in the past they have done the same thing. One or two or three of these great corporations have controlled the legislatures of dozens of States.

I am wondering, now that we have read the letters of this State senator of New York, if the people of the country are not wondering whether these corporations do not have their keymen planted in every legislature in the United States. I am wondering if the people are not wondering whether some of their keymen are not planted in the Congress of the United States. I am wondering what legislative body is free from their influence. I am wondering where their dishonor will end. I am wondering if their dishonorable and disreputable practices can be exaggerated, or if they can be properly described in the English language.

It seems to me, go where we will, today or yesterday, or at any time, that we will find the same thing, the same men hesitating at nothing. They hire men who are professors in colleges. They hire lawyers who represent cities to take their cases. They hire legislators who are chairmen of committees. They hire everybody and anybody who in any way can do anything to influence and deceive the people as to the real purposes of their organizations.

As these letters show, these concerns seek to deceive even their own stockholders. The Associated Gas & Electric Co. asked Mr. Insull to let them publish his statement as an advertisement without using his name, because they feared that the use of his name might lead to the conclusion that there was some combination between these two great companies. If they omitted his name and published the statement as their own, there would not be anything of the kind. These concerns have advised the people that we should let holding companies alone; that we should not interfere with these great institutions that have covered the United States like a blanket from one end to the other. They have accomplished that. Some of their houses have fallen down. Insull has made a failure. He is trying to escape the clutches of the law of the very country under whose laws he built up a mighty empire of deception and deceit. He is trying now to avoid just punishment for his sins. He is using money, undoubtedly, to bribe foreign officials, and to charter steamers, and to hire lawyers in London and New York and all over the world—money that was contributed by pennies by the student who uses electric light, by the washerwoman who uses electricity to operate her machine. He has deceived the American people. He got their hard-earned cash, and now he is defying the laws of his country. He is an outcast. He is like Benedict Arnold of old in that he has no country. He is a man without a country, trying to escape just retribution.

I have no patience with the man or the woman who writes continually, as they do, to Members of the Senate and says, "Do not hurt these investments. I have invested my all in some utility company." It may be an Insull company, where everything is gone. It may be one of these other companies that ought to go. It may be one of these companies most of whose capitalization is "water." The records of the Federal Trade Commission will show that since they have been investigating—and they are not through yet—they have found over $1,000,000,000 of "water" that has been poured into the capitalization of these electric companies.

How long will the American people continue to stand for this deception? How long will we continue to be deceived? How long will we continue to permit the defeat of bills for the regulation of these great institutions that are deceiving the people? How long will it be before we will confine them to one court instead of two courts? How long will it be before the American people will wake up and demand that their Senators and their Representatives pass laws that will make it impossible to give to these companies, in the arena of our courts, a favored position? How long will it be before we can drive them to the point where they will get justice and nothing more? God knows it is justice they fear. It is justice from which they are trying to flee, as Insull today is trying to flee from the officials of his own country.

THE GERMAN DEBT

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am sure the Senate always finds entertainment and instruction in any address delivered by the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. In the past few moments he has illumined the Senate with a revival of knowledge of the manner in which legislation in different parts of our country has been either influenced by power or controlled by corruption.

My object in rising at this time is not to address myself to that subject; but I desire to pay the Senator from Nebraska the tribute of assuring him that he does a service to the country when he constantly revives the intelligence as well as the vigilance of America to confront these great wrongs, and prepare to overthrow them or to be overthrown by them.

Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of my eminent colleagues to a statement cabled abroad as it came from the State Department this morning and Saturday, being the response of the Secretary of State, the Honorable Cordell Hull, in reply to solicitation which came in the form of an official letter from the financial section of the political department of Germany.

It appears from the public records—as to which I have some other information besides merely that which the press affords—that Germany tendered to our Government a small sum upon a debt that is overdue, and assumed to tender this sum upon the theory that it could be accepted as a compromise by the Secretary of State as our officer of foreign affairs, and that in the acceptance of the sum tendered the debt or obligation of Germany could be wiped out as a subject foreclosed by arrangements between the Secretary of State acting for the United States of America and the fiscal officer who served as the representative of Germany.

In the response by our Secretary of State he makes it very clear that it is not in the power of the executive department to make any compromise touching the debts of the foreign countries due to the United States, and I particularly am glad to see my eminent friend the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] in the Chamber, knowing his solicitude in this matter, so that I may call his attention to the fact that in this communication of the Secretary of State is the official declaration that it is only by Congress that an adjustment, in the form of compromise or liquidation, can be made by this Government with any foreign government as to the debts of which we speak as the foreign debts.

Mr. President, I am moved to impose myself upon the Senate at this moment to invite to its attention the fact that the offer of Germany would never have been made to the United States of America in the manner as suggested had there not been read in the press the statement, cabled to the foreign land, that there was some movement afoot in America for the President of the United States to settle the debts between the United States and its foreign debtors through some power which the President himself had, or which it was assumed was to be vested in him by Congress.

I take it that these publications have been occasioned by the expressions here and there, sometimes by eminent Senators on this floor, and sometimes by public press, and sometimes by those who have been expressing a fear, that there was a move afoot to vest in the President of the United States the power to negotiate a compromise or a settlement of the foreign debts with our foreign debtors, as something of a consideration for these debtor countries yielding to the President his request for reciprocity in the form of some tariff concession, or as compensation for the surrendering by the foreign nations of their tariff policies which heretofore have reared barriers against American products.

Mr. President, I am wholly satisfied that there never has been, in the mind of the President, a purpose to submit to any foreign debtor a proposition of either limiting or canceling the debt owed the United States as a consideration or exchange for tariff privileges or trade treaties, as may be called for in the new process indicated in the bill tendered this morning by the eminent Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Senators may take from me the statement that I am speaking with some small authority when I say that the question of the foreign debts, their qualification in amount, the change in the contract of payment, the assumption of any cancelation, have never been at any time proposed by the Secretary of State to any country or by the President to the Secretary of State to be communicated to any country as a basis, in any form whatever, for exchange for economic privilege or tariff trade treaty.

I now add as a serious and purposed statement from my place as one of this honorable body, as a Senator of my country, and one of the voices of my distinguished State, that if any nation now a debtor to the United States of America is assuming that trade privileges or trade exchanges resting upon the basis of commercial reciprocity are going to be tendered in exchange for either qualification, limitation, or any form of cancelation, of the money debt due by such country to the United States, such an assumption on the part of that foreign country, be assured, is an illusion, without foundation, and serves merely to deceive itself.

The Congress of the United States sometime past voted an expression against the cancelation or limitation of this indebtedness after we had granted to these foreign debtors a very large sum off of their debt, either as interest which was due or as part of the principal that was yielded. That act of Congress is the sovereign expression of the people of the United States. It is voiced through their deputized agents. It is expressed on the part of both their licensed and their trusted agents in the legislative halls.

There has not been at any time any justification for the charge made in different quarters that it was the intention of the President or of the present administration to ignore that act of Congress, or to be indifferent, far less from being defiant, to its declaration.

If the Congress shall find it agreeable to give to the President of the United States some specific agency for the negotiation of some principle of commercial reciprocity, it will be based upon such return to the United States of offer or enjoyment of commercial privilege as will be assumed will equal that which we give, but under no circumstances will such be tendered as a consideration, nor would such be accepted in exchange for the violation of the act of Congress respecting these debts and the obligations put upon the debtors by the expression of Congress in its legislative enactment.

Mr. President, there is never a time, certainly there is not now, when it can be assumed that the people can be ignored, their voice and command wholly violated, by an Executive in power to whom no such privilege has been granted by the ballot box through the expressions of the people themselves. No President of the United States, in obedience to the Constitution and in compliance with his solemn oath, will be found violating the act of Congress that commands a duty respecting the debtors or ignoring, and certainly never treating with defiance, the legislative body.

If the time should ever come when any President would assume to set the example of dealing with a foreign country in defiance of an act of Congress or the will of the people, then that President would be violating his solemn oath. He would not only be disobeying the law, but he would approach the realm of what could be called "political treason." Such a thing could never be done by a man of such spirit as the present President, and would never have been attempted by any other President who has served in that honorable capacity in the lifetime of any Member of the present Congress.

Whatever may be said of Presidents respecting their differences on what we may call "politics", there has never been a man who held that high office, selected by the people of the United States, and serving under his solemn oath, who would have descended to actions such as it is being intimated here and there throughout the country it is the purpose or is to be the purpose of the present President of the United States to perform.

Mr. President and Senators, it is unfortunate that there should go forth a publication to the countries of the world that the Congress of the United States had lost confidence in the great Executive of any political party to such a degree that we were charging among ourselves as accusations that he was on the eve of taking to himself a dictatorial power, usurping the will of the people on the one hand and violating his solemn oath of duty on the other. It is that sort of thing that will bring to us the accusation, such as we have heard in general rumor, of the Government being despoiled by those who assume, under the name of communism or anarchy or any other name, to overturn the institutions of the United States.

There would be a great deal of foundation, my brother Senators—I might go further, and say justification—for any set of men to assume that they would be welcome to undertake the overturning of the institutions of our country, if there had ever been set the example of a President of the United States, without authority from the legislative body, assuming to deal with foreign nationalities in respect to their obligations to America, by either consenting to the qualifications or limitations of their obligations in return for the support of some political policy in behalf of that President, and that in disobedience to the laws of our land and in defiance of the will of its legislators.

Mr. President, there is no foundation—there has never been any—for any intimation that could inspire the fear that such action ever could have been taken by this President, surely, and it never could have been approved if taken by any President, because should such act ever be undertaken, this body would overturn it by an expression that would be constitutional on its part.

If there be abroad in the land of the debtor the idea that the President of the United States is about to move to canceling their debt, to qualifying their debt, to limiting their debt, as a consideration for the giving to America of some form of treaty or contract as to commerce and tariff, let that idea at once be abolished, let that delusion be thwarted promptly, and let that impression evaporate from the minds of those who are our debtors abroad. Let their eminent statesmen be convinced that no such treachery could live in the bosom of any American President, and no such supine cowardice could ever prevail in the legislative body as would allow such conduct by any President, whatever the political name he went by, or under whatever designation he assumed to act.

Therefore, Mr. President, at this particular moment I arose to express the fear that publications such as led Germany to assume that there was an authority already vested in our Secretary of State and in our President to ignore the act of Congress, to defy the will of the people, and take upon themselves, as an executive department, to adjust the foreign debts with our debtors, without respect to the popular will of the people, their wishes or their needs, are wholly without any foundation, should never have been sent abroad as an encouragement, and should never have been permitted to be distributed throughout America by the expression of of our public men, or by any other source, as an inducement to those lands abroad to assume that such favor would ever be advanced to them.

America stands on the Constitution as to her rights between herself and foreign governments. She stands upon her treaties of peace between herself and foreign nations. She stands upon the righteousness of her claim. She seeks to oppress none, but she will be oppressed by none willingly and will not accede to threats of others.

With the fulfillment of the obligation on the part of the foreign debtors and the complete faith on the part of the United States in the fulfillment of the act of Congress, we shall again enter into that happy state described in sacred Scripture, where all our ways shall be ways of pleasantness and all our paths shall be paths of peace.

I thank the Senate.

VETERANS' REGULATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 20, title I, of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933, I am transmitting herewith copies of Executive Orders No. 6661 (Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (d)) and No. 6662 (Veterans' Regulation No. 12 (a)), approved by me March 27, 1934.

These veterans' regulations amend Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (a), approved by me on June 6, 1933, and Veterans' Regulation No. 12, approved by me on March 31, 1933, and have been issued in accordance with the terms of title I, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government."

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 27, 1934.

STRENGTHENING OF PENAL LAWS—RECONSIDERATION

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, last Thursday the Senate passed unanimously and without opposition two bills on the calendar. One was Senate 2248; the other, Senate 2249. Representatives of the American Federation of Labor informed me this afternoon that both bills might be very discriminatory against labor in this country, and that they wanted to be heard respecting them. They said that labor had no opportunity to be heard before the committee which considered the measures. In order that they may have such an opportunity, Mr. President, I am entering a motion to consider both bills, if such a motion be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). The Chair is advised that the bills have already gone to the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In that event, Mr. President, I assume that a motion to reconsider could be entered, and I assume another motion would be necessary to recall the bills from the House, or request the House to send the bills back to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I inquire, What is the subject matter of the bills?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. One, Senate bill 2249, is known as the "telephone and telegraph bill." The other, Senate bill 2248, has to do with the protection of trade against interference by violence, threats, and so forth. I understand that labor's position in the matter is that labor might be prevented from protecting itself if the measures, as they are written, should be passed.

Labor wants the opportunity to be heard by the committee. Should the bills again be placed on the calendar, labor might be given the opportunity to be heard and to suggest amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am not sufficiently familiar with the bills referred to by number to attempt to pass judgment on the suggestion made by the Senator from Indiana, and I suggest that he let the matter go over until tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is perfectly agreeable to me, Mr. President. I shall be glad to have the leader of the majority examine the bills and study them, and have his cooperation if I can get it. What I am interested in—and I know that is true with respect to the Senator from Arkansas as well—is that all sides may have an opportunity to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion to return the bills will be postponed. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understand this is the last day for entering such a motion, and therefore I should like to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which each of the two bills I have mentioned was passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator may supply me privately with such information as he has concerning the proposal.

INCREASE IN VETERANS' ALLOWANCES AND CIVIL PAY SCALE

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I rise only to offer four exhibits from the contemporary press in respect to the problems which were canvassed by the Senate last week regarding veterans' allowances and the Government's civil pay scale. There was some discussion earlier in the day on the floor of the Senate about the effect of the action of the House and Senate in removing the inequities—some of them indefensibly brutal—which existed both in respect to pay scales and in respect to veterans' allowances. Democratic Senators testified to their belief that the President will not undertake to penalize those great groups among his own partisans who were unable to get the consent of their consciences to support his veto.

I desire to supplement that discussion, Mr. President, to the extent of offering a few encouraging and significant exhibits which shed new light on the whole proposition. There have been four very significant items in the contemporary press bearing upon this subject.

The first exhibit to which I desire to call attention is a quotation from the Associated Press upon yesterday, which, in discussing the Budget and deficit situation, says:

The effect of increased veterans' payments and increased Government employees' compensation, voted last week over President Roosevelt's veto, is comparatively negligible so far as this fiscal year is concerned.

I repeat the phrase "comparatively negligible." The country has been led to believe otherwise. It would be highly unfair to permit the impression to persist that the enormous Budgetary deficit, attributable to prodigal spendings in other directions, may be charged prejudicially against this act of simple congressional justice.

Secondly, it was urged upon us that special taxes would have to be provided in order to pay for this act of justice upon which the Congress insisted. I want to invite attention to a publication on Saturday carried over the wires of the Universal Service quoting Mr. Speaker RAINEY, the Democratic presiding officer of the House of Representatives, who visited the White House with Democratic Majority Leader BYRNS, of the other body, with the result that this news account is significantly headed. This quotation would appear to come from an authoritative source. The heading reads:

RAINEY spikes report of tax-increase plan. Says additional revenue not needed to meet pay bill.

So much for that tax scare—always calculated to inflame the people. I hope the quotation is correct. It should be—in the light of the funds which we have placed at Executive disposal.

Thirdly, Mr. President, and still more significant, I notice that Mr. Speaker RAINEY is quoted in black-face type as follows, as he left the White House upon Friday or Saturday:

The President intended to do by Executive order exactly what the bill proposes—

Referring to the independent offices appropriation bill—by the end of the year; under the President's plan, almost all veterans cut off the rolls by the economy bill would have been restored.

That completes the quotation of this high spokesman for the majority party. From this statement, if true, it would appear that the legislative offense, if any, denounced in the Presidential veto, was not a violation of the Presidential program but the anticipation of it by the Congress. It was that we spoke out of turn. The chief vice appears to be simply that Congress dared to reclaim some of its own constitutional power which the administrative authors of the rules and regulations under the economy act have enjoyed outrageously misusing.

Finally, Mr. President, bearing upon the controversy between the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] respecting the cost of the bill, I quote from the United States News of April 2 an editorial signed by Mr. David Lawrence, as follows:

The real difference in outlay between Mr. Roosevelt's proposal in his veto message and the bill that finally passed was not $228,000,000. Of that sum about $103,000,000 was for the restoration of veterans' allowances and the remainder for Federal pay roll. It is estimated that the President's last-minute suggestions for veterans' pay increases would have meant about $60,000,000. The total margin between Congress and the President on both Federal pay increases and veterans' items was not, relatively speaking, very large—about $81,000,000.

I submit that this is in substantial accord with estimates argued by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

I wanted to submit these quotations for the benefit of the RECORD and for the information of the country. They suggest that the Congress has done what the President himself would have shortly done; that the results do not impair the Budget in a relative sense; and that Congress is well justified in its action. That, in any event, is my view. Unfair economy is a disservice to permanent economy because it invites prejudice against all economy.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not expect to ask to have taken up any matters that are controversial, but there are many amendments which it seems to me we can dispose of this afternoon as to which there is no controversy. I hope we may take them up and dispose of some of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the heading "Subtitle B—General Provisions, Part I—Rates of Tax", on page 13, line 5, before the word "on", to strike out "tax" and insert "surtax", and in the same line, after the word "section", to strike out "102" and insert "351", so as to read:

(c) Tax on personal holding companies: For surtax on personal holding companies, see section 351.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, does not the Senator think we ought to have a quorum?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not, because it would take some time to secure a quorum, and I have been waiting patiently for a good while in order that we might proceed with the bill. I think we know generally what the controversial matters are. I am going to ask to pass those over. I really think we can go along very well. The Senate knows we are considering the tax bill.

Mr. FESS. I want to cooperate with the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that.

Mr. FESS. I would not want the Senator to take up anything that is controversial.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I do not intend to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 13, line 8, before the word "on", to strike out "tax" and insert "surtax"; and in line 9, after the word "section", to strike out "103" and insert "102", so as to read:

(d) Avoidance of surtaxes by incorporation: For surtax on corporations which accumulate surplus to avoid surtax on stockholders, see section 102.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 14, after the word "income", to insert "in excess of the credit against net income provided in section 26", so as to read:

SEC. 13. Tax on corporations. (a) Rate of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation a tax of 13¾ percent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credit against net income provided in section 26. (For addition to rate in case of consolidated returns, see sec. 141.)

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 20, before the word "on", to strike out "tax" and insert "surtax"; and in the same line, after the word "section", to strike out "102" and insert "351", so as to read:

(c) Tax on personal holding companies: For surtax on personal holding companies, see section 351.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 23, before the word "on", to strike out "tax" and insert "surtax"; and in line 24, after the word "section", to strike out "103" and insert "102", so as to read:

(d) Improper accumulation of surplus: For surtax on corporations which accumulate surplus to avoid surtax on stockholders, see section 102.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on page 15 of the bill, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] has an amendment to offer.

Mr. HARRISON. It relates to annuities?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the provisions relating to annuities be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 17, line 18, after the word "exempt", to strike out "to the taxpayer", so as to read:

(4) Tax-free interest: Interest upon (A) the obligations of a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia; or (B) obligations of a corporation organized under act of Congress, if such corporation is an instrumentality of the United States; or (C) the obligations of the United States or its possessions. Every person owning any of the obligations enumerated in clause (A), (B), or (C) shall, in the return required by this title, submit a statement showing the number and amount of such obligations owned by him and the income received therefrom, in such form and with such information as the Commissioner may require. In the case of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917 (other than postal-savings certificates of deposit), and in the case of obligations of a corporation organized under act of Congress, the interest shall be exempt only if and to the extent provided in the respective acts authorizing the issue thereof as amended and supplemented, and shall be excluded from gross income only if and to the extent it is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. The next amendment, page 19, lines 23 and 24, relates to annuities, too.

Mr. McNARY. I think we had better pass over the whole subject.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what was done with the amendment at the top of page 16?

Mr. HARRISON. That was passed over at the request of the Senator from Oregon. On page 20 is another amendment with reference to annuities which I think ought to be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments referred to will be passed over. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 25, line 7, after the word "individual", to insert a comma and "and no substantial part of the activities of which is participation in partisan politics or is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation", so as to read:

(c) Charitable and other contributions: In the case of an individual, contributions or gifts made within the taxable year to or for the use of:

(1) The United States, any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes;

(2) A corporation, or trust, or community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and no substantial part of the activities of which is participation in partisan politics or is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as that amendment is worded, it would apply to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, or any of the worthy institutions that we do not in the slightest mean to affect.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. In considering that amendment, as I recall, the sentiment of the committee was that the provision should apply to any organization that is receiving contributions, the proceeds of which are to be used for propaganda purposes or to try to influence legislation.

I called the attention of the experts to the fact that it seemed to me the proviso at the end of the second paragraph should apply to all four paragraphs. Of course, that would affect some war organizations, but personally I see no difference between one organization that might be on one side of the fence getting contributions to propagandize and influence legislation and being permitted to proceed without interference, while at the same time preventing one that might have a different viewpoint from receiving or making use of contributions for the same purpose.

Mr. REED. I have no objection whatever and no disagreement with the Senator in regard to what we were trying to do by this amendment. There is no reason in the world why a contribution made to the National Economy League should be deductible as if it were a charitable contribution if it is a selfish one made to advance the personal interests of the giver of the money. That is what the committee were trying to reach; but we found great difficulty in phrasing the amendment. I do not reproach the draftsmen. I think we gave them an impossible task; but this amendment goes much further than the committee intended to go.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. COUZENS. Does not the Senator believe that the words "substantial part" will exclude the tuberculosis societies and the children's welfare societies? Certainly a substantial part of their income is not devoted to propagandizing for legislation.

Mr. REED. I am not so sure. Take the case of those who are urging the adoption of the child-labor amendment: Certainly they are not acting from selfish motives, and yet almost their entire activity is an effort to influence legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator whether he does not think it would be wise to pass over this amendment for the present?

Mr. REED. Perhaps that would be better.

Mr. HARRISON. Really, I think it ought to be inserted at another place in the bill.

Mr. REED. I do not want to take too much time in discussing it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 28, line 8, after the word "income", to insert "other than interest", and in line 10, after the word "exempt", to strike out "to the taxpayer", so as to read:

SEC. 24. Items not deductible: (a) General rule.—In computing net income no deduction shall in any case be allowed in respect of—

(1) Personal, living, or family expenses;

(2) Any amount paid out for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate;

(3) Any amount expended in restoring property or in making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made;

(4) Premiums paid on any life-insurance policy covering the life of any officer or employee, or of any person financially interested in any trade or business carried on by the taxpayer, when the taxpayer is directly or indirectly a beneficiary under such policy;

(5) Any amount otherwise allowable as a deduction which is allocable to one or more classes of income other than interest (whether or not any amount of income of that class or classes is received or accrued) wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title; or

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 17, after the words "per centum", to strike out "of the voting" and insert "in the value of the outstanding", so as to read:

(6) Loss from sales or exchanges of property, directly or indirectly, (A) between members of a family, or (B) except in the case of distributions in liquidation, between an individual and a corporation in which such individual owns, directly or indirectly, more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock. For the purpose of this paragraph—(C) an individual shall be considered as owning the stock owned, directly or indirectly, by his family; and (D) the family of an individual shall include only his brothers and sisters (whether by the whole or half blood), spouse, ancestors, and lineal descendants.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 5, after the word "than", to strike out "$8,000", and insert "$20,000", so as to read:

(c) "Earned net income" means the excess of the amount of the earned income over the sum of the earned income deductions. If the taxpayer's net income is not more than $3,000, his entire net income shall be considered to be earned net income, and if his net income is more than $3,000, his earned net income shall not be considered to be less than $3,000. In no case shall the earned net income be considered to be more than $20,000.

Mr. COUZENS. I think that amendment ought to go over.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask to have that amendment passed over. It refers to the earned-income tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 11, to insert:

SEC. 26. Credits of corporation against net income: For the purpose only of the tax imposed by section 13 there shall be allowed as a credit against net income the amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States or of corporations organized under act of Congress which is allowed to an individual as a credit for purposes of normal tax by section 25 (a) (2) or (3).

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi please explain to what that amendment refers? There are references there to a number of sections which I have not had time to analyze.

Mr. HARRISON. This change, coupled with the change made in section 22 (b) (4), if the Senator will turn back to it, provides for uniform treatment of partially tax-exempt interest. Regardless of whether such interest is received by a corporation or by an individual, it will be included in gross income, and taken out as a credit. This will greatly simplify the laws, as the experts have pointed out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 18, after the word "deductions", to strike out "in computing net income" and insert "and credits", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 43. Period for which deductions and credits taken: The deductions and credits provided for in this title shall be taken for the taxable year in which "paid or accrued" or "paid or incurred", dependent upon the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed, unless in order to clearly reflect the income the deductions or credits should be taken as of a different period. In the case of the death of a taxpayer there shall be allowed as deductions and credits for the taxable period in which falls the date of his death, amounts accrued up to the date of his death if not otherwise properly allowable in respect of such period or a prior period.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 19, after the word "disposition" and the period, to insert "Any gain or loss so resulting shall be considered as resulting from the sale or exchange of the property in respect of which the installment obligation was received.", so as to read:

(d) Gain or loss upon disposition of installment obligations: If an installment obligation is satisfied at other than its face value or distributed, transmitted, sold, or otherwise disposed of, gain or loss shall result to the extent of the difference between the basis of the obligation and (1) in the case of satisfaction at other than face value or a sale or exchange—the amount realized, or (2) in case of a distribution, transmission, or disposition otherwise than by sale or exchange—the fair market value of the obligation at the time of such distribution, transmission, or disposition. Any gain or loss so resulting shall be considered as resulting from the sale or exchange of the property in respect of which the installment obligation was received. The basis of the obligation shall be the excess of the face value of the obligation over an amount equal to the income which would be returnable were the obligation satisfied in full. This subsection shall not apply to the transmission at death of installment obligations if there is filed with the Commissioner, at such time as he may by regulation prescribe, a bond in such amount and with such sureties as he may deem necessary, conditioned upon the return as income, by the person receiving any payment on such obligations, of the same proportion of such payment as would be returnable as income by the decedent if he had lived and had received such payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 11, after the word "from", to strike out "the", so as to read:

SEC. 47. Returns for a period of less than 12 months: (a) Returns for short period resulting from change of accounting period: If a taxpayer, with the approval of the Commissioner, changes the basis of computing net income from fiscal year to calendar year, a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the last fiscal year for which return was made and the following December 31. If the change is from calendar year to fiscal year, a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the last calendar year for which return was made and the date designated as the close of the fiscal year. If the change is from one fiscal year to another fiscal year, a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the former fiscal year and the date designated as the close of the new fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 42, to insert the following:

(d) Trade or business: The term "trade or business" includes the performance of the functions of a public office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 14, after the word "the", to strike out "treasurer or assistant treasurer" and insert "treasurer, assistant treasurer, or chief accounting officer.", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 52. Corporation returns: (a) Requirement: Every corporation subject to taxation under this title shall make a return, stating specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title. The return shall be sworn to by the president, vice president, or other principal officer and by the treasurer, assistant treasurer, or chief accounting officer. In cases where receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, or assignees are operating the property or business of corporations, such receivers, trustees, or assignees shall make returns for such corporations in the same manner and form as corporations are required to make returns. Any tax due on the basis of such returns made by receivers, trustees, or assignees shall be collected in the same manner as if collected from the corporations of whose business or property they have custody and control.

(b) Consolidated returns: For provision as to consolidated returns of affiliated corporations, see section 141.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. That involves the same question we were discussing a few minutes ago.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask to have that amendment passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 15, to strike out the following:

SEC. 102. Tax on personal holding companies: (a) Tax on personal holding company. In addition to the tax imposed by section 13, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, for each taxable year, upon the undistributed adjusted net income of every personal holding company a tax of 35 percent thereof. Such tax shall be computed, collected, and paid in the same manner and subject to the same provisions of law (including penalties) as the tax imposed by section 13.

(b) Definitions: As used in this section, (1) the term "personal holding company" means any corporation (other than a banking or insurance corporation) if (A) at least 80 percent of its gross income for the taxable year is derived from rents, royalties, dividends, interest, annuities, and (except in the case of regular dealers in stock or securities) gains from the sale of stock or securities, and (B) at any time during the last half of the taxable year more than 50 percent in value of its outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for not more than five individuals. For the purpose of determining the ownership of stock in a personal holding company—(C) stock owned, directly or indirectly, by a corporation, partnership, estate, or trust shall be considered as being owned proportionately by its shareholders, partners, or beneficiaries; (D) an individual shall be considered as owning, to the exclusion of any other individual, the stock owned, directly or indirectly, by his family, and this rule shall be applied in such manner as to produce the smallest possible number of individuals owning, directly or indirectly, more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock; and (E) the family of an individual shall include only his brothers and sisters (whether by the whole or half blood), spouse, ancestors, and lineal descendants. For the purpose of clause (A) of this paragraph the term "gross income" includes the amount of interest upon obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, which would be subject to tax in whole or in part in the hands of an individual owner.

(2) The term "undistributed adjusted net income" means the adjusted net income minus the sum of:

(A) Ten percent of the adjusted net income; and

(B) Dividends paid during the taxable year.

(3) The term "adjusted net income" means the sum of:

(A) The net income determined without regard to the provisions of this section;

(B) The amount of the dividend deduction allowed under section 23 (p); and

(C) The amount of interest upon obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, which would be subject to tax in whole or in part in the hands of an individual owner; minus the sum of:

(D) Federal income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes paid or accrued, but not including the tax imposed by this section;

(E) Contributions or gifts, not otherwise allowed as a deduction, to or for the use of donees described in section 23 (o) for the purposes therein specified; and

(F) Losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets which are disallowed as a deduction by section 117 (d).

SEC. 103. Tax on other corporations improperly accumulating surplus: (a) In addition to the tax imposed by section 13, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation (other than a personal holding company as defined in sec. 102) a tax equal to 25 percent of the amount thereof, if such corporation, however created or organized, is formed or availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of the surtax upon its shareholders or the shareholders of any other corporation, through the medium of permitting gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed. Such tax shall be computed, collected, and paid in the same manner and subject to the same provisions of law (including penalties) as the tax imposed by section 13.

(b) The fact that any corporation is a mere holding or investment company, or that the gains or profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business, shall be prima facie evidence of a purpose to avoid surtax.

(c) As used in this section, the term "net income" means the net income as defined in section 21, increased by the sum of:

(1) the amount of the dividend deduction allowed under section 23 (p), and

(2) the amount of the interest on obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, which would be subject to tax in whole or in part in the hands of an individual owner; but diminished by the amount of dividends paid during the taxable year.

And to insert:

SEC. 102. Surtax on corporations improperly accumulating surplus: (a) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the adjusted net income of every corporation (other than a personal holding company as defined in sec. 351) if such corporation, however created or organized, is formed or availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of the surtax upon its shareholders or the shareholders of any other corporation, through the medium of permitting gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed, a surtax equal to the sum of the following:

(1) 25 percent of the amount of the adjusted net income not in excess of $100,000, plus

(2) 35 percent of the amount of the adjusted net income in excess of $100,000.

(b) Prima facie evidence: The fact that any corporation is a mere holding or investment company, or that the gains or profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business, shall be prima facie evidence of a purpose to avoid surtax.

(c) Definition of "adjusted net income": As used in this section, the term "adjusted net income" means the net income increased by the amount of the dividend deduction allowed under section 23 (p), but diminished by the amount of dividends paid during the taxable year.

(d) Tax on personal holding companies: For surtax on personal holding companies, see section 351.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the personal holding tax is of considerable importance and ought to be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 16, to strike out the following section:

SEC. 104. Tax on citizens and corporations of certain foreign countries: Whenever the President finds that, under the laws of any foreign country, citizens or corporations of the United States are being subjected to discriminatory taxes, the President shall so proclaim and each citizen or corporation of such foreign country shall be subject, for the taxable year during which such proclamation is made, and for each taxable year thereafter, to an additional income tax equal to 50 percent of the income tax otherwise imposed upon such citizen or corporation by this title. Such additional income tax shall be computed, collected, and paid in the same manner and subject to the same provisions of law (including penalties) as the taxes imposed by sections 11, 12, and 13 upon such citizen or corporation. Whenever the President finds that the laws of any foreign country with respect to which the President has made a proclamation under the preceding provisions of this section have been modified so that discriminatory taxes applicable to citizens and corporations of the United States have been removed, he shall so proclaim, and the provisions of this section levying an additional income tax shall not apply to any citizen or corporation of such foreign country with respect to any taxable year after such proclamation is made.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 103. Rates of tax on citizens and corporations of certain foreign countries: Whenever the President finds that, under the laws of any foreign country, citizens or corporations of the United States are being subjected to discriminatory or extraterritorial taxes, the President shall so proclaim and the rates of tax imposed by sections 11, 12, 13, 201 (b), and 204 (a) shall, for the taxable year during which such proclamation is made and for each taxable year thereafter, be doubled in the case of each citizen and corporation of such foreign country; but the tax at such doubled rate shall be considered as imposed by sections 11, 12, 13, 201 (b), or 204 (a), as the case may be. In no case shall this section operate to increase the taxes imposed by such sections (computed without regard to this section) to an amount in excess of 80 percent of the net income of the taxpayer. Whenever the President finds that the laws of any foreign country with respect to which the President has made a proclamation under the preceding provisions of this section have been modified so that discriminatory and extraterritorial taxes applicable to citizens and corporations of the United States have been removed, he shall so proclaim, and the provisions of this section providing for doubled rates of tax shall not apply to any citizen or corporation of such foreign country with respect to any taxable year beginning after such proclamation is made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 3, after the word "corporation", to insert "accumulated after February 28, 1913", so as to read:

(c) Gain from exchanges not solely in kind: (1) If an exchange would be within the provisions of subsection (b) (1), (2), (3), or (5) of this section if it were not for the fact that the property received in exchange consists not only of property permitted by such paragraph to be received without the recognition of gain, but also of other property or money, then the gain, if any, to the recipient shall be recognized, but in an amount not in excess of the sum of such money and the fair market value of such other property.

(2) If a distribution made in pursuance of a plan of reorganization is within the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection but has the effect of the distribution of a taxable dividend, then there shall be taxed as a dividend to each distributee such an amount of the gain recognized under paragraph (1) as is not in excess of his ratable share of the undistributed earnings and profits of the corporation accumulated after February 28, 1913. The remainder, if any, of the gain recognized under paragraph (1) shall be taxed as a gain from the exchange of property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 4, after the article "a", to strike out "merger or consolidation, or (B)" and insert "statutory merger or consolidation, or (B) the acquisition by one corporation in exchange solely for its voting stock; of at least 80 percent of the voting stock and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of another corporation; or of substantially all the properties of another corporation, or (C)", in line 15, before the article "a", to strike out "(C)" and insert "(D)", and at the end of the same line to strike out "(D)" and insert "(E)"; and in line 20, after the word "reorganization", to insert "and includes both corporations in the case of a reorganization resulting from the acquisition by one corporation of stock or properties of another ", so as to read:

(1) The term " reorganization " means (A) a statutory merger or consolidation, or (B) the acquisition by one corporation in exchange solely for its voting stock; of at least 80 percent of the voting stock and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of another corporation; or of substantially all the properties of another corporation, or (C) a transfer by a corporation of all or a part of its assets to another corporation if immediately after the transfer the transferor or its stockholders or both are in control of the corporation to which the assets are transferred, or (D) a recapitalization, or (E) a mere change in identity, form, or place of organization, however effected.

(2) The term " a party to a reorganization " includes a corporation resulting from a reorganization and includes both corporations in the case of a reorganization resulting from the acquisition by one corporation of stock or properties of another.

Mr. HARRISON. We had better pass over that amendment. It is a very important one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 8, after the word " inheritance ", to insert a comma and " or by the decedent's estate from the decedent ", so as to read:

(5) Property transmitted at death: If the property was acquired by bequest, devise, or inheritance, or by the decedent's estate from the decedent, the basis shall be the fair market value of such property at the time of such acquisition. In the case of property transferred in trust to pay the income for life to or upon the order or direction of the grantor, with the right reserved to the grantor at all times prior to his death to revoke the trust, the basis of such property in the hands of the persons entitled under the terms of the trust instrument to the property after the grantor's death shall, after such death, be the same as if the trust instrument had been a will executed on the day of the grantor's death. For the purpose of this paragraph property passing without full and adequate consideration under a general power of appointment exercised by will shall be deemed to be property passing from the individual exercising such power by bequest or devise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 17, after "(12)", to insert " Basis established by Revenue Act of 1932: ", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 1, after "(13)", to insert " Partnerships: ", so as to read:

(13) Partnerships: If the property was acquired, after February 28, 1913, by a partnership and the basis is not otherwise determined under any of the paragraphs (1) to (12), inclusive, of this subsection, then the basis shall be the same as it would be in the hands of the transferor, increased in the amount of gain or decreased in the amount of loss recognized to the transferor upon such transfer under the law applicable to the year in which the transfer was made. If the property was distributed in kind by a partnership to any partner, the basis of such property in the hands of the partner shall be such part of the basis in his hands of his partnership interest as is properly allocable to such property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 11, after the word " property " and the period, to strike out:

A taxpayer making his first return under this title in respect of a property shall state whether he elects to have the depletion allowance for such property for the taxable year for which the return is made computed with or without regard to percentage depletion, and the depletion allowance in respect of such property for such year and all succeeding taxable years shall be computed according to the election thus made. If the taxpayer fails to make such statement in the return, the depletion allowance for such property for all taxable years shall be computed without reference to percentage depletion.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

A taxpayer making his first return under this title in respect of a property shall state whether he elects to have the depletion allowance for such property for the taxable year for which the return is made computed with or without regard to percentage depletion, and the depletion allowance in respect of such property for such year shall be computed according to the election thus made. If the taxpayer fails to make such statement in the return, the depletion allowance for such property for such year shall be computed without reference to percentage depletion. The method, determined as above, of computing the depletion allowance shall be applied in the case of the property for all taxable years in which it is in the hands of such taxpayer, or of any other person if the basis of the property (for determining gain) in his hands is, under section 113, determined by reference to the basis in the hands of such taxpayer, either directly or through one or more substituted bases, as defined in that section.

So as to read:

(4) Percentage depletion for coal and metal mines and sulphur: The allowance for depletion under section 23 (m) shall be, in the case of coal mines, 5 percent, in the case of metal mines, 15 percent, and, in the case of sulphur mines or deposits, 23 percent, of the gross income from the property during the taxable year, excluding from such gross income an amount equal to any rents or royalties paid or incurred by the taxpayer in respect of the property. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 percent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property. A taxpayer making his first return under this title in respect of a property shall state whether he elects to have the depletion allowance for such property for the taxable year for which the return is made computed with or without regard to percentage depletion, and the depletion allowance in respect of such property for such year shall be computed according to the election thus made. If the taxpayer fails to make such statement in the return, the depletion allowance for such property for such year shall be computed without reference to percentage depletion. The method, determined as above, of computing the depletion allowance shall be applied in the case of the property for all taxable years in which it is in the hands of such taxpayer, or of any other person if the basis of the property (for determining gain) in his hands is, under section 113, determined by reference to the basis in the hands of such taxpayer, either directly or through one or more substituted bases, as defined in that section.

Mr. COUZENS. I think that amendment ought to go over. The Senator from Tennessee is going to offer an amendment to that section.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 22, after the word " profits ", to insert " accumulated after February 28, 1913 ", so as to read:

(b) Source of distributions: For the purposes of this act every distribution is made out of earnings or profits to the extent thereof, and from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits. Any earnings or profits accumulated, or increase in value of property accrued, before March 1, 1913, may be distributed exempt from tax, after the earnings and profits accumulated after February 28, 1913, have been distributed, but any such tax-free distribution shall be applied against and reduce the adjusted basis of the stock provided in section 113.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 4, after the word "profits" to insert "accumulated after February 28, 1913", so as to read:

(g) Redemption of stock: If a corporation cancels or redeems its stock (whether or not such stock was issued as a stock dividend) at such time and in such manner as to make the distribution and cancelation or redemption in whole or in part essentially equivalent to the distribution of a taxable dividend, the amount so distributed in redemption or cancelation of the stock, to the extent that it represents a distribution of earnings or profits accumulated after February 28, 1913, shall be treated as a taxable dividend.

80 percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 1 year but not for more than 2 years;

60 percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 2 years but not for more than 5 years;

40 percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 5 years but not for more than 10 years;

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether this amendment is important enough to pass over?

Mr. REED. It involves a good many questions.

Mr. HARRISON. Then let it be passed over, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment referred to, and the ones on pages 95, 96, and 100, without objection, will be passed over.

(2) Resident of United States: In the case of a resident of the United States, the amount of any such taxes paid or accrued during the taxable year to any possession of the United States; and

(3) Alien resident of United States: In the case of an alien resident of the United States, the amount of any such taxes paid or accrued during the taxable year to any foreign country, if the foreign country of which such alien resident is a citizen or subject, in imposing such taxes, allows a similar credit to citizens of the United States residing in such country; and

(4) Partnerships and estates: In the case of any such individual who is a member of a partnership or a beneficiary of an estate or trust, his proportionate share of such taxes of the partnership or the estate or trust paid or accrued during the taxable year to a foreign country or to any possession of the United States, as the case may be.

(b) Limit on credit.—The amount of the credit taken under this section shall be subject to each of the following limitations:

(1) The amount of the credit in respect of the tax paid or accrued to any country shall not exceed the same proportion of the tax against which such credit is taken, which the taxpayer's net income from sources within such country bears to his entire net income for the same taxable year; and

In the case of a corporation which is a member of the affiliated group for a fractional part of the year, the consolidated return shall include the income of such corporation for such part of the year as it is a member of the affiliated group.

(b) Regulations.—The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary in order that the tax liability of an affiliated group of corporations making a consolidated return and of each corporation in the group, both during and after the period of affiliation, may be determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted in such manner as clearly to reflect the income and to prevent avoidance of tax liability.

(c) Computation and payment of tax: In any case in which a consolidated return is made the tax shall be determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted in accordance with the regulations under subsection (b) (or, in case such regulations are not prescribed prior to the making of the return, then the regulations prescribed under section 141 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1932, insofar as not inconsistent with this act) prescribed prior to the date on which such return is made; except that there shall be added to the rate of tax prescribed by sections 13 (a), 201 (b), and 204 (a), a rate of 2 percent, but the tax at such increased rate shall be considered as imposed by section 13 (a), 201 (b), or 204 (a), as the case may be.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 2, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we praise Thee that Thy heart is on the side of every man who needs divine love, divine pity, and mercy. In the center of all power, whence issues that which controls all law, and in the midst of all wisdom is a heart full of compassion. O draw near to us, for Thou dost understand us better than we ourselves. Spread Thy wings, that under their shadow we may be secure. We thank Thee that Thou art revealed by Thy love in the glory of the whole human family. We rejoice that Thou dost minister in the household of the ages. O may the whole family be moving in the stream of divine influence, making society better, the race better, our country better, the world better; O may it run through the channels of all the earth. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the Clerk shall call the bills on the Private Calendar, beginning with the star, and that bills unobjected to shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole; and that Calendar Wednesday business of this week be dispensed with and that on Wednesday it shall be in order to consider business that would have been in order today.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. That includes suspensions, does it?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; whatever business is in order today, if this request is granted, will be in order on Wednesday.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Tennessee understand that the sugar bill will be brought up on Wednesday?

Mr. BYRNS. That has been my general understanding.

Mr. HOPE. In that connection I wonder if we could not have some agreement as to an extension of time so far as the consideration of the sugar bill is concerned.

Mr. BYRNS. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] will be reasonable in the matter of allowing time; but I do want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that we have quite a number of other suspensions, and we have quite a long Consent Calendar, and there are some other matters that are pressing that will be ready the latter part of this week. I hope whatever additional time is arranged for on the sugar bill can be made as short as possible.

Mr. HOPE. Of course, the sugar bill, in my judgment, is one which should never be brought up under suspension anyway. It is a bill which ought to have more consideration with opportunity for amendment; but I understand the domestic-sugar industry is very much interested in having this bill go through at as early a date as possible, and I would not have any objection, under the circumstances, to having it come up in this way if we may have adequate time to discuss it.

Mr. BYRNS. How much time does the gentleman think ought to be allowed?

Mr. HOPE. I should think a minimum of 1 hour on the side.

Mr. BYRNS. I hope the gentleman will agree to reduce that. If we could make it 40 minutes to the side, it would be very agreeable, especially if the gentleman and others will promise to help us keep the House in session on Wednesday until we can make up for the extra time consumed and also consider some of the bills on the calendar, because there are a number of Members interested in the Consent Calendar.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, that will be satisfactory to me, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. Under the circumstances that will be agreeable.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the majority leader if he expects, with the Speaker's cooperation, to bring up Senator JOHNSON's bill to prevent extending loans to foreign nations that have defaulted in the payment of their debts.

Mr. BYRNS. The Speaker can answer that question better than I can, but I understand that is on his list.

Mr. FISH. I have talked with the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I should like to make the same request for a limited additional time of 20 minutes more on the side.

Mr. BYRNS. We have made a concession with respect to the sugar bill. Would not the gentleman be willing to have 30 minutes on each side or 1 hour for consideration of the bill?

Mr. FISH. I am a good compromiser and a good bargainer, and I accept that suggestion.

Mr. BYRNS. And I hope no one else will make a similar request with respect to any of the other bills.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit. I should like to inquire about the Minnesota fire sufferers' bill. If today's business goes over, will this bill be taken up tomorrow or Wednesday?

Mr. BYRNS. It would be in order on Wednesday.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am very much interested in seeing that the fire sufferers of northern Minnesota are compensated and paid in full for the terrible damage they suffered many years ago. The fires were the result of Federal negligence, and the United States should pay the bill.

Something has been done—that is true. But these people will never be satisfied until they are fully reimbursed. The Government can never pay for the agony and suffering—mental and physical—which they endured.

Many years ago, in the 1913 Session of the Minnesota Legislature, I introduced a bill providing for the establishment of a fire, flood, and disaster fund for the State of Minnesota. This was given a great deal of publicity in the Duluth Herald, News Tribune, and press of northern Minnesota. Had my plan at that time been carried out, this terrible injustice would have been righted instantly. At once and automatically the fund would have operated to aid these people.

The Minnesota fire sufferers—many of them—have been set back a decade or two in their finances. Had money been available at once, they could have gone ahead with their plans for homes, farms, and business. Owing to this terrible loss, they were stranded and left without means to progress.

Now is the time to act, and now is the time to do the square thing for these splendid citizens of the North Star State.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not understand the gentleman's request extends to giving opportunity for suspensions on Wednesday, other than those he has already referred to.

Mr. BYRNS. Well, I do not know just what is on the list of the Speaker. Of course, the question of suspensions rests altogether with the Speaker, and I do not know just what suspensions he has in mind. I understand these three bills are on his list.

Mr. LUCE. It was contemplated there should be adequate time for discussion of the home-loan-bond guarantee bill.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not think that bill will be taken up. That is one reason I am anxious to confine the consideration of these bills as much as we can so we may get to that measure, possibly Thursday or not later than Friday.

Mr. LUCE. I merely wanted to be certain that bill will not be taken up under suspension.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that bill is to be taken up under suspension.

Mr. STEAGALL. There will be no such effort, so far as I am concerned.

The SPEAKER. It will not be taken up under suspension.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask what effect the gentleman's request has on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. BYRNS. It simply postpones consideration of the Consent Calendar until Wednesday, if this request is granted, and makes it in order on Wednesday.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if this unanimous-consent request is granted and the House is to have 1 hour of debate on each side on the sugar bill——

Mr. BYRNS. I understood it was to be 40 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Even with that division of time, it is not unreasonable to hope, I suppose, that Members other than members of the House Committee on Agriculture may have an opportunity to submit certain observations on the bill.

Mr. BYRNS. That will rest with the gentleman from Texas and whoever demands a second, and I understand a second will probably be demanded by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXECUTIVE ORDER—VETERANS' LEGISLATION (H.DOC. NO. 296)

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 27, 1934.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE EDWARD W. POU, OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I announce to the House the death of our beloved colleague, EDWARD W. POU.

He has served for more than 33 years in this House as a Member from North Carolina. He was the dean of this House in point of service.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. POU acquired seniority and leadership here, not alone by his length of service but by his nobility of character and extraordinary mental attainments.

He passed away yesterday, on that beautiful Easter morning at his apartment in Washington. I believe that Mr. POU was as much loved by the Membership of this House on both sides of the aisle as any man who ever sat in this body.

We shall mourn his loss both as Democrats and as Republicans. He served in many important capacities in this House during his long official life and acquitted himself with honor in all of them.

At the time of his death he was Chairman of the powerful Committee on Rules. He held the same position during the strenuous days of the World War. Those days took a large toll of his physical strength. He was always courteous and kindly to his colleagues, regardless of political situations. He was powerful in debate, clean, clear, and forceful. His mind grasped the essentials of every problem and went straight to the mark.

He was one of North Carolina's great citizens, and we are proud of the distinguished services which he has rendered to our State as a Member of this body. I know that every Member of this House will join with his colleagues from North Carolina in mourning his loss.

At some future time a day will be set aside to commemorate the public life and character of this distinguished man.

Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk at this time the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 318

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the remains of Mr. POU be removed from Washington to Smithfield, N.C., in charge of the Sergeant at Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these proceedings to the Senate and invite the Vice President and the Senate to attend the funeral in the House of Representatives and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under the terms of the legislative appropriation bill, which has passed the House, he is authorized to appoint four Members as a funeral committee. The bill has not been enacted into law, but the Chair assumes that it will be enacted into law and is appointing four Members on the committee.

The Chair wishes also to state that a number of other Members of the House will attend the funeral in an unofficial capacity, including the minority leader, two members of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD, the gentleman from New York, Mr. O'CONNOR, and the Speaker of the House and the entire North Carolina delegation, and others.

The SPEAKER appointed as members to attend the funeral Mr. WEAVER, Mr. BULWINKLE, Mr. CLARK of North Carolina, and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, the following leaves of absence were granted:

To Mr. KOCIALKOWSKI, indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. KNUTSON, for 10 days.

To Mr. SCHUETZ, indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. LARRABEE, for today, on account of illness.

To Mr. GRAY, for 4 days, on account of important business.

RECESS—FUNERAL OF THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE EDWARD W. POU

ORDER OF SERVICE

Prayer	Dr. James Shera Montgomery, Chaplain of the House of Representatives
Selection	Quartet of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church
Funeral Services	The Chaplain of the House of Representatives
Address	Mr. Speaker Rainey
Selection	Quartet
Address	Hon. Bertrand H. Snell
Selection	Quartet
Benediction	The Chaplain of the House of Representatives

At 2 p.m. the Vice President and Members of the Senate entered the Chamber and occupied the seats assigned to them, the Vice President occupying a seat at the Speaker's table.

Then came the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, who took the seats assigned to them.

The body of the late Mr. POU lay in state in the space in front of the Clerk's desk.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Lift up your heads, O ye gates; be ye lifted up ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in.

Heavenly Father, renew in us the spirit that cleanses our divided hearts and deliver us from all self-assurance. O speak through our thoughts and direct the counsels of our meditations. Almighty God, our hearts are bathed in emotion as we wait in loving reverence in memory of one whose superb character and wise statesmanship have contributed so richly to our beloved country. He knew her history, he had learned her lessons, and he loved her institutions. All life is richer for his having passed this way. Grant that the influence of this noble son of Thine may live and remain an incentive to those of us who follow on. We are thankful that his strong will was ever tempered by his mighty charity, which flushed his placid face with an indescribable charm. Heavenly Father, we bless Thee for a life so beautiful in faith, so full of devotion, and so full of renown. How we rejoice that on Easter Morn, when the clouds and darkness that had clustered about the morning star of hope had faded into a new and glorious day, the heavens opened and his pure white soul became immortal. Comfort all bereaved ones, his colleagues, friends, and lead us all in peace up the hill-slopes of time. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A quartet from St. Margaret's Episcopal Church sang the hymn, "Peace, Perfect Peace."

The Chaplain read the burial service.

The CHAPLAIN. Just a word by request, dear friends. We are this afternoon in the afterglow of earth's greatest day. How the multitudes of the wide world converge to one place, and that one place is a symbol of eternal hope and everlasting glory. What a secret hangs over the grave. I long since have learned, in some little way, not to work too hard at a lock where no complete key has been left.

What tears and what prayers hang over the tomb! And yet we wonder, we wonder. Yet as a sailor coming back to his homeland first scents the odors of the shoreline, as some Launfal comes back to his home, and in the distance hears the bells in the abbey, as in that picture, the Aurora, the weary pilgrim stops at the foothills and waits for the glorious sunlight in all its radiant beauty to break on the mountain top, so we wait for a complete solution of the mystery of immortality. I turn to Browning with these hours:

I see my way as the birds their paths; I shall arrive.

When the great philosopher and poet wrote that word of inspiration, a transition came into his life. Before that time, somewhat, he had been kneeling at the altar of Nature—Nature, beautiful, graceful, symmetrical, but still Nature. The big tree chokes to death the little tree. The big vine grips in a deathly hug the little vine. Nature is beautiful, but I find no great comfort in telling myself that God is omnipotent—my heart aches on; that God is omnipresent—my heart aches on; that God is all wisdom—my heart aches on. So in the hour of Browning's sorrow he went out for an afternoon walk, and the glorious, radiant moments of the late afternoon were passing away, dying down into the mysterious depths of holy night. He returned home, and he wrote:

While I was walking, the birds were still singing, the flowers were still blooming, the waters were still rippling, and my heart was still aching.

Then and there he saw the light of a new and beautiful experience.

Then that sweet and beautiful song, To a Waterfowl, by William Cullen Bryant:

There is a power whose care
  Teaches thy way along that pathless coast—
The desert and illimitable air—
  Lone wandering, but not lost.

* * * * *

He who, from zone to zone,
  Guides through the boundless sky they certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone,
  Will lead my steps aright.

What an inspiration, what a comfort, and that other song, Eternal Goodness:

And so beside the Silent Sea
  I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from Him can come to me
  On ocean or on shore.

I know not where His islands lift
  Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
  Beyond His love and care.

Man is always seeking something. We look over our shoulders and see the pilgrims crowding about the stream called "The Fountain of Youth." We see others flocking near and far, seeking the beautiful, growing fields of beauty and glory, "The Eldorado." And yonder is the man in my thoughts who is ever seeking the "golden fleece", symbolical of the search of the human heart in all ages and in all generations; and when we read the Holy Grail, it tells the same story, namely, the quest of the human heart. Dear friends, and may I say neighbors, we learned two simple rules in natural philosophy, just two. Perhaps we could not remember another. One is that two bodies cannot occupy the same space at the same time. The other rule is that matter is indestructible. That is to say, the lower survives. I recall very directly the word of Mr. Edison when he was asked his greatest invention. He pointed to the electric light. In some form that substance will live. Will God Almighty care for that substance and allow the mind that conceived it and planned it and toiled for it to die? Burn a piece of coal and the ash and the gasses equal the original bulk. Will God Almighty care for coal and turn a deaf ear to the appeals of the heart that loved, to the breast that feels the throbs of undying, eternal sentiments and emotions. My friends, listen. It cannot be so.

O yet we trust that somehow good
  Will be the final goal of ill,
  To pangs of nature, sins of will,
Defects of doubt, and taints of blood.

That nothing walks with aimless feet,
  That not one life shall be destroyed,
  Or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made the pile complete.

That not a worm is cloven in vain,
  That not a moth with vain desire
  Is shriveled in a fruitless fire,
Or but subserves another's gain.

So runs my dream: but what am I?
  An infant crying in the night;
  An infant crying for the light;
And with no language but a cry.

I stretch lame hands of faith, and grope,
  And gather dust and chaff, and call
  To what I feel is Lord of all,
And faintly trust the larger hope.

It is the salvation of the world, namely, the undying hope that beats everlastingly in the human breast.

In conclusion, we are now, as I said in the beginning, standing in the afterglow of Easter Morning. At this moment I am reminded of what I may be permitted to call the second great prayer of the world:

Lord, remember me when Thou comest into Thy kingdom. * * * Verily, I say unto thee, today shalt thou be with me in Paradise.

The first trophy of the cross was a human soul, and perhaps the institutions of the time, and of his day, had made him the wicked man that he was, and yet he was ushered through the gates of Paradise by our loving Savior. A poem in a London drawing room I picked up one day:

So I stand by the cross on the lone mountain crest,
  Looking toward the ultimate sea;
In the gloom of the morn a ship lies at rest,
  And one sails away from the lea.

One spreads its white sails on a far-reaching track,
  With pennant and sheet flowing free;
One lies in the shadows with sails aback,
  The ship that is waiting for me.

But lo! in the distance the clouds break away,
The gates glowing portals I see;
I hear from the outgoing ship in the bay
A song of the sailors in glee.

So I think of the luminous footsteps that bore
Him safe o'er dark Galilee,
And I wait for my ship to go to that shore—
In the ship that is waiting for me.

These 14 years I have passed in and out of this Chamber, I seldom said "Mr. POU"; I said "Brother POU"; he was so kindly and brotherly. There was a dignified simplicity in his beautiful character. Today in my study I was thinking the sentiments of Tennyson when he lost one of his dear friends:

Break, break, break,
On thy cold gray stones, O sea!
And I would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me.

O, well for the fisherman's boy,
That he shouts with his sister at play!
O, well for the sailor lad,
That he sings in his boat on the bay!

And the stately ships go on
To their haven under the hill;
But O for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still!

Break, break, break,
At the foot of thy crags, O sea!
But the tender grace of a day that is dead
Will never come back to me.

All that is left of our dear splendid friend and brother will soon be taken to his Carolina home, down yonder under the beautiful radiant skies, where the flowers and cypress grow, and I think if I could interpret his word this moment it could be said in the language of Robert Louis Stevenson:

Under the wide and starry sky,
Dig the grave and let me lie.
Glad did I live, and gladly die,
And I laid me down with a will.

This be the verse you grave for me:
"Here he lies where he longed to be;
Home is the sailor, home from the sea,
And the hunter home from the hill."

Blessings on his sweet and beautiful memory. He made me think good thoughts. He inspired me to lead a good life. I shall prize his memory for many and many a day.

Mr. SABATH assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF HON. EDWARD WILLIAM POU, OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. RAINEY. Born in Alabama, educated in the University of North Carolina, a Presidential elector, solicitor for the fourth judicial district of North Carolina, 34 years a Member of Congress, Chairman of the powerful Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives—this is a brief outline of the busy useful life of Hon. EDWARD WILLIAM POU, whose body lies here today.

His death removes from this body the last of its Members who were here when I came, 30 years ago. During that long period of time I have been closely associated with him in the work of the Congress, and I have learned to admire and respect in the very highest degree his qualities as a man, a statesman, and a citizen. He will be missed here in the House as few men are missed.

Tomorrow, accompanied by the official committee of the House and Senate, by his family, and by his personal friends, his body will complete its journey back to the State he has represented in the Congress so long and so ably, back to the people he loved and who loved him.

It will be hard to fill his place. When a great tree crashes in the forest, it leaves a space which is not filled again for many decades of time.

His long life was characterized always by intense patriotism and devotion to duty. During the period of the World War he was Chairman of the great Rules Committee of the House; and again, during the present war against depression, he occupied that dignified, powerful, and influential position. He carried on even during the last 3 years, when his physical powers were weakened, but his mind remained perfectly clear and intensely active during his years of illness, and he was found always and until the last few days of his life at his post here in the House of Representatives, discharging efficiently and ably the important duties of his position.

During the period of the World War he made his full share of sacrifices for his country. On Armistice Day, and just before the peace program was put in operation, his son was killed in action on a battlefield of northern France.

In his death all of us who were so closely associated here with him experience a strong sense of personal loss.

I like to think of life as a journey over a broad highway. We start out in the morning traveling over a road watered with last night's rains, and the journey is always upward. There are those who branch out from the main traveled highway and go along into untraveled paths on either side. These are the pioneers; and finally, if they are successful in what they undertake, the highway of life broadens out and takes in also the paths over which they have traveled. A better and a wider highway is made for those who follow.

As we go along, there are places where the green ferns grow, and we ought to linger there, and ED POU knew how to do that. As we travel along, there are meadows where dreams come true, and ED POU found them many times, and so have you. And along the journey there are fields where the four-leaf clovers grow; they are the prizes of this life; and ED POU found them many times, and so have you. As we journey along, always upward, there comes always the call of the crest; and when you reach it, there is another ascent and another crest and another call, and so the journey is always upward until there comes a call at the last crest, and it comes always from the uttermost places that lie at the back of the sun. Some hear it early in life, some late in life, when they have had much of service back of them, as ED POU had, but it comes sooner or later to all. It is the great adventure of this life; and when we hear it, we slip our anchors and sail away over unknown seas to an unknown shore where at anchor lie the craft of those of our friends who have gone before.

Over the grave of EDWARD WILLIAM POU may the snows of winter lie light; over his grave may the winds of winter blow low; over his grave may the birds throughout the long summer days to come sing always their sweetest songs.

Good night, old friend, good night!

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Selection by the quartet.

Mr. SNELL. The death of EDWARD W. POU casts gloom over his colleagues in the House of Representatives. Not only was he dean in length of service in the House of Representatives but he was dean as well in the true affections of its Members.

In the beginning of the Sixty-fifth Congress I was assigned to the Rules Committee. Mr. POU was its chairman, and from the very first I learned to admire and respect him. His character, ability, and personal charm attracted me. This early friendship matured and ripened during the intervening 18 years and will always remain with me as a cherished memory.

As I served under Mr. POU when he was Chairman of the Rules Committee, likewise he was the ranking minority member of that committee during the 8 years I was its chairman; yet during the 14 years we were on that committee together, never was there the slightest misunderstanding, although many times we were impelled to take opposing positions at the committee table and on the floor of the House.

It fell to our lot, his and mine, to oppose each other more frequently in debate, I dare say, than any other two Members, on account of the necessity of presenting our party's respective positions. But, party considerations aside, we seldom disagreed on fundamentals.

The last time I talked with Mr. POU, just a few days ago, he referred to our long and pleasant association on the Rules Committee.

ED POU was more than just an ordinary Member. His influence was more than just what he said in debate. His constituents recognized this in keeping him here to serve them. He was fast approaching the record set by the late Gilbert N. Haugen for the longest continuous service in the House. This long service, his personal charm, and his fine ability just naturally spread a stabilizing influence over all with whom he came in contact.

In these troublous times the country can ill afford to lose a man of the fine character and mental equipment of our friend POU. To me he represented in his everyday life the highest type of the twentieth-century American manhood.

I am proud to say he was my friend. I deeply regret his passing.

On Easter Morning he left us. The birds and flowers of awakening life are singing his requiem. And if we believe that there shall be a resurrection and a reunion, we shall meet him again.

Selection by the quartet.

The CHAPLAIN. And now, unto Him who is able to keep you from falling and present you faultless before the presence of His glory with great joy, unto the only wise God, our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. And now may grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit abide with us and keep us always. Amen and Amen.

The Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court and the Vice President and Members of the United States Senate retired from the Chamber.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE OR UNEMPLOYMENT RESERVES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask that there be printed in full in the RECORD resolutions of the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts memorializing Congress for the enactment of legislation to promote the establishment of unemployment insurance or unemployment reserves in the several States by providing certain tax relief to employers in those States which have appropriate laws in this regard.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions memorializing Congress for legislation to promote the establishment of unemployment insurance or unemployment reserves in the several States by providing certain tax relief to employers in those States which have appropriate laws in this regard

Whereas the House of Representatives of Massachusetts, being mindful of the need for protecting the lives and bettering the opportunities of the people of Massachusetts by establishing a system of unemployment insurance or reserves, is desirous also of keeping the manufacturers and other employers in this Commonwealth free from any possible unfair competition at the hands of employers in those States which do not require contributions to such unemployment insurance funds or reserves: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the said house of representatives does hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to enact into law Senate Joint Resolution 26 of the last session, or such other appropriate legislation as may be proposed, for permitting employers in those States which have enacted suitable provisions for compulsory unemployment insurance or reserves, to deduct from their United States income-tax payments a substantial portion of their respective contributions toward the maintaining of the said systems of unemployment insurance or reserves; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this Commonwealth.

FURLOUGHS IN THE POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask that there be printed in full in the RECORD resolutions of the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in opposition to the proposed imposition of a one day's furlough each month on certain employees in the Postal Service.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions in opposition to the proposed imposition of a one day's furlough each month on certain employees in the Postal Service of the United States

Whereas it is an established principle in the modern financing of governments that their budgets should be balanced by providing additional revenue or by retrenchment in expenditures; and

Whereas direct or indirect reduction in the pay of Government employees should not be resorted to for such purpose until all other available means have been exhausted and, when resorted to, should be so effected that the burden resulting therefrom will be laid on all classes of employees equally as nearly as may be; and

Whereas it appears that the imposition of one day furloughs each month upon certain United States postal employees, in violation of the foregoing principles, is contemplated: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts desires to be recorded in opposition to the imposition as aforesaid of any such furloughs; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth forthwith forward copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States of America, to the Postmaster General thereof, and to the presiding officers of both branches of the Congress and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

In house of representatives, adopted, March 27, 1934.

EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL IN ANTITRUST CASES

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3209. I will say, in a word, that the bill for which I ask consideration has been reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee. In brief, the situation is this: There is a statute under the terms of which no attorney may be employed by the Department of Justice in the prosecution of any case by the Government if he has pending any cases against the Government. The Department of Justice has initiated, or is about to initiate, proceedings against a certain company for the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law. It desires to employ Mr. Frank K. Nebeker, who has had large experience in former administrations, both Republican and Democratic, in the enforcement of the antitrust laws. It sent down a bill which the Judiciary Committee has reported, which permits the employment of Mr. Nebeker in the prosecution of this case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3209) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in the case of United States of America against the Weirton Steel Co. and other cases was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing in sections 109 and 113 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", approved March 4, 1909, as amended (U.S.C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203), or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U.S.C., title 5, sec. 99), or in any other act of Congress forbidding officers or employees or former officers or employees of the United States from acting as counsel, attorney, or agent for another before any court, department, or branch of the Government or from receiving or agreeing to receive compensation therefor, shall be deemed to apply to attorneys or counselors to be specially employed, retained, or appointed by the Attorney General or under authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the prosecution of the case of United States of America against Weirton Steel Co., and/or any other case or cases, civil or criminal, involving said company, its officers or agents, arising under the National Industrial Recovery Act or any code of fair competition adopted pursuant thereto.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent to have the letter from the Attorney General appearing in the report filed with the bill printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 27, 1934.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It is deemed essential to the proper conduct of the case of the United States against The Weirton Steel Co. that special counsel of national standing and professional ability be retained. To meet this necessity it is desired to appoint Mr. Frank K. Nebeker, a lawyer of distinction, formerly assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, but now engaged in the practice of the law in Washington, D.C. His association with the Government's cause in the Weirton case would, it is believed, lend great aid to the conduct thereof. In his practice Mr. Nebeker represents clients who have claims against the Government and who may have claims in the future. If he is to be specially employed in behalf of the Government, as I propose, and at the same time continue to represent the clients referred to, it will be necessary for Congress to exempt him by special statute from the operation of the provisions of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. I enclose herewith a bill to effectuate this result and request that you introduce it and endeavor to secure its passage. I shall very much appreciate as prompt action in the matter as you are able to give it.

Sincerely yours,

HOMER CUMMINGS,
Attorney General.

DR. WILLIAM A. WIRT

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement recently printed in the New York Times, written by Charles Hall Davis, of Petersburg, Va., in which he discusses the statement of Dr. William Wirt which has aroused Nation-wide interest.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Dr. Wirt's statement has aroused Nationn-wide interest, not merely because of his reference to Kerensky and Stalin but because a large number of thoughtful citizens who believe in the American plan and theory of government are seriously alarmed at the continuing and increasing concentration of power in the Federal Government and the scrapping of constitutional limitations on governmental powers.

These citizens recognize that the avowed strategy of the socialist school of thought is gradually to concentrate all power in government and then seize the government and administer it, not in the interest of all the people but of a class described as "the proletariat." They recognize that the present program, whether so intended or not, is aiding and furthering the plans of the socialist school of thought and is helping to make possible a political coup that may at one fell stroke destroy the American Republic and end individual and political liberty.

The Socialist platform of 1904 (official document issued by the national committee, Socialist Party, pp. 307, 308, 309) sets forth that the organization is not American, but is world-wide. It "pledges fidelity to the principles of international socialism." It contains the following:

"To the end that the workers may seize every possible advantage that may strengthen them to gain complete control of the powers of government and thereby the sooner establish the cooperative commonwealth, the Socialist Party pledges itself to watch and work" for certain so-called "legislative reforms." The platform then proceeds to state:

"But in so doing"—that is, urging these legislative reforms—"we are using these remedial measures as means to the one great end of the cooperative commonwealth. Such measures of relief as we may be able to force from capitalism are but a preparation of the workers to seize the whole powers of government in order that they may thereby lay hold of the whole system of industry. * * *" (Italics inserted.)

I have been a Democrat all my life and voted for Mr. Roosevelt. I cast that vote with full knowledge that when the President took office he would place his hand on the Holy Scriptures and take a solemn oath that he would "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States." Reforms in government were urgently needed, but the powers of the President and of Congress were limited by the Constitution, which every Member of Congress has sworn to support.

I did not vote to make Mr. Roosevelt a benevolent despot, but I voted for a President under a representative, constitutional government. The principle of limitations on governmental powers in the hands of agents, as safeguarded by the Constitution of the United States, must be enforced if individual and political liberty is to be maintained and if the rights of man are to be preserved.

The perpetuation of our constitutional government is transcendently important to the American people and to the world; and the temporary control of the administration of national affairs by Democrats or Republicans is of small importance as compared with the preservation of the national birthright of liberty, bequeathed to us by the fathers and framers.

I hold no brief on behalf of Dr. Wirt, but I agree with him that the question of the identity of the man who made the reference to Kerensky and Stalin is of minor importance. The real problem should not be camouflaged by a discussion of personalities; and the issues are too tremendous to be evaded or whitewashed by Congress or to be ridiculed by the press, in the effort to pigeonhole them and thereby lull the American people into a disregard of the present danger to the Republic.

Many of us have feared, and still fear, that the present administration's policies, if continued, will ultimately result in an American Socialist, Communist, Soviet, or Fascist state in place of a constitutional republic. We have not described the menace in terms of Kerensky and Stalin, though we have been alive to the danger of a soviet republic as a result of nationally regimented and coded industry and of the increasing combination and concentration of executive, legislative, and judicial functions in bureaucratic appointees of the President. Many of us still believe in the Constitution of the United States and still cling to the idea expressed by the Supreme Court in an earlier day, when it said:

"The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men at all times and under all circumstances. No doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government. Such a doctrine leads directly to anarchy or despotism. * * * The theory of necessity on which it is based is false." (Supreme Court in Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 1.)

It matters little who made the statement to Dr. Wirt about Kerensky and Stalin. It matters much whether the Republic is in danger.

Congress, the President, and the courts are on trial before the American people as their creators and masters. We want to know whether they are endangering the governmental structure for the preservation of human rights and liberty temporarily intrusted to their administration. We want to know how they justify their apparent disregard of the constitutional limitations imposed on them by their creators and masters.

They have not been given a blanket power to act as benevolent despots, nor has the United States been turned over to them for the purpose of testing out the governmental theories of a "brain trust" group.

The American people as a whole still value individual and political liberty. They still believe that unalienable individual rights are an endowment or gift from the Creator and that the Federal Government, as a limited agent created by them, can restrain the exercise of those rights only to the extent authorized by the constitutional intrustment. The Constitution, as a limitation on governmental powers, is neither a joke nor a mere scrap of paper.

Principles, not personalities, are at stake. Our rulers are not sacrosanct or above public criticism. And the new horde of Federal bureaucrats are not yet sufficiently entrenched in power to enable them to avoid an accounting by ridicule, by criticizing a phrase or by crucifying its author.

CHARLES HALL DAVIS.

PETERSBURG, VA., March 28, 1934.

ON BEING BURNED IN EFFIGY

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] advises the Chair that he desires to rise to a question of personal privilege. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask that the clerk may read an Associated Press dispatch which appeared during my absence from the Senate. I ask the attention of Senators to the reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

HUEY LONG BURNED IN EFFIGY

LOUISVILLE, March 30.—As a display of their resentment at Senator HUEY P. LONG'S verbal attack on Col. E. R. Bradley, Kentucky turfman, a group of trainers, exercise boys, and race-track habitues last night hanged and burned the Louisiana Senator in effigy on a vacant lot near the Churchill Downs race track here.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it seems that there is some necessity that I acquaint the race-track habitues with facts of which they possibly have no knowledge. I was going to leave it to the sworn testimony that would be presented to the Committee on Finance tomorrow to substantiate things I said on the floor of the Senate the other afternoon. But inasmuch as in their haste to have this matter decided some have seen fit to give considerable publicity to certain activities had by such processes as I have had read at the desk, I am going to have to take the time of the Senate, in order that I may show to the Senate this morning from written publications and documents, all of which are unfriendly to me, that everything I said on the floor of the Senate is true and correct and not to be contradicted by anybody.

I am not going to rely upon anything that is not good evidence. I am not going to rely upon any evidence except such as comes from anti-Long sources, but I am going to give the Senate evidence, first, that the chief racketeer and gambler of the United States is E. R. Bradley; second, that his partner in the business is Col. John P. Sullivan; and, third, that John P. Sullivan is in charge of the internal-revenue business in the State of Louisiana.

I first have the pleasure of reading from that great nationally known publication, Collier's Weekly, a Morgan magazine, from the issue of February 26, 1927. I read at page 15 of that issue from a special article by Mr. Owen P. White published in Collier's Weekly, which has been known to be violently unfriendly to me. From page 15 I read as follows:

They lose and like it.

Being separated from your money at the "Beach Club" is as painless as having your hair cut. Here's how it is done.

They call it the Beach Club, but as the only beach near this gilded emporium of chance is the one of the souvenir postcard (the real ocean being a mile and a half away), the people who know the place best—and the most to their sorrow—merely speak of it with feeling as Bradley's.

I hope my friends will pay particular attention to this national publication which is sponsored by the Morgans & Co. and try to realize that we are listening to a house of high finance dealing with their brother member, who probably is a great deal better than any of the partners they have in the business so far as I have any knowledge. I do not mean to denounce Mr. Bradley. I am merely showing that he is interested in the fraternity as one of the brethren.

I go a little further:

Of course, I am talking about Bradley's, of Palm Beach, and I am quite positive that anyone who has been there, either as a looker-on or a comer-on—

Some of the Senators probably do not understand what that means, and I do not either. I have not been in that place myself—

Either as a looker-on or a comer-on, and who has likewise strayed into similar establishments in other corners of the world, as I have, will agree with me when I say that it is the sportiest and classiest gambling house in the world.

I am sorry my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is not here at the moment. "The swankiest, largest, and sportiest gambling house in the world." Let us go a little further dealing with this great citizen who raises race horses in Kentucky and, therefore, became good:

It's strange the way they do it. But down at Bradley's you lose and you like it! There's something anaesthetic about the Bradley atmosphere that renders the operation of separating a man from his money as painless as a hair cut, and enables a player to sit up and watch his cash dribble away from him with as much nonchalance as if he owned a mint, and as if nobody had ever invented such an unpleasant thing as the first of the month.

The very attendants around the place make a piker feel like a plutocrat. His slightest wish is gratified even before he begins to realize that he had one. He feels like smoking, and a flunky in the rear begins to light matches. He is going to be thirsty (he doesn't realize it himself, but a psychological expert, 10 paces in the rear, has analyzed the symptoms and rushed for the ice water), and when the dryness appears so does the drink.

They do everything the same way.

This was in the prohibition days of 1927, and this was Mr. Bradley's policy in the casino as reported by Morgan's magazine.

They do everything the same way. Even the dealer on the other side of the table says "Thank you", as he rakes in your contribution after each turn of the wheel or each flip of the card. It's a nice place, this Bradley's of Palm Beach. Theoretically—

I hope Senators will understand this, because I find in the Senate that steadily day by day we are groping and forgetting the law, and we are not keeping abreast with our knowledge of jurisprudence and the statutes as they have existed and as they now exist; so I hope the Senate will catch this point vividly as I read from this illustrious magazine about this wonderful sportsman who is now recommending the political appointments and representing the gambling interests in Louisiana and on back over toward the coast.

Theoretically—

Said this magazine article, and it is theoretically—

Theoretically it is against the law to run a gambling house in the State of Florida. But what difference does that make? A mere unsupported theory hasn't any more chance to stand up against Mr. Bradley's million-dollar-a-season industry than the patrons of his games have of walking away with the bank. But, being a law-abiding citizen—

That is, running a gambling house down there and serving drinks.

Being a law-abiding citizen—

And he is about as law abiding as Morgan & Co. They are all in the same class. This initiates him into the lodge.

But, being a law-abiding citizen, Mr. Bradley allows the theory to remain undisturbed and calls his place a "club" instead of a gambling house. There are those who say that he cheerfully distributes—

I hope Senators will get this:

There are those who say he cheerfully distributes half a million a year—which is charged to expense and contributed by the suckers—among the needy Florida politicians who will do him the most good.

There has not been any burning in effigy done about this. This is a complimentary article written about Mr. Bradley.

This report, however, cannot be confirmed.

Becoming a member of Mr. Bradley's "club", however, isn't like joining the Elks or securing membership in a Rotary Club. Not at all. In order to secure the privilege of getting plucked, along with the socially elite who foregather around the gambling tables in Mr. Bradley's exclusive establishment, all that the ambitious one has to do is to get some previous sufferer to introduce him as a candidate for sacrifice who can pay his losses and who won't squeal.

I am omitting a little because I have not time to read all of the article. We find where the charity of this man comes into the picture. I shall certainly not read the fair in this article without reading the very good. This is all intended as a compliment to him. It is written here as a creditable article. It is written to give him standing, and it does give him standing. Among the creditable things, in order to show his great charity, they throw this little paragraph in.

I have not had time to read the article in full, and I shall probably offer it at the end of my remarks to be printed in full in the RECORD.

Mr. Bradley must have read my thoughts, for he said—

Get this, Mr. President, because this shows the charity of the man—

"When a man dies owing me any money, I tear up the slips and forget it."

That is very remarkable. This great big gambling-house man tears up the slips when a man dies—and that is charity of the first order. Talk about the tribe of Abou Ben Adhem increasing. Talk about his having been told that he would be remembered as having loved his fellow man. But never will anyone find a greater case of love for one's fellow man than this instance of the man who tears up the slips when someone dies owing him money.

Wonderful! Wonderful recommendation that this man has! He gives the reason, however, and I will read the reason. I am glad to do it. He gives the reason for this charity:

When a man dies owing me any money, I tear up the slips and forget it.

Now, why? He says:

One died the other day. * * * That debt is now off the books.

Why the charity? Here is where the heart of the man is seen in its best and truest light:

I can't ask his people for it, because maybe his family didn't know of his weakness. * * * The law doesn't recognize a gambling debt.

And so the good, true, honest, righteous Kentucky sportsman tears up the slips, because the law does not recognize the debt! [Laughter.] I submit that is positive proof that no one can say that this man is not entitled to his place in the sun.

I do not want to have any doubt about this matter. Inasmuch as I have been burned in effigy on this account, I send to the desk and ask to have the clerk read the main article published in Miami Life, Miami, Fla., March 31, 1934, beginning with "Our tourist crop." I should like to have it read very clearly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the article will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Our tourist crop yielded $100,000,000 this season. Think of it—a hundred million dollars! But where are our profits? Figured in a most conservative manner, Miami and the county of Dade should be enriched at least $10,000,000. But where is it? This paper will tell you. Your banker will confirm us.

A handful of men who've done the same thing for the last three seasons walked away with the substantial part of the 1934 profit. With the close of the racing season they are taking it North in the same big bag, just the same as they did in 1933 and in 1932, only the bag is heavier. There are $3,000,000 in the bag this year, perhaps more.

And the two men—just two men, mind you—who together have most of it—just two men, mind you, with all that wealth that a few weeks in Miami this season brought them—are the fastidious Mr. Joey E. Widener (of the main-line Philadelphia Wideners, a self-professed sportsman) and his 50–50 partner, Col. E. R. Bradley, of Palm Beach and Louisville, the most notorious gambler in the United States.

Mr. Joe E. Widener, mind you, who never gave a tinker's dam about Miami until he saw race-track profits here that he did not have a hand in, and Colonel Bradley, who has always despised Miami, even to the extent of keeping everything here "closed" as long as he possibly could (even enjoined horse racing here in 1928, through Attorney Jim Carson, now his attorney at the track), and whose tie-up with the fastidious Mr. Widener at Hialeah enables him to shift the "cream" of the very wealthy gamblers to his casino at Palm Beach, the Everglades Club.

Almost a third of the $100,000,000 turned loose by tourists in Dade County in the season just ending was in gambling alone. The two horse tracks and the dog tracks showed $27,000,000 through the pari mutuels over the State—more than $22,000,000 in Dade County alone. Other gambling (unauthorized) raises the Dade total easily to $30,000,000.

For permitting which Dade County gets back from the State's 3-percent levy $14,000. Fourteen thousand dollars return from $30,000,000—a tax so infinitesimally small it strains our mentality to compute it. We 28,000 voters, who in 1931 gave this handful of men the privilege of handling millions of dollars in betting money, didn't know what we were doing. For we 28,000 voters are today, for the most part, broke. Our county is broke. Our municipalities are bankrupt. We are overtaxed, overcharged, and, instead of seeing relief in sight, we are contemplating even greater burdens—taxing of our occupations, taxing our garbage cans even, anything to keep up our growing pay rolls. While the handful of men, the real proprietors of the race tracks, are rich—and growing richer each season. Growing wealthier on our only "crop"—and we growing poorer. There was never anything like it in the United States.

Gambling, now that it has become almost a necessity in Miami's existence, should be, must be, our slave, not our master. When it does become our master, it must go, and will go, just as the old saloon did when it began controlling people instead of the people controlling it.

We already know enough, too much, about gamblers in Florida becoming masters, and the wholesale buying of the 1931 legislature by the interests we speak of has a most unpleasant ring in our ears yet.

Gambling is almost a necessity, for it would be hard to adjust ourselves to a different condition. We are the focal point for a hysterical gambling wave that is sweeping all over America, with prospects of a sanctioned national lottery looming.

Miami has become, in the public mind, the Monte Carlo of America. But, alas, it is a Monte Carlo of impoverished, bankrupt natives, who are not even seeking their rightful share of the bounty. Sinking deeper in the mire of debt, we furnish the Monte Carlo setting, the scenery, the props, the lights, the come-on ballyhoo—and let a handful of strangers walk away at each season's end with not part of the profits—but all!

This cannot go on. Sounds simple to say—but it is the truth. It cannot go on.

Permitting what we are permitting, what we have permitted, not a resident of Dade County should be broke today. Not a propertyholder in Dade County should have to pay taxes. Talk of municipally owned light and power plants—why, here we have a municipally controlled (supposedly) gambling institution, which could pay all our light bills for us, in addition to assuming our taxes, and scarcely miss it—still permitting the gambling directors to make a nice profit.

We 28,000 voters just can't take it any longer.

We've got to get our deserved share of the pari mutuel profits now being carried northward by a small handful of men, whose main interest in Miami is only what they can take out of it, not put into it.

We 28,000 voters deserve, should demand, enough percentage of this $22,000,000 gambling pot at least to free our county and all its municipalities from debt.

For we are 28,000 important, most important, shareholders in the race tracks of Dade County or else—

Nothing can stop us from ruling every one of these privately owned tracks out of existence. And from building a municipally owned horse track and a municipally owned dog track in our city limits—and taking the 10-percent "kitty" ourselves—.

And making Dade County tax-free forever, a county free from poverty.

Figures—Mutuel play

Hialeah Park	$11,600,000
Tropical	5,500,000
Dogs (estimated)	5,000,000
Total	22,100,000

Dade County's share of 3-percent levy of State upon total $14,000. $27,000,000

(And each of the 66 other counties receiving likewise.)

Say, $100,000 was bet on the first race through the pari mutuel machines and the betters continued on through, here is the way the $100,000 would dwindle, and the "kitty" (the 10-percent "take") would increase:

Race	Bet	"Take"
First	$100,000	$10,000
Second	90,000	9,000
Third	81,000	8,100
Fourth	72,900	7,290
Fifth	65,610	6,561
Sixth	59,049	5,904
Seventh	53,145	5,314
Eighth	47,831	4,783
Ninth	43,048	4,304
Tenth	38,744	3,874
Total	35,000	65,000

Leaving the betters of $100,000 approximately $35,000 to take back home (not counting what they've spent in the track).

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I now wish the Senate to pay specific attention as I read from another newspaper violently opposed to me and friendly to Mr. John P. Sullivan and Mr. E. R. Bradley. I am about to read from the New Orleans States, of New Orleans, La., Friday evening, February 9, 1934, for the purpose of proving that Bradley and Sullivan are partners in the gambling business.

"Service" to "bookies" on New Orleans races stopped.
Order, laid to politics, permits town betting on other tracks.

In order that the Senators may understand this, because I have studied it a little bit, I will state what the article is about.

When Bradley and Sullivan's race track opened up, they did not allow any betting on the horse races that they conducted in the poolrooms, in the handbooks, and in the gambling joints around the city of New Orleans. The reason of that is that they allow gambling on those horses themselves out at the race track; and if they should allow the suckers to go and bet at the poolrooms and at the handbooks and at the pawnshops, Bradley and Sullivan would not get a chance to count the money and to assess the brokerage and the little commissions and various and sundry other trimmings that go with that kind of business, from which the money is amassed.

Now I want to read this in order to show in Mr. Sullivan's own words, as quoted in the New Orleans States, that he is the gambling partner of Col. E. R. Bradley, so highly recommended:

The lid was clamped down good and tight on New Orleans horse-race-betting poolrooms Friday. Operators of handbooks were told there would be "nothing doing" in the way of service and "line sheets" from the Daily Racing Form Publishing Co., which is under the same ownership as the General News Bureau, which latter organization furnishes the pool rooms of this country with service on the races. Service means everything that can be of assistance to a race-track better in "playing the ponies", from scratches early in the morning to a "call" on the races during their progress.

While none would be so bold as to express an opinion as to the source of the orders to "lay down" on Fair Grounds racing, it was freely rumored such orders came right from the city hall and through the police department, the Racing Form, and the General News Bureau. Last week word had gone down the line that any poolrooms "dealing" the Fair Grounds races would get themselves in trouble. Most of them thought it was just a gesture intended as a political balm to Col. John P. Sullivan for the latter's support of the old regulars in the city election. But Colonel Sullivan has since proved to the satisfaction of most of those who laid the blame on his doorstep that he is interested in the Fair Grounds only to the extent of seeing the Crescent City Jockey Club meet the notes and interest due him and Col. E. R. Bradley for payment for the Fair Grounds.

I will send this article to the desk and ask to have it printed in full at the conclusion of my remarks. In other words, Mr. Sullivan says, "Bradley and I operated the Fair Grounds, but now we are selling it out, and our only interest at this time—all we want to do—is to get the money owing to me and Bradley for this gambling contrivance that we are supposed to have sold." However, I want to take the view of it that Colonel Sullivan and Mr. Bradley himself allege; but, as is stated by the newspaper, the reason that they closed the handbooks and operated whenever the race track was going was because they thereby forced the people to go into Sullivan's gambling house and Bradley's gambling house and had a closed season for everybody else; not even competition was allowed.

In order to show that that is not an unfair report, I ask that this article of which I have read the first part be printed in full in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. LONG. I ask also that this article from Collier's Weekly be printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. It is the article appearing on page 15 of the issue for February 26, 1927, entitled, "They Lose and Like It."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit B.)

Mr. LONG. I also ask to have printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the article appearing in the Times-Picayune of February 10, 1934, entitled "'Service' Halted on Fair Grounds Races at Bookies—Order Prevents Betting on Local Track Away from Scene."

Discussing the matter, and laying it to politics, and preferences of this particular house.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit C.)

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have another letter that I am going to delay reading just a moment, dealing with Colonel Bradley more extensively, from a very reputable lawyer in the State of Florida; but, as he will be here tomorrow, I shall delay the reading, because I want to bring up the connection of this matter.

I charged, Mr. President, that this was a gambling-house gang. I have proved by their own journals and by their own articles that it is everything that I said here on the floor of the Senate, that this is a bunch of gambling racketeers and gangsters. I am now going to prove to you that they have been put in charge of the Government. I am not going to deal with anything that is evidence that is not fixed evidence; and if any man in the Senate, hearing what I state here that cannot be disputed, that is absolutely fixed evidence, has the slightest doubt hesitating around his mind as to who named D. D. Moore, and as to why he was named, and as to who is running the internal-revenue office in the city of New Orleans, then it will be due to my simple-mindedness in assuming that there are presumptions that I indulge which some others do not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I missed part of the Senator's remarks, and I heard the part where he connected Colonel Sullivan with these charges.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to know if Mr. Moore has been connected with these charges.

Mr. LONG. I am now connecting him.

Mr. TYDINGS. Up to now, Mr. Moore has not figured in the matter.

Mr. LONG. Except that Mr. Moore was sponsored for the appointment by Colonel Sullivan, and that Colonel Sullivan came to the committee room sponsoring him.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I should like to know——

Mr. LONG. Never mind; the Senator is going to get all he needs.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I should like to know is what charges there are against Mr. Moore. He is the man who has been nominated for this office.

Mr. LONG. I will ask the Senator just to sit there 2 minutes and see if he does not get an earful. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. President, since the Senator from Maryland was not here when I began, it is proper that I should say just a word, without losing my train of thought, because I next want to show that Sullivan was conducting Moore's office. That is what I want to show now.

It will not be denied that Mr. D. D. Moore was appointed at the instance and at the suggestion of Col. John P. Sullivan. It will not be denied that when Mr. Moore was up for confirmation before the committee presided over by the able Senator from Kentucky, Mr. John P. Sullivan came into the committee room with Mr. Moore, as his sponsor, and stood there with him, arm to arm, heel to heel, shoulder to shoulder, and cheek to cheek. [Laughter.] That will not be denied. But that is not half of it.

Mr. Moore's office had to be properly organized. How was Mr. Moore's office to be organized? It had to be organized so that it would be run in accordance with the wishes of the man who had sponsored him, who had had him appointed. So they took up case no. 1.

Mr. President, this morning I went to the office of Mr. Guy T. Helvering, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, after I had received a list of those who had been placed upon the pay rolls to conduct the office of the internal-revenue collector of the city of New Orleans. I went to his office this morning and checked over these people to see who they were. What I give is taken from the records of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and from the signed documents which are in his office.

Here is no. 1, a lady by the name of Miss Golden. I make no charges whatever against any of these ladies. I shall simply give the facts as to where they were and where they are now.

I have in my hand a copy of the employment record of Miss Thyra F. Golden, as it appears in Mr. Helvering's office. Who was Miss Thyra F. Golden? According to her own application blank, she said that she was at that time employed in the office of and by Col. John P. Sullivan. She says on that blank, "I am resigning the job with Colonel Sullivan to take this position." Her application blank contains the references of some of Mr. Sullivan's employees in his office, and none others. The notary on the application blank is Mr. David Sessler, a lawyer in the office of John P. Sullivan. That is no. 1.

Now I come to no. 2, in order that this office may be properly qualified a la Sullivan-Bradley gambling houses, and everything that might be known to the kingdom of graft and gambling and swindling in the South. No. 1 I have given. No. 2 we find is Miss Pearl Maretzky. Miss Pearl Maretzky states in her application blank that she is an employee of Col. John P. Sullivan. Mr. Sullivan acted as the notary on her application, and put his name on it, or she put on his name as one of the references, and she was promptly employed. The blank is dated the 16th day of October 1932.

It seems that a little bit later Mr. Sullivan began to get wise to the fact that he was doing this thing a little bit too boldly, that he was rather too flagrantly saying on the application blank, "I am resigning this job with Colonel Sullivan for this position which I am applying for." The application blank, notarized by Colonel Sullivan, did not say, "I have resigned, and I have applied for a job", but the blank which Mr. Sullivan notarized and on which he was a reference, said, "I am resigning to take this position." There was nobody passing on it unless it was Mr. D. D. Moore, in the office at the same time, because at the same time the notary put on his seal, on the application blank filled out in his office with Sullivan as a notary, the applicant said, "I am resigning this job and taking the other." Does anybody have any doubt that she was doing it?

A little bit later Mr. Sullivan decided to put no. 3 in the office. He had three of them. He got a little bit more "cagey." He took Miss Evelyn Flattery. Let me put it in language that will not be disputed.

Miss Evelyn Flattery applied for a job in the Office of the Internal Revenue Collector of Louisiana, and she gave Col. John P. Sullivan as a reference. Mr. Sullivan acted as the notary public on her application blank, but on that application blank she listed the fact that she was an employee of Mr. A. S. Cain. Mr. A. S. Cain, as everybody knows, is employed in a concern with or under Colonel Sullivan; but Sullivan undertook to disguise the fact this time that he was putting them in there from his office, just checkerboarding them right in there to take charge of the office. So he put on there that Miss Evelyn Flattery, instead of being his own employee was an employee of Mr. A. S. Cain. I have here the New Orleans city directory for the year 1933, and it contains the name of Miss Evelyn Flattery. It says:

Flattery, Evelyn M., sec. John P. Sullivan, r. 222 Atherton dr.

Here is the New Orleans city directory for the year 1933, in which this lady was listed as the secretary of John P. Sullivan. He was a little bit more "cagey." He made her the employee of an employee, with him as reference, and with him as the notary public.

Three out of three! Three stenographers and secretaries in a law office, and all three of them leaving that office to go over to help take charge of the internal-revenue office in the State of Louisiana. Who doubts it now? But that is not half of it. It is just going back to the kitchen to get a little fire, just the beginning. We have not even shot from taw yet.

They did not stop with that. You do not know that gang. They did not budge, they did not wince.

Here is something I want to have go into the RECORD just before I go another step. I want this little extract from the New Orleans city directory to go in the RECORD so that he who reads may know that it is strictly carried out in the words of the spirit in the city directory. I send the directory to the desk in order that it may go in just as it appears in the directory.

Mr. President, before going further to present matters which will confirm everything I have said about this man, I want to send to the desk clippings from papers which are against me politically and personally. The first one to which I refer was not saying much about me for a while, but it got back in line after a little while. Listen to this:

Gamble finds easy victims in knee pants.
Handbooks operated in the public and parochial institutions.
Young bookies take bets of comrades.
Juvenile plungers always have recourse to usual operators.

It tells how they scientifically conducted a regular school throughout that city, through which they reached down into all the schoolrooms of the city and taught the children from 5 years of age up the art and science of betting on the race track that has been run by that gang of gamblers in New Orleans.

I ask to have this article printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit D.)

Mr. LONG. I send up an article at the same time from the Times-Picayune, the other paper printed in the city of New Orleans, of May 27, 1922, with the headline:

Race gamble denounced by school board.

I ask to have this article printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit E.)

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in order that there may be no doubt about it, here is another article, printed on May 21, 1923, quoting the Times-Picayune, so that we have both together:

SULLIVAN SILENT ON SLAM BY T.-P.—AT LEAST TODAY

"I don't care to discuss the matter—today", said Col. John P. Sullivan, when queried Monday concerning an editorial criticism appearing in Saturday's Times-Picayune.

That part of the editorial criticizing Colonel Sullivan reads:

"Is it because John P. Sullivan has attended too constantly and obsequiously upon the Governor's footsteps?"

That was when Governor Parker was Governor of Louisiana—

"And with too much profit and prominence to himself?

"That, too, is a small reason, for John's battalions are in disarray, and he is not the stuff of which permanent commanders are made. The possibility of his continued great captaincy in New Orleans was exchanged for a B.M.R.A. fee, and Carrollton and the barracks were set as bounds to his influence by its acceptance."

I have other clippings, but it will not be necessary to read them.

Now I go a little further. I want to show that they have not stopped by just taking charge of that office. I want to show that with the most conscienceless robbery, the most unbridled effrontery and rottenness that have ever been known, the institution led by this clique has reached down to pick the bones of destitute home owners of this country, and I am now going to prove it by evidence in writing.

Somebody asked if Sullivan was not once a friend of mine. It may be said all to my glory that he was trying to impeach me 10 months after I had been elected Governor of the State. At least, if he were my friend, he could not stand my kind of government more than 10 months and has not been able to stand me since.

Mr. President, I cannot give proof of what I am about to say in writing, but I have a witness who will testify tomorrow that there was a certain employee, at the least, who was in the internal-revenue office, and Mr. Sullivan himself transferred him to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation operated in New Orleans under Paul B. Habons, whom the public press said was appointed at the instance of Col. John P. Sullivan, Bradley's partner. It is a matter of public record that this appointment was made by Mr. Sullivan. I will have a witness here to testify tomorrow, if he does not die tonight, and he will swear, Mr. President, as to the transfer that was made out of the internal-revenue office into the office of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

What have they done with the home owners in New Orleans? I have here, Mr. President, a letter that has been admitted to be true in the public press by many of the parties who were affected. Listen to me while I tell you the rottenest graft that has ever been perpetrated on a suffering people. There were building and loan or homestead associations in existence in Louisiana. The stock of the building and loan associations had gone down to where it was not worth more than 25 or 30 or 50 cents on the dollar. In other words, the Homesteads had loaned their money to people to buy their homes; and their stock, by reason of the depression, had gone down to where it was only worth from 25 to 50 cents on the dollar. In comes the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. They put Sullivan's man in charge of that corporation. Then did they loan a man the money to take up his home loan? Here is how they loaned it to him. They organized various and sundry concerns that are being operated, Mr. President, by some of the very men or henchmen of men who were appraisers in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and some in which Mr. Paul B. Habons himself has a direct interest in, and in some of which other henchmen of Sullivan's are officers and directors of interposed corporations, who go out and buy this stock for 25 or 30 or 40 cents on the dollar, and then they take that stock to the Homesteads, and they swap the stock dollar for dollar for the amount that the man owes on his home, or that the home is supposed to have cost him in the first place.

The home-loan bank sits right by at the same time so that the Homestead cashes its stock at from 50 cents down to 25 cents for the obligation, and the Government gives the interposed corporation 100 cents on the dollar of home-loan stock, and the Homestead takes its half and the interposed person or corporation takes the other half. So that when a home owner borrows $4,000, $2,000 of the stock goes to building and loan corporation, which takes over the home, and $2,000 goes to the friends and henchmen of the Sullivan swindling organizations that have been set up in that city.

Do we need doubt it? It is done right out in the open. What else does one expect with such a thing going on in this country?

Here is a letter from a poor little old school teacher who had taught school all her life. She is 56 years old, a poor little old unmarried woman, struggling all her life to buy a home. I read the letter:

My loan was for $3,638.70 from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I signed as I did because I was told Washington wanted it done that way to get the loan.

People are called in and told that Washington wants it done that way. I do not know, Mr. President, what part of Washington she is talking about, but there are some people up here whom I would not put it past to do just that thing. She is told that Washington wants it done that way.

I don't know anything about the matter except that I was to get an extension on the loan through the Home Loan. There was supposed to have been some charges for taxes, insurance for 3 years, etc., but I never got any receipt for any of it, and when Washington wrote for them I went to Mr. Levy, of the Home Loan, and he said that they had the receipts. I do not yet understand the reasons for all matters.

ALMA BAUM.

In this instance, Mr. President, we have not been able to find the exact amount of the rake-down. It amounts to a considerable amount of money, probably $1,000 or probably $600. But I have the letter from this lady to back up my statement.

I have a letter which was sent out by the State bank commissioner of the State of Louisiana, whose department had supervisory jurisdiction over the homesteads in Louisiana.

The practice I referred to became so rotten that the State banking department published a letter, which I am about to read, in the newspapers on this past Sunday, and coincident with the publication of this letter there were statements admitting that that kind of practice to some extent was going on, and they undertook to put on an air of injured innocence, and would make an investigation, when as a matter of fact those scoundrels were the ones who were doing the thing complained of, and were organizing interposing organizations, and they are in those organizations today. I can call the names of some of them if it would do any good. Some of those who are in the interposing organizations are appraisers. They will go out and give any kind of appraisals they want to give, because all they have to do is to buy the stock in the homesteads at the price of 30 to 50 cents on the dollar; and after they get it, it goes up to 100 cents on the dollar simply by the operation of appraising the property at $8,000 and buying $8,000 worth of stock at 50 cents on the dollar and making the Government spend the balance.

Does anyone mean to tell me that such is not a penitentiary offense? Does anyone undertake to say that those scoundrels ought not to be in the jailhouse today?

Here is what the State bank commissioner said in his letter dated March 31, 1934:

To all homesteads and building-and-loan associations in Louisiana:

Our understanding of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was that it was to be used solely to help home owners save their homes or to recover them. It has become now generally known that persons or concerns run by them set up a scheme by which they get hold of stock of homestead companies at the market price, say, or from 25 cents to 50 cents on the dollar; that previous arrangement—

Listen to this statement. The truth of the letter is not disputed. On the contrary, it is admitted that it is true by both the newspaper publications I have referred to, by statements from other people which they have published, in which it is said that the practice should be corrected. I read further—

That previous arrangement is made for an appraisal on some home mortgaged to a homestead, or already surrendered to it in settlement of a mortgage; that then the loan is executed at the same time as the several transfers of the home is transferred finally coming from the homestead to the home owner, so that the homestead gets, say, $5,000 of its own stock, bought for $2,500—

Maybe less than that—and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation issues $5,000 of bonds, and the interposed person, or concern, manipulating it gets the extra $2,500 of the Home Loan funds.

That, Mr. President, is what is going on, and we cannot expect anything else to go on with this kind of situation prevailing in Louisiana. We cannot expect it to be any better than it is. The State bank commissioner further says:

This kind of transaction has been repeated without number, organizations to extend the scheme are springing up, and a fraud the like of which we have never seen is rampant in this State.

We hereby order hereafter, therefore, that no such thing be done as an exchange of stock of a homestead for property to be used as the basis of a loan from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or for any other purpose and we shall ask investigation of this specie by the Government as far as it has gone.

Yours truly,

J. S. BROCK,
State Bank Commissioner.

Here is a letter written by the State bank commissioner, a copy of which I have, and which letter was published by the newspapers. The letter was sent to all public officials of the State of Louisiana, and I understand it was sent to the two United States Senators. The letter is as follows, dated March 31, 1934:

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIRS: We enclose you a copy of letter showing the rampant fraud being perpetrated here on which we ask your investigation and action. May we hear from you?

Yours truly,

J. S. BROCK,
State Bank Commissioner.

Mr. President, I do not want to take up very much more of the time of the Senate. I think I have proved the case about as thoroughly as it can possibly be proved by written and undisputed testimony. I do wish to show to the Senate a little more, in order to indicate that I have not overstated what has been going on there.

We have a barge-line service operated by the United States Shipping Board. I send to the desk and ask to have read by the clerk a newspaper item.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

FITZPATRICK MAY GET POST—CIVIL-SERVICE OFFICIAL IS SLATED FOR SHIPPING BOARD DIRECTOR

John J. Fitzpatrick, 54 supervisor of the city board of civil-service commissioners since 1929, will be named district director of the United States Shipping Board bureau in New Orleans within the next 2 weeks, it was reported yesterday.

When he was asked about the report, Mr. Fitzpatrick refused to comment. He will replace A. G. Malone and, according to reports, will be succeeded as civil-service supervisor by Henry C. McCarthy, secretary of the board since 1929.

Mr. Fitzpatrick's appointment, it also was reported, will be made through the influence of Col. John P. Sullivan. Colonel Sullivan is a brother-in-law of Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Born in New Orleans, Mr. Fitzpatrick was educated in the public schools of the city. He was the son of the late Maj. John J. Fitzpatrick. He was graduated from the United States Naval Academy and occupied several positions in politics before he became civil-service supervisor, at one time being employed in the office of the tax collector for Orleans Parish and later occupying the post of registrar of conveyances.

Mr. LONG. That Mr. Fitzpatrick was supposed to have held the position of civil-service examiner, having been appointed by the mayor or the city council. Mr. Fitzpatrick formerly set out to run as candidate for office in the city of New Orleans, and was suddenly withdrawn for reasons well known in that city. He has now, however, been found to be thoroughly eligible to take charge of the shipping board because he is a brother-in-law of Mr. John P. Sullivan.

I looked through the files to ascertain if any other persons had been recommended by Mr. Sullivan. I found some rather funny things. I found in one instance where the blank contained the query, "State who your representative is and who can speak for you", that there was no reference whatever in the blank in reply to that query, but that Mr. Sullivan was the notary and the party was immediately given the job. There was no reference whatever in the blank to anybody else.

I have here, Mr. President, 12 of the appointments that I took this morning from the files which were submitted to me by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Helvering, all of whom were either recommended by or contained the notarial certificate of Mr. Sullivan or someone in his office, or both.

I also have another letter here, having proved this connection, all of which I stated I would be in a position to do; and I am glad to say that I am able to prove it in writing by the record without having to go to a single living friend of mine for testimony. I have a letter sent to me unsolicited, which I understand, on inquiry, is from a responsible attorney in the city of St. Augustine, Fla. I send the letter to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA., March 31, 1934.

Senator HUEY P. LONG,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing you a hurried note. I am an attorney at St. Augustine, Fla., and was formerly general counsel of United Mine Workers of America of Indiana, and formerly lived at Terre Haute, Ind. I was associated with Charles Evans Hughes in defending the coal conspiracy cases. The Honorable William R. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, or John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, are familiar with me and can tell you about me.

The press reports state that Senator BARKLEY stated on the floor of the Senate that no one in Florida would say anything against Colonel Bradley. I have made an exhaustive study of his life and doings of his past 40 years in Florida, and I will briefly mention a few of the facts:

Ed Bradley was not a "colonel" when in the early nineties he asked the privilege of setting his Fairbank game into Stewart's gambling place in St. Augustine. He then was just a tin-horn gambler. He prospered and is reputed to have done so at Stewart's expense. He then entered into a combination with the then mayor of St. Augustine and another person on the city council to organize a gambling place known as the Bacchus Club.

He operated this club, and the mayor and councilmen were supposed to be silent partners, but at the end of each season he would report to them that the club had shown a loss, or no profits. The money he made at this club was invested in Palm Beach in his "Beach Club", which is one of the famous gambling places in the world. He is operating that now, and it was brilliantly lighted last night. I can substantiate what I have said about Bradley during his operation in St. Augustine by reputable citizens of that city, one of which rented him the house for his club, and another who used to deal cards for him, and crooked cards at that. While in St. Augustine he organized a crew of small gamblers to operate a three-shell game at the expense of the winter tourists in St. Augustine. One oldtimer, who used to work for him, said he used to go up and divide the "swag" by candlelight with Bradley, but that now Bradley will not let him enter the bright lights of the "Beach Club." To get something of the character of this person, he and his brother Jack financed the notorious Dr. Cook in his bogus discovery of the North Pole. Examine the files of the newspapers at the time that Dr. Cook first electrified the world in announcing he had discovered the North Pole. The Bradleys then were glad to get credit for financing this wonderful feat, but they have been strangely silent when Dr. Cook was found to have been a fraud and an imposter. If one will carefully make an unbiased examination of Bradley's career, it will be a sordid story of crooked dealing, fraud, and swindling.

I am calling your attention to the allegations of paragraph 8 of the enclosed third amended bill of complaint, which I filed and which is now pending on demurrer in the circuit court of this county. Bradley used to pay R. C. Baker, as sheriff of this county, the sum of $50,000 a year for "protection" in having a monopoly in gambling rights in Palm Beach.

This arrangement lasted from March 1920 to the time of Baker's death in February 1933. He had certain arrangements with Capt. George Baker, who was sheriff for about 10 years previous.

Capt. George Baker was the father of R. C. Baker. You must know, Senator, that no man can run such a stupendous club without having some understandings with the local authorities. Also publicity would hamper him so that he could not run. For this reason he had to control the two newspapers here, viz, the Palm Beach Post and the Palm Beach Times. In the last few years I know that he advanced to the Palm Beach Post $100,000. I got this from a man on the Post who made the deal with him. Last summer the Post went through bankruptcy and was sold at a trustee's sale, bought by Barry Shannon (Bradley's secretary), who in turn transferred the Post to a new corporation organized by Bradley last month. The new corporation is Palm Beach Publications, Inc., of which Shannon is on the board of directors and Judge E. B. Donnell, his personal attorney, is also on the board. One attorney for the Post (Charles Warwick) told me that Judge Donnell supplied $65,000 to take care of the Post debts.

The Palm Beach Times was owned by a corporation having an authorized common stock of 4,000 shares, of which R. C. Baker owned 3,058 shares and L. R. Baker 406 shares. The R. C. Baker estate owned about six sevenths of the stock issued, as shown by the books of the corporation. R. C. Baker died leaving three little girls as his heirs, children by a former divorced wife, who is their duly appointed guardian. He also left surviving him a second wife who is coadministratrix of his estate. A local bank here is the other administrator appointed at the instance of the children.

Bradley, of course, wished to get control of the Times and gain a complete monopoly of the newspapers here. Owners of gambling joints do not wish stories to get out when men have lost their all and have committed suicide, nor do they care for papers to print pitiful stories of men that have lost their fortunes.

Under our corporation laws of this State, a corporation cannot dispose of all its assets without a majority of the stockholders voting to do so. Bradley, through his various agents and attorneys, persuaded and procured Kathryn Baker, as coadministratrix, to attend a hurried-up stockholders' meeting and pretend to vote 3,058 shares of stock in the name of R. C. Baker, deceased, so that the Times Corporation could and would transfer all its assets, personal and real, including the Times newspaper, over to Bradley's corporation, viz, the Palm Beach Publications, Inc. Now, mark you, this poor woman did this over the violent protest of her coadministrator, who refused to give a proxy or consent to this rank fraud. Now, mark you again, immediately following this crooked piece of business the officers of the Times Corporation executed a bill of sale and a deed to Bradley's new corporation, without the estate getting any benefits or consideration. Through these frauds Bradley has gotten control of all the newspapers here and has robbed three innocent little girls of obtaining any prospective right to inherit their share of stock in this newspaper plant conservatively worth $100,000. Now, mark you, Bradley's new corporation, for all these assets and newspaper, never put so much as one thin dime into the treasury of the Times Corporation as consideration for the things it received and are now trying to grab off a $1,450 deposit to the credit of the Times in a local bank.

I have never tried my case in a newspaper in my life, but please remember, Senator, we have nothing to conceal, but you can appreciate that these two newspapers have been very careful to keep our court proceedings out of all press dispatches. You are at liberty to use this letter in any way you see fit.

Now mark you, Senator, Bradley has so dominated the politics of Palm Beach County for so many years that the mother of these children could not get legal representation in this (Palm Beach) county, and Mr. B. A. Lopez (of Palm Beach County and formerly a deputy for Mr. Baker) came up to St. Augustine and employed me, at the instance of the guardian and mother of these children, to go into this case. If the court dismisses our bill, I am going straight to the Supreme Court of Florida.

The United States Government was about to put an income tax lien against R. C. Baker's property, which would, of course, have attached against these 3,058 shares.

A meeting was had at the El Comodoro Hotel in Miami, and following this conference Baker assigned these shares over to E. R. Bradley under a pretended loan of some $40,000 as a justification for the transfer. Bradley and Baker were in this predicament. About this time Baker paid a fine in the United States Court for violating the income tax law and afterwards made some kind of a pauper's oath to relieve himself of the lien. But Bradley, true to fashion, is still claiming a pledgee's lien against this stock. Bradley does not easily give up when once his hands get hold of something that he wishes.

In all this you will understand Baker and Bradley were in this dilemma. If Bradley reported this $50,000 payable annually to Baker, then Baker would be called upon to pay income tax and would also be subject to be removed from office by the Governor for the taking of bribes. On the other hand, if Bradley did not report this to the Government, he would lay himself liable for violating the income tax law as well for violating section 37 of the United States Criminal Code, providing an offense for conspiring to defraud the United States Government for any purpose.

I am informed that they made some sort of an arrangement by which certain reports would be made, but that it would be annually charged off as profit and loss. The statute of limitations has not expired against Mr. Bradley for the reason that Mr. Baker did not die until February 23, 1933. If you can get this information from the Treasury Department for me, it would help three little children who are being victimized. I have in my possession valuable evidence to prove these terrible allegations of fraud on Bradley's and Baker's part. Please remember, Senator, that Bradley is one of the biggest gamblers in the United States; that he paid Baker in bribes presumably $650,000 for the maintenance of an evil against the public policy of the State of Florida, and that it involves an attempt to deceive, cheat, and defraud the Government of the United States.

It so happens that Mr. Frank Wideman, of West Palm Beach, Fla., is an Assistant Attorney General of the United States, and, according to press reports, is in charge of income-tax evasion cases. Mr. Wideman's reputation is of the highest and in every sense is above reproach. You can appreciate the possible embarrassment of Mr. Wideman in taking action against his fellow townsman. I voted for Mr. Wideman myself. I have every faith that at the proper time he will do his full duty. But, of course, you can appreciate that Mr. Bradley has such tremendous political power in Palm Beach County and the State of Florida and will involve certain of his friends and neighbors that he would, perhaps, prefer that someone else would take charge of these matters.

Will you object to laying this matter before the Attorney General himself?

The people of this community and the whole State of Florida are glad of the new deal. I hear on every hand a new hope that the Government is going to take action against the Morgans, and the Mellons and others of the same ilk. I say in all seriousness and solemnity that E. R. Bradley has spent a lifetime in corrupting public officials, polluting the fountains of justice, and stifling a proper administration of law and order, in order that he could prey upon society through his illicit operations in defiance of law. Please remember, Senator, that I am here relating the payment of larger bribes than was paid to Jimmy Walker in New York and far in excess of the hundred thousand that Albert Fall got in the little black satchel. It was $235,000 in the way of a gift that caused Jimmy Walker to resign, and it was the little black satchel that sent Fall to prison. Senator, you would be surprised at some of the witnesses who know about Bradley's payment of the $50,000 annual bribe. Please read my third amended bill, and I will only be too glad to assist in eradicating an evil which is eating as a cancer at the very heart of our body politic.

Sincerely yours,

H. A. HENDERSON.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, upon receiving that letter I immediately issued a summons to the writer asking him to come here tomorrow. I do not know how much of his testimony will be received, but he will be on hand tomorrow personally and gladly with the documents to give support to what he has written to me.

I am also going to communicate the contents of that letter, together with the request, to the Attorney General of the United States, asking that the Department of Justice give these people the chance they have asked in the letter.

Mr. President, I think I have fairly demonstrated, at least tentatively, that I was not in terribly bad faith in having imputed to Mr. Bradley that he ran a gambling house. With these remarks I yield the floor.

ARMED MEN GUARD MRS. COX—HANDBOOKS ARE CUT OFF FROM FAIRGROUNDS' SERVICE—"SERVICE" TO "BOOKIES" ON NEW ORLEANS RACES STOPPED—ORDER, LAID TO POLITICS, PERMITS TOWN BETTING ON OTHER TRACKS

The "lid" was clamped down good and tight on New Orleans horse-race betting pool rooms Friday. Operators of handbooks were told there would be "nothing doing" in the way of service and "line sheets" from the Daily Racing Form Publishing Co., which is under the same ownership as the General News Bureau, which latter organization furnishes the pool rooms of this country with service on the races. Service means everything that can be of assistance to a race-track better in "playing the ponies", from scratches early in the morning to a "call" on the races during their progress.

While none would be so bold as to express an opinion as to the source of the orders to "lay low" on Fair Grounds racing, it was freely rumored such orders came right from the city hall and through the police department, the Racing Form, and the General News Bureau. Last week word had gone down the line that any pool rooms "dealing" the Fair Grounds races would get themselves in trouble. Most of them thought it was just a gesture intended as a political balm to Col. John P. Sullivan for the latter's support of the Old Regulars in the city election. But Colonel Sullivan has since proved to the satisfaction of most of those who laid the blame on his doorstep that he is interested in the Fair Grounds only to the extent of seeing the Crescent City Jockey Club meet the notes and interest due him and Col. E. R. Bradley for payment for the Fair Grounds.

Now it seems the powers that be in the administration want to name the man who will be manager of the local office of the G.N.B., and the news association's refusal to grant that wish has prompted an investigation of the legal status of the General News Bureau, as there is a law against the aiding of handbook betting, no matter how such aid is given.

Since the refusal of the Racing Forum to furnish "line sheets" on fair-grounds racing to the handbook operators, and the advice from the G.N.B. that no "service" would be given practically puts the handbooks out of business as far as accepting bets on the local races is concerned, it is not hard to see how much the G.N.B. and its sister organization aid handbook betting.

When everything is "oke" politically and otherwise and the town which is wide open on everything else is as wide open on fair-grounds racing, the G.N.B. flashes out a service that keeps handbook operators and the betters apprised of even the slightest fluctuation of odds.

The "call" on the races can be heard coming out of pool rooms on almost any corner of the business district. "At the quarter, The Spaniard by three!" comes out over the loud speakers with which almost all the big pool rooms are equipped. And if a horse stumbles or throws his rider or gets in a jam at the half-mile post or goes the "overland", that comes direct from the track.

Now all that "service" is to be eliminated until things are "patched up." The pool-room operators, employing hundreds of "votes", are up in arms, because they say this is their only chance to make money—booking the fair-grounds races. Many of them have called on Mayor Walmsley and Superintendent of Police Reyer and asked, "How come?"

But until the General News Bureau of Chicago accedes to a few demands said to have been made, it is going to be tough on those who expect or hope to risk a few hard-earned or otherwise-acquired dollars on the ponies at the fair grounds.

However, Miami and Tampa Downs are running. And everything is "jake" on action on those two tracks. So the New Orleans handbook patrons will have to start playing Florida races or lay off until this little mixup blows over.

EXHIBIT B

[From Collier's, Feb. 26, 1927]

THEY LOSE AND LIKE IT—BEING SEPARATED FROM YOUR MONEY AT THE "BEACH CLUB" IS AS PAINLESS AS HAVING YOUR HAIR CUT—HERE'S HOW IT IS DONE

By Owen P. White

They call it the "Beach Club", but as the only beach near this gilded emporium of chance is the one on the souvenir post cards (the real ocean being a mile and a half away) the people who know the place best—and the most to their sorrow—merely speak of it with feeling as "Bradley's."

Of course, I am talking about Bradley's of Palm Beach, and I am quite positive that anyone who has been there, either as a looker-on or a comer-on, and who has likewise strayed into similar establishments in other corners of the world, as I have, will agree with me when I say that it is the sportiest and classiest gambling house in the world.

It's strange the way they do it. But down at Bradley's you lose and you like it! There's something anesthetic about the Bradley atmosphere that renders the operation of separating a man from his money as painless as a hair cut, and enables a player to sit up and watch his cash dribble away from him with as much nonchalance as if he owned the mint, and as if nobody had ever invented such an unpleasant thing as a first of the month.

The very attendants around the place make a piker feel like a plutocrat. His slightest wish is gratified even before he begins to realize that he had one. He feels like smoking, and a flunky in the rear begins to light matches. He is going to be thirsty (he doesn't realize it himself, but a psychological expert 10 paces in the rear has analyzed the symptoms and rushed for the ice water), and when the dryness appears so does the drink.

They do everything the same way. Even the dealer on the other side of the table says, "Thank you", as he rakes in your contribution after each turn of the wheel or each flip of a card. It's a nice place, this Bradley's of Palm Beach!

THE EASY MARK'S CLUB

Theoretically, it is against the law to run a gambling house in the State of Florida. But what difference does that make? A mere unsupported theory hasn't any more chance to stand up against Mr. Bradley's million-dollars-a-season industry than the patrons of his games have of walking away with the bank. But, being a law-abiding citizen, Mr. Bradley allows the theory to remain undisturbed and calls his place a "club" instead of a gambling house. There are those who say that he cheerfully distributes half a million a year—which is charged to expense and contributed by the suckers—among the needy Florida politicians who will do him the most good. This report, however, cannot be confirmed.

Becoming a member of Mr. Bradley's "club", however, isn't like joining the Elks or securing membership in a Rotary Club. Not at all. In order to secure the privilege of getting plucked, along with the socially elite who forgather around the gambling tables in Mr. Bradley's exclusive establishment, all that the ambitious one has to do is to get some previous sufferer to introduce him as a candidate for sacrifice who can pay his losses and who won't squeal.

Women are admitted to membership with the same hospitable lack of formality. Hence, it befell that, one afternoon, as I was standing in the establishment talking to a newspaper editor and saw a woman bet her last chip, lose it, get up, and walk away (while instantly another woman slipped into her chair), I remarked: "One sucker trimmed, and even before they can holler 'Next' another customer is in the seat."

"Yes", said the editor; "it's a continual process, and I think I'll write an editorial on the idea that Florida has a very punk oversupply of poor roulette players of both sexes on hand that it would like to trade off for a few good housewives and dirt farmers." An admirable subject.

Mr. Bradley's past, although it was in all probability quite lurid, is not as replete with detail as we might like to have it. He and his brother are said to have started out to achieve success as bartenders and saloonkeepers. Later they took up gambling as a profession and together they drifted down to the settlements in New Mexico.

This was in the early eighties, and naturally the brothers soon found their way into El Paso, which town was at that time the headquarters of the sporting element of the Southwest. Here, so the story goes, they went to work for Messrs. Morehouse & Burroughs, gentlemen of parts, who owned and operated a string of houses.

In the course of time one of the Bradley brothers, in bucking his own game, made a stake. He added to it gradually, and one night after it had grown into a substantial sum he sat in a game with his employer, Burroughs. Before the evening was over he was the owner of the latter's interest in the M. & B. enterprises. Thereafter the two Bradleys got together, bought out their other employer, Morehouse, and became the owners of a lucrative business.

(Whether or not the Bradley brothers ever operated the Silver Dollar in Tucson, a gaudy place in which all the dealers at the roulette, faro, crap, and monte tables were girls, doesn't appear in the record. At any rate, this house was at one time owned by the M. & B. combination.)

None of this information, however, comes from the Mr. Bradley who is now running the business at Palm Beach. The Mr. Bradley of today is a fashionably dressed, quiet, assured gentleman of about 70. He is merely a grown-up edition of the quiet, assured young gentleman of the early eighties who used to drive a white pacing horse up and down the dusty roads around El Paso.

Today, as in the old days, money bulges from his every pocket. How much cash Mr. Bradley carries nonchalantly around with him it would be hard to estimate. I saw a man ask him for three $1,000 bills in exchange for some trivial ones of $100 and $500 caliber. Mr. Bradley replied by carelessly sticking his hand in his pocket, pulling out a roll that would wad a 16-inch gun, and casually peeling off the three grand.

WHAT WILL HE DO WITH IT?

A moment later an employee needed a few thousand, and the Bradley hand, going into another pocket, produced another roll capable of producing as much envy as the first one.

That particular day was the only one on which I found Mr. Bradley to be at all talkative.

"How much", I asked, "do you lose in a year on the people who run out on you without paying?"

"Oh, not much. It was $180,000 last year."

"Can you ever collect it?"

"Not a chance in the world", he replied. "All I can do is to keep them out hereafter. I won't pester them for the money, and I can't be mean about it. Maybe they've gone overboard.

It's easy to do that in this place. So I give anybody who loses a chance to even up if he wants to take it.

"I'll match any of them, or cut the cards, or settle it any way they want to, for double or quits. But that's just once a night, understand. I won't keep it up, because if I did, the player would eventually be bound to win. If he wins on the first turn, he's even, and that suits me. All I charge, then, is the regular percentage which the house makes on all insured bets.

"There's one woman (Mr. Bradley mentioned her name, but as it might cause a rift in the domestic relations of a socially prominent New York family for me to do so, I will be more discreet) who matched me, double or quits, 18 different times and thereby won back all she had lost."

"Mr. Bradley", she said, "I don't think this is fair."

"But it was fair", said Mr. Bradley. "That woman's a good sport."

And so is Mr. Bradley. He is worth millions, and he made them by being a good sport. I looked at him carefully and wondered. For years this immaculately clad old gentleman has led a life which has kept him out of bed until daylight every morning. Yet there are not as many marks on his face as adorn the faces of his Wall Street patrons, many of whom are much younger than he. "But", I thought to myself, "this is his life. It is all he has lived for for years, and if he gives it up, he will die."

Mr. Bradley must have read my thoughts, for he said: "When a man dies owing me any money I tear up the slips and forget it. One died the other day. He was in for $6,000. But that debt is now off the books. I can't ask his people for it because maybe his family didn't know of his weakness. And, of course, I can't sue a loser. The law doesn't recognize a gambling debt."

This old man almost had me convinced that he was a philanthropist. But I have never heard that he is one. His money may go to charity after his death—some people, who speculate about such things, say that it will—but, now that he is alive, he has other uses for it.

He runs a breeding farm in Kentucky, raises thoroughbreds, and during the season devotes his time to the "sport of kings." Some of his money has also gone into other enterprises. He is said to have put up the cash for an exploring expedition of some kind into Africa, and, according to the report, he was likewise one of the "angels" who financed Dr. Cook in his trip to the pole—not the one to the pen.

I asked Mr. Bradley if he ever "went against the bank."

"I did a few times, at Saratoga, last year", he replied. "I won a thousand one night after being on the rail for a good deal, and another night I took down three thousand."

ONLY A LITTLE MATTER OF $30,000

So much for Mr. Bradley. Now for his establishment. It is a quiet-looking white building located in the center of Palm Beach. Its doormen have Park Avenue manners, and its atmosphere is that of an exclusive club. In fact, in one respect it is the most exclusive club in America. It excludes liquor; no member is allowed even to bring his own; and, on top of that, strange to say, it is here that the fashionable set dines and lunches. The prices, too, are quite reasonable. Quite. A nice lunch for four can be had for $30 maybe, and a dinner at about the same rate.

But, notwithstanding the costliness of the food, the restless millionaires—either actual or imaginary—bolt it down rapidly and acquire indigestion in their anxiety to get through and get into the big room beyond. It is around this big room that all of the activities at Bradley's are centered. But to get in it you must check your hat. A photographer got in once with a camera under his hat and tried to take a picture.

There are only three regular games played at Bradley's—hazard, chemin-de-fer, and roulette, with the last one leading the other two in popularity by a mile.

To get in and gamble you must dress up. "Members" must wear evening clothes. Fine feathers make fine plucking.

The returns come in in the form of chips which range in value from 50 cents to $25. The latter are green and if one wants to attract an audience, all he has to do is to buy a stack of green beans.

At the far end of the big room and over the entrance to a smaller one hangs a sign which reads "Private", but doesn't mean it. It means "Pikers keep out", and unless the person who strays into that holy of holies has a hundred thousand to lose he had better not play. It is there that the big fellows play with the bridle off and the north star as the limit.

Upstairs, in a third room, are two games of chemin-de-fer. This game, brought over from France for the entertainment of those who have been bitten by it when abroad, has greatly increased in popularity in the last few years. It is not banked by the house, like roulette, but by the players themselves. The bank passes from player to player and, for guaranteeing the solvency of the bank and supervising the game in general, the house charges 5 percent of all amounts bet.

In the chemin-de-fer games this year the minimum bank is $500 and the maximum $5,000. This means that no player is allowed to undertake to become banker to the game unless he has $500 to begin with, and that he cannot draw down any of his winnings until he has reached $5,000. If he wants to retire short of the $5,000 mark, he must relinquish the banking privilege and pass it along to another player.

I asked Mr. Bradley why he didn't allow this game to be played with an unlimited bank.

"It gets too big", he replied. "I tried that last year, and they were winning and losing a hundred thousand an evening.

"As it is now, the average is usually about twenty-five or thirty thousand, and of course in a little game like that nobody gets hurt."

Roulette is played on a long table on which is a painted layout showing the numbers 1 to 36, alternately in black and red, and a single and what is called a double zero.

The croupier who spins the wheel starts an ivory ball going in a groove around the wheel in the opposite direction, and when the ball finally slows drown and drops into one of the notched numbers it is that number and that color which win.

By properly placing his chips on the lay-out the player can bet in almost an endless number of ways. To outline even a few of them would take us beyond the limits of this article. It may be mentioned that at Monte Carlo a winning stake on one number will be paid 35 times. In no case, however, there or here, do the suckers get an even break.

Regardless of the unvarying percentage against the players (it is more than 5 percent), roulette is the most popular of all games of "bank" gambling. Men have been known to win fortunes at it—and to lose them also.

But the percentage which operates in favor of a roulette wheel, and which has made a millionaire many times over out of Mr. Bradley, formerly of the wigwam of El Paso, Tex., is not the only thing that works in his favor.

An old gambler said to me, "Why, I'll let Bradley take both the zeros off his wheel and pay him $5,000 a night for what he makes."

"How do you figure that?" I asked.

"It's easy", replied the gambler. "The psychological percentage is bigger than the mathematical one. The suckers simply won't stay to win, whereas, on the other hand, they'll stick around forever to lose." By which this authority meant that if a player, with a thousand in his pocket, wins a couple of hundred he will be satisfied and quit, but if he starts to lose he'll hang on until his entire roll is gone.

If he had unlimited capital and increased the stakes to balance his losses, wouldn't he win in the end? No; the bank sets the maximum.

Bradley's now opens at 1 in the afternoon and closes at 4 in the morning. But at one time it was never closed. Then one night a millionaire got into the roulette game. By midnight he was "on the rail", which means in the hole, for $135,000, and as that is considerable money even to a man of means, he decided to get it back.

A SOCIAL REQUIREMENT

He stayed and stayed and played and played. Dawn came and he was even. Six-thirty arrived, and he was surging ahead. Seven struck and he was 'way to the good—and at 8 he was just about as far into the game as the game had been into him.

After that experience Mr. Bradley thought there wasn't any use in staying open to accommodate obstinate people who didn't know when to quit. So he dug up the key and established a regular closing hour.

This seems to have discouraged many plungers, but it's still easy to find bankers (especially vice presidents), idle rich, brainless heirs, near-sports, movie magnates, and theatrical people hanging around the tables.

About half of Mr. Bradley's customers have their names in the Social Register, and in fact it must be that to lose a few thousand a year to this old gentleman is a social requirement.

"Here's my check for ten thousand", said a bored-looking chap. "That's my donation for the season; I won't lose any more than that. Don't accept any more of my checks and don't give me any more credit."

In 2 hours he was broke. "Well", said he, "thank the Lord, that's over with for this season."

With such contributions as this coming in regularly, Mr. Bradley is bound to succeed. He may have an occasional run of bad luck, but in the end he balances up. One night several years ago the players got into him for nearly a half million, and yet at the end of that season he showed up with a profit of a million and a quarter.

And the players, even the losers (which, of course, means most of them), all say that Bradley is a good sport. He can afford to be.

As he sits in his little office—lean, pale, inscrutable, unhurried, and unworried—he can afford to be a sport. Any man can who has a few millions in the bank and who knows that an inevitable mathematical percentage is at work for him day and night taking a few more millions away from a select and careless group of millionaires.

"SERVICE" HALTED ON FAIR GROUNDS RACES AT BOOKIES—ORDER PREVENTS BETTING ON LOCAL TRACK AWAY FROM SCENE

The final step to prevent handbooks from accepting bets on horses racing at the fair grounds track was taken Friday when all service on the local race course was discontinued by the General News Bureau.

"Line sheets", containing the entries, jockeys, distance, weights, and the morning odds on the Fair Grounds track were not distributed by the Daily Racing Form Publishing Co., owned by the same company that controls the General News Bureau.

The General News Bureau discontinued the "run-downs" on the fluctuating odds and the post calls during a race. The only information given by the General News Bureau on the Fair Grounds track was the winner of a race, without the price the horse paid.

While this lack of service on the Fair Grounds track made the "play" with the handbooks practically impossible, there was no curtailment of service on the Florida race tracks. "Line sheets" on the Florida tracks were on display, and the "run-downs" and post calls came through as usual.

It was about a week ago that the first move to prohibit handbooks from taking bets on horses running at the Fair Grounds was made. Handbook operators said they were instructed not to display the "line sheets" on the Fair Grounds.

Although Safety Commissioner Frank R. Gomila and Police Superintendent George Reyer disclaimed any knowledge of the order prohibiting the putting up of "line sheets" on the Fair Grounds on the blackboards in the handbooks, several raids were made by police. The activity of the police, it was said, was limited to those handbook operators who persisted in accepting bets on Fair Grounds horses.

Some handbook operators said last week that shortly after the order was received not to display Fair Grounds "line sheets", a man said to be employed by the Fair Grounds race track appeared at the handbooks and left a number of complimentary badges to the Fair Grounds to be distributed among the patrons of the handbooks.

GAMBLE FINDS EASY VICTIMS IN KNEE PANTS—HANDBOOKS OPERATED IN THE PUBLIC AND PAROCHIAL INSTITUTIONS—YOUNG "BOOKIES" TAKE BETS OF COMRADES—JUVENILE PLUNGERS ALWAYS HAVE RECOURSE TO USUAL OPERATORS

The race tracks of New Orleans have sucked the public and parochial school systems of the city into their greedy maw. Evidence of this fact reached the Item last week and has been investigated and verified. On the statements of the school children themselves, it was learned that boys in the sixth, seventh, and eighth grades bet their small savings and pocket money on the races, conduct their own "books", and deal directly with the regular handbook operators of the city.

In less than 5 hours after the investigation had started it was learned that children in the Beauregard, St. Philip, Maybin, and Warren Easton Schools and St. Aloysius College have learned the racing game from the bottom and are playing it as hard and fast as some of the group-up habitues of the city.

REMY DORR, JR., PLUNGES

At the St. Philip School was discovered the youth who bears the nickname "Remy Dorr", so dubbed by his youthful companions because he is "a regular plunger." His bets on frequent occasions have been so high that the juvenile bookmakers have refused to write his bets in their own books, but have relayed them to handbook operators, who it was hitherto supposed dealt only with mature men.

A significant discovery by Item reporters is the fact that these school children play the races only during the racing season in New Orleans. One youthful bookmaker disclosed this fact in the following language:

"They don't bet on Kentucks (meaning Kentucky races). I don't make books on 'em either. Too hard to dope 'em."

This revelation will doubtless be of interest to supporters of racing who maintain that the handbook evil is not affected by the local tracks—that the handbooks operate the year around. According to some of these bookies in knee pants much valuable information can be obtained at the track itself if a fellow has enough nerve to play hookey and go out and help exercise horses.

TEACHERS DON'T KNOW

The principals of the schools, of course, and the teachers, too, are in complete ignorance of the startling invasion of public-school circles by the race gamble.

"Gee whiz, no!" say the boys. "If they knew it they'd suspend the whole school!"

J. M. Gwoen, superintendent of schools, at the first intimation the Item had of race gambling in the schools, was asked then if he had ever heard of such a thing.

"I have not," he replied, "and I doubt very seriously if such a thing could be true."

First evidence of horse gambling in the schools came to light when a 15-year-old boy in knee breeches advanced the information that he got the money with which to build a junior Item airfone by risking his nickels on the ponies. He attends the St. Philip School, 721 St. Philip Street.

The nickels, dimes, and pennies of the 11- to 15-year-old boys in this school, according to the boys themselves, have long been going to line the pockets of the race gamblers.

A—— is the St. Philip School boy who got his airfone by gambling on the horses. His winnings were made during the racing season here, but that fact he did not disclose until last week. The Item withholds his identity, as it will withhold the identity of other boys mentioned in this account, for reasons given elsewhere in this edition. It may be noticed, in passing, the alphabet has barely enough letters to afford this screen.

MAKE NICKEL "BOOKS"

"Sure they gamble", said A——. "All the time when the races are here. They bet nickels with each other and pay off when the results come in. One time I was 2 weeks behind in building my first radio set because I was running in bad luck on the ponies. The kids in the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth grades nearly all gamble."

"Naw!" said B——, St. Philip School's leading bookie. "Its tough when they don't race here. The best time is when they run at the Fair Grounds. They don't bet on Kentucky. I don't make books on 'em either. Too hard to dope 'em.

The betting was at a low ebb in St. Philip recently, when B——, a 15-year-old lad was "hit hard." C—— was the biggest winner in the event, "bumping" the "bookie" for $1.50. D——, according to the testimony of the youthful bookmaker, is one of his biggest gamblers and best customers.

E——, F——, and G—— were boys mentioned by the gamblers as the heaviest plungers. They sometimes bet as much as 50 cents and a dollar.

H——, another grammar-school pupil attending St. Philip, is a second bookmaker. D—— is credited with having plunged heavily with him.

Two plungers who nearly "cleaned" Bookie H—— recently were I—— and J——, also St. Philip School pupils.

GAMBLE GRABS EVEN PENNIES

K——, a 13-year-old lad, A's, brother, told of plunging with nickel parlays, and placing anywhere from 2 cents to a dime on his selections. L—— is another plunger, known as the "Remy Dorr" of St. Philip School. L—— has been known to plunge so heavily that the "kid bookies" wouldn't accept his bets on their own hook but would lay them again with "the French market bookmaker", who takes bets from school children, according to the testimony of the juvenile gamblers.

The young race-horse fans all denied that the teachers or Miss Louise Howard, the principal, have any knowledge of the race-horse gambling that goes on at St. Philip School.

"Gee, man! If Miss Howard ever heard of that! Wow! She'd suspend the whole school. Uh, huh. Teachers don't know anything about it." Such was the explanation of K——.

"The French market bookmaker", who takes bets from children, is known to practically every boy who was interviewed. According to the boys, after school "the kids" hang around the St. Philip street intersection near the market waiting for the racing editions of the papers so they can collect—or trudge slowly homeward with hearts full of grief and minds full of bitter thoughts against the ponies that wouldn't "come in."

The testimony of M——, a 13-year-old pupil of St. Aloysius College, brings out that the race gamble is grabbing the nickels and pennies from their religious institution of learning.

St. Aloysius also has its bookmaker. His name is N——. N—— takes the bets of several boys in the school, sometimes "paying off" on his own hook, sometimes relaying the bets to other bookmakers.

SUCCESSFUL "BABY BOOKIE"

Unlike the "baby bookmakers" of St. Philip School, N—— has never been "hard hit." His career as a "bookie" has been successful, and N—— has been prosperous. Last season was a good one for him. The boys at St. Aloysius are poor pickers, and the bookie "plays safe."

The plungers at St. Aloysius whose names were mentioned by some of the pupils of the school, aside from N—— and M——, are O——, P——, and Q——.

R—— was named as another bookmaker in this institution. A boy whose name is S—— makes a handbook and gambles with other boys as well, according to the testimony.

The gamblers include boys no more than 11 years old.

Warren Easton Boys High School has not been free from the evil. Interviews with several boys of the high school brought out the information that T—— was a prosperous bookmaker during the last racing season at New Orleans.

High-school gamblers and plungers who placed bets with T——, are U——, one of the star athletes of the school, V—— and W——. All three boys have made excellent athletic records at high school and elsewhere.

That gambling has spread wildly among the children of the city is undeniable in the face of the testimony of X——, a 14-year-old pupil of Beauregard, who says several of his friends "play the races", but he personally preferred to place his bets on the White Jacks, the baseball team on which he plays.

Evidence of gambling on the races at Beauregard and Maybin Schools was received, but names of the "bookies" and plungers could not be ascertained. It is said, though, that Beauregard boys "play hookey" and exercise horses at the Fair Grounds during the racing season.

RACE GAMBLE DENOUNCED BY SCHOOL BOARD—BODY VOTES 4 FOR AND 1 NOT BALLOTING ON RESOLUTION—TILT COMES AS MOISE STANDS FOR SHOWDOWN—PRESIDENT MURPHY GETS IN LINE, BUT SCHAUMBURG FIGHTS ACTION

Race-track gambling was formally denounced in a resolution adopted by the board of education Friday night.

All members of the board, with the exception of Henry C. Schaumburg, voted for the resolution, and Mr. Schaumburg announced he personally favored abolition of race-track gambling, but did not think it proper for the board to go on record.

Percy H. Moise introduced the resolution at the close of a 3-hour session.

"Mr. President", he said, "I move that the board of education of Orleans Parish go on record as absolutely opposed to the continuance of race-track gambling in New Orleans."

TILT OVER MOTION

"I don't believe it is within the province of this board——" began President Daniel J. Murphy.

"Then you won't put the motion?" inquired Moise, sarcastically.

"I don't believe it is the place for the board to go on record in such a matter", interrupted Schaumburg. "My attitude on this subject is well known—I have always been against race-horse gambling——"

"I demand a vote", cried Moise, jumping to his feet.

"I'll put your motion, Mr. Moise", said President Murphy.

When he put the motion, Mrs. Baumgartner, only woman member of the board, voted for it, as did William Frantz and Moise.

MURPHY GETS IN LINE

"I cast my vote for the motion", said President Murphy after the others had voted. "I exercise the chairman's privilege."

"I demand under the rules of the board that Mr. Schaumburg go on record", cried Moise.

"I will excuse Mr. Schaumburg from voting", said President Murphy. "He has explained his position"—

Schaumburg then proceeded to reiterate his statement that personally he opposed race-horse gambling, had always done so, but did not think the board should go on record.

NO BOYS BETTING REPORT

The vote thus stood 4 for the motion of Moise and 1 not voting.

The only other action of the board dealing with race-track gambling was the statement of Schaumburg that as a member of a committee of two named to inquire into alleged race-track gambling by school children, he was not ready to report, but had been assured affidavits bearing on the subject would be available next week for the board's consideration.

PROCESSING TAX ON JUTE BAGS

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before we resume consideration of the revenue bill I wish to invite attention to a matter which is of very great moment to the State of Idaho and the Western States in general.

As those familiar with conditions in the Western States know, what is known as a "jute bag" is used universally in the shipment of wheat, beans, onions, potatoes, and so forth. It is an indispensable factor in the transportation of those products to market. Last December, I believe it was, a processing tax was laid upon jute bags. It now transpires that the entire tax has been transferred and is being transferred to the producers of wheat, beans, onions, potatoes, and so forth. It has become oppressive. It is a tax upon the farmer. It is a tax upon the man whom we are professing to be anxious to relieve.

I know of no reason why the tax should be levied except that the jute bag is supposed to be in competition with the cotton bag. As a matter of fact it is not. Shippers of the products which I have mentioned cannot use the cotton bags. There is no competition whatever, so far as these products and the shippers of these products are concerned, between the cotton bag and the jute bag.

It is an extraordinary situation that presents itself. Here is the taxing power of the United States under the Constitution—the Congress—and yet here we find a tax which the Congress did not impose and cannot remove or remedy. The Congress has seen fit to delegate away its taxing power to such an extent that the only power we now have is, as it were, in the nature of a petition to the authority to whom we have delegated the power which the Constitution dedicated or confided to the Congress. I am exercising today, therefore, with due humility, I trust, the right of petition as a Senator of the United States, petitioning a department of the Government to relieve my people of an unjust and exorbitant tax. Shorn of all power to repeal the tax, Congress may petition.

I read a few messages and letters bearing on this subject. I read the following telegram:

NAMPA, IDAHO, March 22, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

Jute tax is costing Idaho for 1933 crop over $150,000. Lowest estimate claim will cost bean, onion, and potato industry of Idaho well over quarter million dollars on 1934 crop if allowed to continue. Jute used in potato bags not competitor of cotton as not to exceed 1-percent cotton bags used by potato industry. Rank discrimination against an already impoverished group of producers to exempt all manufacturers of automobiles, furniture, and all others using billions of yards of jute material in yardage form as well as exempting the jute used in baling cotton, also all bags used by wool industry and making potato growers pay $6.50 per car and bean growers pay thirteen fifty per car on every car shipped from Idaho. Potato industry of United States will pay over million and half in this tax. Potato, onion, and bean growers of Idaho have neither asked nor received any aid from A.A.A. Earnestly request your support of their request for immediate removal this unjust penalty and hope you will handle question in broadcast tonight. Thank you.

SOUTHERN IDAHO SHIPPERS TRAFFIC ASSOCIATION,
ANSON PECKHAM.

The request is that the tax be removed. The telegram is addressed to me, I presume, on the assumption still obtaining in some quarters that the Constitution is still in existence and that the taxing power is in Congress instead of the Department. So long has it been true that the sole power to impose taxes rested with Congress that it is difficult to realize that Congress has abdicated and surrendered that power to a Cabinet officer. The body which alone under the Constitution has power to tax and to repeal taxes is still mistakenly believed by some to possess that power, but it is a sad mistake. In a few days we will be asked to delegate to the Executive a still greater portion of the power Congress still retains.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator, as we know, is one of the most distinguished members of the Judiciary Committee, and he not only can petition but he can and does set forth his views in a most effective way. He rendered a great service in our last committee meeting where a bill was considered to tax the sale and restrain the importation of certain weapons. All of the committee were in favor of the bill, but the able Senator from Idaho pointed out that a bill to raise revenue must originate in the House of Representatives. I think the Senator should not despair too poignantly.

Mr. BORAH. All I am interested in now is relief, and I am pursuing the only course I know by which to get a hearing. Of course, I may say that the able Secretary of Agriculture is exercising properly the power which was granted to him. I am not complaining of a usurpation of power or an exercise of power which has not been delegated to the Secretary of Agriculture. The Congress was generous and gave abundantly of its power. If there is fault anywhere, it is with the Congress and not with the Secretary of Agriculture—not with the "brain trust", but with the Congress. It is amusing to hear Congress talk about investigating the "brain trust" when the Congress has passed every bill I know of that the "brain trust" has suggested. The investigation strikes me as a smoke screen to cover the record of Congress. Congress would do well to investigate itself.

Here is a letter from Twin Falls, Idaho:

IDAHO VEGETABLE PRODUCERS, INC.,
Twin Falls, Idaho, March 15, 1934.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed herewith please find copy of resolutions that were adopted last night at a meeting held in Twin Falls of representatives from all of the counties in the Snake River Valley extending from the Oregon line to Yellowstone Park, which comprises, as you know, practically the entire agricultural section of the State of Idaho.

We hope you are able to impress upon Secretary Wallace the fact that this territory is being penalized and nothing given in return; also that the potato, bean, and onion producers of the State of Idaho have never received and have never asked Government assistance in the way of advances or payments on abandoned acreages; that these taxes are unbearable for the further reason that Idaho pays the highest freight rate of any State in the Union in moving her farm commodities to market; that during the past 3 years, the average price received through this section was below the cost of production and that we feel that the processing tax, which we are paying on cotton goods, fully compensates the cotton grower for the assistance which he has been given; and further that the farmers in the State of Idaho are not in position financially to stand any more burdens than exist now.

In addition to the argument set forth in the resolution, we are astonished to know that the processing tax on jute products is limited to the jute used in bags under 36 inches by 72 inches in size; in other words, under the wool bag; and that this amount of jute products coming into the United States is but a small part of the amount of jute products that are imported into the United States and used for such other purposes as rugs, furniture, meat wrappings, et cetera; also to bale the cotton in the South. It is striking us as being exceptionally unfair and unreasonable and, in fact, a penalty in the way of a tribute to the southern cotton grower.

Thanking you for the assistance which you have been giving us in this matter and assuring you that we appreciate your efforts, I am

Yours respectfully,

E. N. PETTYGROVE, President.

When Congress levies a tax it must have some regard to uniformity. It does not seem that that rule obtains after we have delegated the taxing power. A processing tax is being levied which affects a very limited number of those who use jute. This tax violates all sound rules of taxation and all accepted principles of justice. It is a partial, discriminating, oppressively unjust tax.

I suppose it must be said, in fairness to the Secretary, that he had in mind the protection of the cotton-bag manufacturers upon whom a processing tax had been laid.

I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a copy of the resolutions passed by the association whose letter I have just read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolutions are as follows:

Whereas the United States Government on December 1, 1933, imposed a processing tax upon all jute bags used in the United States as containers of potatoes, onions, and beans, ranging in amount from $15.65 to $22.94 per thousand, thereby placing an unjust, unfair, and unreasonable burden upon the farming interests of the State of Idaho, costing them up to the present time better than $100,000, and which will, if continued, cost them approximately $275,000 per annum; and

Whereas without any notice or warning whatever these taxes were imposed upon jute products to the serious detriment of both the grower and shipper of Idaho beans, onions, and potatoes; and

Whereas the farmers of Idaho are today paying a heavy tariff upon all jute shipped into the United States, also a processing tax upon all cotton goods used by them; and

Whereas the farmers of Idaho have never used cotton bags except in a small way, in the marketing of their products, and cannot use cotton bags in any quantity except only for small consumer packages and on which jute bags cannot be used; and

Whereas jute bags are in no way competitive to cotton as the ordinary containers for potatoes, onions, and beans; and

Whereas the farmers of Idaho are today paying the heaviest freight rates upon their commodities moving to market of any like farming community in the United States; and

Whereas the farm commodities of the State of Idaho during the past few years have sold at prices averaging less than the cost of production, particularly all crops that are affected by the tax on jute products; and

Whereas there is no direct nor indirect benefit received by the farmers of Idaho from the moneys that they have paid out as a result of this processing tax; and

Whereas the potato, onion, or bean industries have never received any crop advances or advances for abandoned acreage nor do they anticipate requesting any such assistance; and

Whereas the tax upon jute products is only another unjust, unfair, and unreasonable burden added to those now being borne by the farmers of the State of Idaho, and further deprives them of any opportunity that they might have to recover from the depressed condition of their industry: And now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, as growers and shippers, in a meeting assembled at Twin Falls, Idaho, this 14th day of March 1934, representing all farmers and shippers from every section of the Snake River Valley, comprising practically the entire agricultural section of the State of Idaho, protest the processing tax now imposed upon jute bags used in marketing of our commodities, and respectfully urge the United States Government, through the United States Department of Agriculture, to give the producers of potatoes, onions, and beans relief from these unfair, unjust, and unreasonable taxes, by removing the processing tax upon all bags used in the marketing of these commodities.

E. N. PETTYGROVE,
Acting Chairman.

Mr. BORAH. I have here a letter from the secretary of the Cedar Draw Grange, of Buhl, Idaho. In this letter is found a resolution, which reads as follows:

Whereas the United States Government on December 1, 1933, imposed a processing tax upon all jute bags used in the United States as containers of potatoes, onions, and beans, ranging in amount from $15.65 to $22.94 per thousand, thereby placing an unjust burden upon the farmers' interests of the State of Idaho, costing them up to the present time better than $100,000, and which will, if continued, cost them approximately $275,000 per annum; and

Whereas jute bags are in no way competitive to cotton as the ordinary containers for potatoes, onions, and beans; and

Whereas the farmers of Idaho during the past few years have sold at prices averaging less than cost of production, particularly all crops that are affected by the tax on jute products: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Cedar Draw Grange, of Twin Falls County, is opposed to the processing tax on all jute containers.

Mrs. E. L. METZ,
Secretary Cedar Draw Grange, Buhl, Idaho.

I have also a letter from the Colorado Perishable Products Traffic Association. This tax affects, of course, the producers in all the Western States, and Colorado has presented her cause in a letter which I have before me. I will read part of this letter, and then ask that the entire letter be incorporated in the RECORD:

While the above figures are approximate, they will not miss the true figures very far. We have grouped actual shipments to date of potatoes and onions from Colorado, to which we have added dry beans from Colorado and New Mexico combined, indicating a total tax of over $83,000 up to date, and we estimate that for the 1933 crop year the total cost to farmers of the Nation will come very close to $2,000,000. If anything, our figures are far too low. Of course, these figures do not in reality mean that this specific tax has been borne by the grower, because a large part of the crop moved before the tax was imposed. They do, however, indicate what may be expected in future years.

Out here in the West farmers justly feel that they are being discriminated against in favor of the cotton producer. If the thought back of this tax is to influence farmers to use domestically produced cotton goods instead of imported jute products, then whoever is responsible for this added burden is not acquainted with the handling of farm products.

At times, in a very limited way, shippers have endeavored to use cotton bags for potatoes. It has been found impractical in every respect, because any slight damage immediately becomes apparent on the outside of the bag, for the reason that cotton stains so easily. To use cotton in lieu of burlap on car-lot shipments of potatoes and vegetables would be courting trouble for the farmer and shipper alike, as rejections would be more numerous, and when the goods reached the jobbers' floors the sacks would be dirty and would show up badly for resale purposes.

In other words, the use of the cotton bag is impracticable. There would be more rejections and, therefore, more losses than if the producers were paid the amount of expense incurred by them by reason of the tax.

I ask unanimous consent to have this entire letter printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

THE COLORADO PERISHABLE PRODUCTS TRAFFIC ASSOCIATION,
Greeley, Colo., March 26, 1934.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Senate Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BORAH: In response to your telegram of March 24, I am very glad to tabulate below some approximate figures, which will give you an idea of the staggering cost being placed on agriculture through the recently inaugurated tax on burlap containers:

Commodity	Cars	Approximate tax per car	Cost to date	Colorado, estimated for season	Cost, Nation, estimated for 1933 crop year
Onions	1,652	$4.80	$7,929
Do	2,000	4.80		$9,600
Potatoes	10,197	5.76	58,734
Do	15,000	5.76		86,000
Potatoes, onions, and other vegetables using burlap	350,000	5.10			$1,785,000
	Bags	Bags	Colorado and New Mexico
Dry beans	748,756	2.20	16,470
Do	8,000,000	2.20			176,000
Total			83,133	95,600	1,961,000

While the above figures are approximate, they will not miss the true figures very far. We have grouped actual shipments to date of potatoes and onions from Colorado, to which we have added dry beans from Colorado and New Mexico combined, indicating a total tax of over $83,000 up to date, and we estimate that for the 1933 crop year the total cost to farmers of the Nation will come very close to $2,000,000. If anything, our figures are far too low. Of course, these figures do not in reality mean that this specific tax has been borne by the grower, because a large part of the crop moved before the tax was imposed. They do, however, indicate what may be expected in future years.

Out here in the West farmers justly feel that they are being discriminated against in favor of the cotton producer. If the thought back of this tax is to influence farmers to use domestically produced cotton goods instead of imported jute products, then whoever is responsible for this added burden is not acquainted with the handling of farm products.

At times, in a very limited way, shippers have endeavored to use cotton bags for potatoes. It has been found impractical in every respect, because any slight damage immediately becomes apparent on the outside of the bag, for the reason that cotton stains so easily. To use cotton in lieu of burlap on car-lot shipments of potatoes and vegetables would be courting trouble for the farmer and shipper alike, as rejections would be more numerous, and when the goods reached the jobbers' floors, the sacks would be dirty and would show up badly for resale purposes.

In both Colorado and New Hexico, shippers of dry beans have also at different times tried out cotton bags in lieu of burlap, with very much the same results. It was found that cotton bags stretched badly and arrived dirty at destination.

Do you not agree that it is unreasonable to place a tax on burlap in order to favor cotton producers, when cotton in reality cannot be used in this industry as a substitute for burlap?

I believe in justice to the western farmer this burlap tax should be rescinded as of the effective date, December 1, 1933.

Yours very truly,

THE COLORADO PERISHABLE PRODUCTS TRAFFIC ASSOCIATION,
J. H. WOOLF, Treasurer.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I have received somewhat similar protests from representatives of the sugar-refining industry on the eastern seaboard. They state that this tax is most burdensome, and they have discovered that the sugar refiners of Cuba are using Japanese bagging, and are able to circumvent the tariff laws by buying this bagging very much cheaper than the price which the refiners in this country have to pay for bagging because of the processing tax. The complaint I have received from that and other industries is very similar to the complaint the Senator has received from the farmers of his State.

Mr. BORAH. The tragedy of this is that whatever might have been in the mind of the able Secretary of Agriculture as to who would pay this tax, the fact is now conclusively established that the producer pays the tax. It does not make any difference where it is laid; the incidence is with the producer; and the farmer, the producer of these different products, is carrying this extra burden at a time when it is one of the primal policies of the administration to relieve agriculture. If we compare this tax with the supposed increase in the price of the product, we will find that the tax very nearly absorbs the increase in the price of the particular products of which I am now speaking. I assert with no fear of successful contradiction that the tax benefits no one and injures and oppresses the producer.

Mr. President, I read a letter from the State of Washington, from Benz Bros. & Co., at Toppenish, Wash. It is as follows:

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senator, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BORAH: This will acknowledge your wire of March 24. We are heartily in sympathy with the effort being made to remove the processing tax upon jute bags, because we believe this tax to be unjust, unreasonable, and discriminatory.

The 100-pound potato bags or standard size wheat bags are not competitive with cotton bags, for the reason that it is impractical to use cotton for these and other similar farm products. The substitution of burlap bags for cotton only occurs in the smaller-size bags, 25 pounds or smaller, which are known as consumer-size bags, and only a very small percentage of our fruit and vegetable crops are packed in these consumer packages.

The imposition of a burlap processing tax places upon the grain and vegetable farmer an additional heavy burden at a time when he is already heavily burdened with taxes of all kinds, including the payment of a heavy import duty on burlap.

Figured upon the basis of car lots, the farmers of this State are being forced to pay a tax of approximately $6 on each car of vegetables, and $8 to $10 on each car of grain. This money in most cases is not returned to them, but must come out of the pocket of distressed farmers.

We are in sympathy with the Government's program to assist the cotton industry; however, we see no logical reason for the jute tax; it is a mistake and should be speedily removed.

Yours very truly,

BENZ. BROS. & CO.,
E. E. BENZ.

I have here a telegram from J. F. Jardine, president of the National Potato Association of Waupaca, Wis., reading as follows:

WAUPACA, WIS., March 26, 1934.

Senator W. E. BORAH:

Writing you fully tomorrow present process tax on potato bags. Cost potato producers approximately $6 per car. Potato growers generally consider tax unfair, too, and discriminatory against their product, and urge its repeal.

J. F. JARDINE,
President National Potato Association.

I also have the following letter from the Shippers' Protective Association of Idaho Falls, Idaho:

IDAHO FALLS, IDAHO, March 22, 1934.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. BORAH: The above association at a special meeting held at Idaho Falls, Idaho, last night unanimously went on record as favoring an appeal to you to immediately cancel the existing processing tax on jute bags.

While the above association is composed of shippers handling in excess of 15,000 cars of potatoes annually, we do not contend that it affects us directly; however, it does seriously affect all the growers from whom we purchase potatoes, because such processing tax must be added to the cost of the sacks and the full amount deducted from the growers. All our growers have gone on record as strenuously opposed to this unfair tax against them, and we join them heartily in an effort to secure the cancelation of this tax.

Yours very truly,

SHIPPERS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION,
H. E. YOUNG, Manager.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter from the F. M. Balcom Co., at Grandview, Wash.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

GRANDVIEW, WASH., March 28, 1934.

Hon. WILLIAM S. BORAH,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: Benz Bros., of Toppenish, Wash., have requested that we write you relative to the present processing tax on burlap bags. At the present time there is about a 25-percent tax on the burlap bags we use for potatoes. There is a tax of $15.71 per thousand on bags costing us $70 per thousand.

We are at a loss to find out why this tax does any good, except to add an additional revenue to the United States Treasury. It certainly works a terrific hardship on the potato growers in the Yakima Valley, and we would certainly appreciate it very much if you would lend your efforts to have this tax abolished.

I am writing you as president of the F. M. Balcom Co., as well as president of the Yakima Valley Potato Dealers' Association.

Very truly yours,

F. M. BALCOM CO.,
By F. M. BALCOM, President.

Mr. BORAH. There is a multitude of facts and figures showing how very burdensome this tax is, and that it is being borne or paid by the producers of these different products.

As I said a moment ago, I assume that the tax was laid on the theory that it was a protection of the manufacturers of cotton bags; but there is no competition between the two articles, and the result is that a tremendous burden is placed upon the producers of these articles in the West without any compensatory benefit to anyone. It is simply an additional heavy tax which the producers must pay.

Mr. President, I have said that the only thing I can do at this time is to present the facts, in the hope that the able Secretary of Agriculture will reconsider the matter and withdraw the tax. There is, of course, a way in which we can enforce a different program. That undoubtedly would lead to delay, and I do not know that it would be successful if we should undertake it in the Congress. The more immediate method—and the hope I entertain is that that method will be employed—would be for the Secretary to reinvestigate the matter and withdraw the tax. I urge this matter upon his attention and trust the matter will be reconsidered and the tax withdrawn. Investigation will convince the Secretary that the tax is working a great hardship on those who are already in great distress financially and economically. This tax will mean to many the difference between a small profit, enough to get by, and a loss—a loss sufficient to entail other failures, inability to meet other obligations, and therefore another profitless year, if not complete break-down.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am heartily in sympathy with what has been said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]; and I know from the information which has come to me that the tax which has been thus levied bears very onerously and very heavily upon all the farming communities of the West.

I do not speak, as the Senator does, in precatory fashion, because when an injustice is done I am content, perhaps, to explain that injustice, and then, if appropriate, subsequently, ultimately to denounce it. So I desire to make plain in just a few words, if I can, what this tax does for the far West.

I do not question at all the right of the Secretary of Agriculture, because, as has been very properly said, we accorded the power. I do not like the exercise of that power; and so it is that I present in a few words exactly what the use of it has done.

Here is the taxing power of the United States of America exercised by proclamation of a single official. He is not to blame. I reiterate that. He is not at all culpable, and he is not due for criticism from any of us because of it. We did it; we passed the law; and we alone are the ones who are to blame; but we are as well the ones who ought to correct any injustice under that law.

Here is the proclamation in regard to jute to which reference has been made:

The following proclamation is hereby incorporated in these regulations:

"I, H. A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States of America, acting under and pursuant to an act of Congress, known as the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933, as amended, after investigation and due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, and due consideration having been given to all of the facts, hereby find, and do hereby proclaim, that the payment of the processing tax upon cotton is causing and will cause to the processors thereof disadvantages in competition from jute fabric and jute yarn, by reason of excessive shifts in consumption between such commodities or products thereof. I do accordingly hereby specify that the compensating rate of tax on the processing of jute fabric necessary to prevent such disadvantages in competition, is 2.9 cents per pound of jute fabric, on the first domestic processing of jute fabric into bags, and that the compensating rate of tax on the processing of jute yarn, necessary to prevent such disadvantages in competition, is 2.9 cents per pound of jute yarn, on the first domestic processing of jute yarn into twine of a length 275 feet per pound, or over, finished weight, of twine. Hereafter, there shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon the first domestic processing "—

And so forth. We did that, not Mr. Wallace. We authorized Mr. Wallace to proclaim, when he desired, that a tax should be levied in such a sum as he saw fit, under appropriate circumstances, as described by him, and that the tax should become effective.

We have strayed far from the old Anglo-Saxon idea that he who has charge of the purse governs. We, imagining that we were successors of parliaments of the past, have thought, generally speaking, that we controlled the purse, and therefore that, partially at least, we governed.

We have changed the rule. The crisis and the emergency may have required it and may have required such an act as this. But it is a pretty harsh rule, and it ought not to be invoked unless absolute necessity requires, even though we have granted the power.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Can the Senator advise us how much this compensating tax would add to the cost to the farmer of the average jute bag?

Mr. JOHNSON. I am coming to that in just a moment. In justice to the Secretary of Agriculture, I wish to call attention to the fact that the power is found in subsection (d) of section 15 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and I will insert the particular portion which thus gives him the power in order that I may carry with what I say what he may deem the antidote to it. But the tax now, in the realities, is entirely and wholly unjust.

In the far West we farm, so far as grain is concerned, in a fashion different from that followed in the Middle West, and, unfortunately, there are some gentlemen from the Middle West who never have been in the far West. Our country is so big that perhaps they may be forgiven the lapse in that regard, although I think that failure on the part of anyone to see the far West is a misfortune which can never subsequently be compensated for in a life of travel. Nevertheless, in the far West we harvest our grain in a fashion different from that followed in the Middle West, as I have said. In the Middle West the farmers harvest in bulk; they put their grain in the elevators and in the warehouses. In the far West, in the States of Oregon, Washington, California, Idaho, and so on, we are compelled to harvest and sack immediately. We sack our wheat and we sack our barley. Oftentimes it is used in export and the like, but we always sack it. The only mode we have had of sacking it in the past was by virtue of jute bags.

This compensating tax is asserted to have been made for cotton, but it cannot be compensating for cotton because the cotton bag cannot be substituted in our territory for the jute bag.

The tax falls heavily on farmers in the areas in the West where there is no bulk handling of grain. It falls directly on the grain growers of the State from which I come, and it cannot be passed on. A barley grower of California, for instance, who produces 4,000 bags of barley, is confronted with a tax of from $800 to a thousand dollars, which he must pay in order to harvest his grain, under the order that is made by one man—an order of taxation. I want Senators to keep in mind the fact that in the far West cotton bags cannot be substituted for the sacking of this grain. So it is rather incomprehensible to me why the order should have been made.

When I am speaking thus as to its effect, I am reciting merely what the State Grange of the State of California has stated. Their chief official is here at the present time rebelling against this order and endeavoring to get some relief though, as he tells me, quite unsuccessfully. He has made a study of the question; his organization has studied it; they are all agreed upon the injustice of the order; and they are all demanding that something be done, if possible. What can be done is quite beyond me if the Secretary of Agriculture remains obdurate in adhering to the rule he has made.

Conservative estimates, it is reported to me, place the burden of this tax on the farmers of California as between five and six hundred thousand dollars this year. In the case of some varieties of grain, this tax means a difference between a profit and a loss. So we have here the anomalous situation presented of the assertion that a processing tax shall be carried to the farmers of the West in order that farmers in some other place may reap the benefit of it, even though it carries ruin in the first place to those upon whom it is imposed.

Then we talk of reciprocal trade agreements, and we tell about how we are going to take our products and carry them here and there and some other place beyond the seas and relieve our farmers of the difficulties which have been encountered by them, when, within the borders of our own country, we are levying by one man's dictum a tax today that is ruinous upon the 4, 5, 6, or 7 States situated on the West coast.

For these reasons I unite with the Senator from Idaho in the protest he has made concerning this tax. I have only a protest to make, it is quite true, but the protest thus I make.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point subsection (d) of section 15 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act to which I referred a few moments ago.

There being no objection, the subsection was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(d) The Secretary of Agriculture shall ascertain from time to time whether the payment of the processing tax upon any basic agricultural commodity is causing or will cause to the processors thereof disadvantages in competition from competing commodities by reason of excessive shifts in consumption between such commodities or products thereof. If the Secretary of Agriculture finds, after investigation and due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, that such disadvantages in competition exist, or will exist, he shall proclaim such finding. The Secretary shall specify in this proclamation the competing commodity and the compensating rate of tax on the processing thereof necessary to prevent such disadvantages in competition. Thereafter there shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon the first domestic processing of such competing commodity a tax, to be paid by the processor, at the rate specified, until such rate is altered pursuant to a further finding under this section, or the tax or rate thereof on the basic agricultural commodity is altered or terminated. In no case shall the tax imposed upon such competing commodity exceed that imposed per equivalent unit, as determined by the Secretary, upon the basic agricultural commodity.

Mr. JOHNSON. An extraordinary and amazing power we granted. Its very character should require its exercise only after most careful consideration and meticulous investigation. The most scrupulous study should precede action; and when even the possibility of injustice appears no tax should be levied. And if the possibility of injury be shown after action, that action ought, of course, to be rescinded.

THE PROCESSING TAX AND PRESENT-DAY TRENDS

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, with reference to the processing tax, which was discussed at some length in the Senate a few days ago, I desire to put in the RECORD some official data, which support my position, as I see the subject.

In the consideration of the Bankhead cotton-control bill a discussion arose with reference to the revenues to be returned to the Treasury from the processing tax. In order that everyone may understand the situation to date with reference to the processing tax and the expenditures of the Government under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, it is well to examine the record as it appears to date.

On page 189 of the Budget it is found that the estimated costs of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to June 30, 1934, will amount to $855,379,811; that in addition thereto the expenditures will include $37,000,000 payable from N.R.A. allotments, making a total of $892,000,000. These expenditures include permanent departmental employment of 230 people, and temporary departmental employees—total sum of $4,920,302; field employees, $4,224,623; agricultural rental and benefit payments of $724,276,400; removal of surplus agricultural products, $85,000,000.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding, the estimates for 1935 amount to $831,022,428. In order to offset this, under the terms of the Agricultural Adjustment Act a processing tax was to be levied, with the understanding that the Treasury was to be reimbursed for all advancements previously made.

The Treasury statement of March 30, 1934, shows that the total amount of the processing tax for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1933, to March 30, 1934, amounts to $237,701,678.61; that the collection for the month of March amounts to $36,796,532.06. Estimating 3 additional months at a similar rate per month, the Government will collect for the months of April, May, and June an additional $110,389,596.18. This should be a liberal estimate, for the reason that much of the processing tax is imposed upon fresh meats and, in all probability, the returns from this tax will decrease rather than increase during the months above named. For this reason I believe that the estimate given is liberal.

Therefore, taking into account the estimated revenues to June 30, 1934, of $348,091,274.79 and deducting the same from the total expense estimated by the Budget, of $892,379,811, we find an estimated deficit June 30 under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of $544,288,536.21.

Yet the former administration was condemned on account of the loss of $270,000,000 by the Federal Farm Board and accused of being extravagant. This would indicate that in the first fiscal year of the present administration, we will more than double said loss, with commitments for many millions of dollars running into the next fiscal year.

In addition to that, Mr. President, we have just passed a bill which makes dairy products an agricultural commodity. It also includes peanuts, barley, flax, and so forth. In addition thereto we have authorized the expenditure of $200,000,000 to supplement that legislation. I am simply making the suggestion so we will have some idea where the present program is leading us. In other words, the theory that the Government is more than maintaining its fiscal balance and paying its way in the actual Budget is erroneous. Why? Because there are not included many items which have been heretofore regularly appropriated under the appropriation acts passed by Congress. Likewise there are not included many commitments of the Government by legislative enactment, but rather temporary expenditures are made for items so as to show an apparent reduction in the regular expenditures in order to indicate that more is coming in than is being paid out, so far as regular expenditures are concerned.

Therefore I think there is some cause for worry as to where we are being led under the present program. I am not one who is disposed to be an alarmist. I think there are certain trends which ought to be recognized. I believe those trends are pretty far-reaching, and I think we might as well recognize them now. In doing so I shall refer to a letter by W. S. Mansfield, published in the Chicago Daily News under date of March 28, 1934, in which he suggests switching platforms:

SWITCHING PLATFORMS

A review of the Democratic Party platform adopted by the national convention, Chicago, July 22, 1932, discloses that probably the five most vitally important principles of that solemn covenant have either been wholly repudiated or are in process of nullification. These important principles, as adopted, are:

1. We favor maintenance of the national credit by a Federal Budget balanced on the basis of accurate executive estimates within revenues. * * *

2. We advocate a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards. * * *.

It is my understanding that according to the Secretary of the Treasury's own statement we are on a daily, or monthly, monetary basis, because the Treasury does not know what the next day will bring.

3. We advocate * * * a fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference. * * *

Yet we have pending a bill, which will soon be brought before the Senate, asking that the Executive be given authority to fix tariff schedules as he sees fit, within 50 percent of the existing rate either up or down.

4. The removal of Government from all fields of private enterprise, except where necessary to develop public works and natural resources in the common interest.

Yet I do not know of a time when we have seen gathered in Washington so many representatives of every type of business on earth, all hoping they will get something under a code which will help them survive the pressure that is now being put upon them under the N.R.A. The railroads and the hotels of Washington should be up here lobbying for the N.R.A., because it has been the greatest source of revenue they have had for many, many years; because it has brought people to Washington from all over the United States, in an effort to try to see that the codes are arranged suitably to protect their own particular interests.

5. We condemn the extravagance of the Farm Board—

That is the reason I wanted to read the letter. As a matter of fact, according to the estimates the administration itself has given, a deficit of over $500,000,000 is shown in the administration of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Yet we find that in paragraph no. 5 it is said:

5. We condemn the extravagance of the Farm Board, its disastrous action, which made the Government a speculator of farm products, and the unsound policy of restricting products to the demands of domestic markets.

As a matter of fact, what do we have? We have the restriction of corn, and hogs, and cattle, and dairy products, and cotton, and wheat, all under a system of regimentation, and it seems to be the policy of the present administration to continue along those lines.

Therefore I say there is apparent a trend, and where it is going to lead us I do not know, although we find that none of the principles to which I have just referred have been carried out.

There has just been published a book by Dr. Rexford G. Tugwell and Howard B. Hill, Our Economic Society and Its Problems. It is my understanding that this book has been prepared by Dr. Tugwell for the purpose of being used as a textbook in the colleges and universities of the country, and that it has been amended and revised to some extent by Mr. Hill in an attempt to make it a suitable book to be placed in the high schools of the country. In other words, this is educational propaganda, as I see it, for the purpose of getting the book into the hands of the private educational institutions and the public schools in order that the principles laid down therein may be taught to the young people of this country in their school days.

I turn to page 531, and in contrast to the principles I have just read from the platform of the Democratic Party I want to read six of the articles of the Socialist platform of 1932. This is not the platform on which Franklin Delano Roosevelt got 22,000,000 votes, or on which Herbert Hoover got 16,000,000 votes, but it is the platform on which Norman Thomas got a little over 800,000 votes.

1. Unemployment and labor legislation. A Federal appropriation of $5,000,000,000 for immediate relief.

We have not quite reached that maximum yet, but we are going in that direction pretty fast.

A Federal appropriation of $5,000,000,000 for Public Works and roads, reforestation, slum clearance, and decent homes for workers. The 6-hour day and the 5-day week without a reduction of wages. Compulsory unemployment insurance. Old-age pensions. Abolition of child labor. Adequate minimum-wage laws.

2. Social ownership. Social ownership of mines, forests, oil and power resources, public utilities dealing with light and power, transportation and communication, and all other basic industries. The operation of these socialized industries by boards on which the wage earner, the consumer, and the technician are adequately represented.

3. Banking. Socialization of our credit and currency system and the establishment of a unified banking system.

I have in my desk a statement showing that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation now owns as high as 75 to 80 percent of the capital stock in some of the leading banks of the United States, and that the Corporation has invested something over $3,000,000,000 in preferred stock of various banks. In other words, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in behalf of the Government, is almost as much an owner of the stocks of the various banks of the country as are the individual and the private owners themselves. The Government is fast getting into the banking business.

4. Taxation. Steeply increased inheritance taxes and income taxes on higher incomes.

5. Agriculture. Reduction of tax burdens; creation of a Federal marketing agency for the purchase and marketing of farm products.

That is just about where we are headed for under the present law.

6. Constitutional changes. An amendment to the Constitution to make constitutional amendments less cumbersome.

It is my impression that if many people had their way now the Constitution would be amended to the point where we would not have any Constitution. They think that every restriction provided in the Constitution against carrying out their hobbies is a limitation on their ambition, and therefore they want to do away with the Constitution.

Abolition of the power of the Supreme Court to pass upon the constitutionality of legislation enacted by Congress.

We have almost reached that stage.

That gives us some idea of what the Socialist platform is. I will read further from Mr. Mansfield's letter:

Perusal of the Socialist Party platform adopted by the national convention, Milwaukee, Wis., May 25, 1932, reveals that 9 out of 12 items listed under unemployment and labor legislation, as well as a number of other measures listed under social ownership, banking, taxation, and agriculture, have either been put into actual practice already or are strongly advocated by the present administration.

The evidence thus presented convinces one, unfortunately too late, that, under the camouflage of national emergency, a brainstorm trust of radical sociologists has instituted a comprehensive program of social and economic reforms which are highly theoretical and idealistic, exceedingly impractical, opposed to all reason and experience and to scientific economic laws; and that those of us who innocently but in all sincerity voted the Democratic ticket in substance voted the Socialist ticket.

W. S. MANSFIELD.

CHICAGO.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am trying to follow the Senator in his remarks. What is his complaint? Is he picking out some particular thing that someone has done?

Mr. DICKINSON. If the Senator will just listen a while he will find out what the complaint is.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas has been listening for sometime, and he has not as yet found out.

Mr. DICKINSON. I showed that there is going to be a deficit of over $5Q0,000,000. Does that attract the attention of the Senator from Texas at all?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly it attracts it, but it does not attract it as much as it did when the administration of the Senator's party had a deficit of $5,000,000,000.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, yes; but I am talking about one item, only one item, and it is only the beginning; remember that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is only what? The Senator from Texas always listens to the Senator from Iowa, but rarely understands him.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. May I say that if the Senator from Iowa, who during the last administration was in favor of economy, continues to vote for the highest possible appropriations every time he gets a chance in this Congress he will not see the last of deficits.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to suggest that if the present administration should adopt a program of economy and adhere to it, it would have my cooperation, but if it is going to adopt a program of curtailing on one hand and then voting money away by the billions of dollars on the other, it will not have my cooperation in that type of economy, because it is wasteful; it evidences mismanagement; it is not the type of economy that will ever get us out of the depression.

Mr. BYRNES. Will the Senator yield again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield further to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. Can the Senator name any single item in any appropriation bill which he has voted to reduce since this Congress convened?

Mr. DICKINSON. That I voted to reduce?

Mr. BYRNES. In the Committee on Appropriations has the Senator voted for a single reduction of any appropriation or has he failed to vote for any proposed increase of appropriations?

Mr. DICKINSON. The only appropriation that I voted to increase was that for the Federal employees and the soldiers' compensation.

Mr. BYRNES. Can the Senator name any item of appropriation he ever voted to reduce?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not know that we have before us any proposal to reduce expenditures. The Democrats are increasing expenditures all the time and not decreasing them.

Mr. BYRNES. Has the Senator as yet proposed a reduction in any appropriation?

Mr. DICKINSON. No; I want the administration of the Senator's party to run this Government, and that is what it is trying to do, and I do not believe it will quit until it shall have wrecked the credit of the Government of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I like to hear the Senator speak, and sometimes like a political controversy, but we met today at 12 o'clock to take up an important measure which is designed to raise $330,000,000 of revenue. I am not saying this in criticism of the Senator, because the Senator has not occupied any time, mind you; he has just begun; and my appeal is not to the Senator, but to other Senators. Will they not allow us to get started on this great tax bill just as soon as possible?

Mr. DICKINSON. I have a good amendment to the bill which I want to present after a while.

Mr. HARRISON. If it is a good amendment it will be adopted.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am going to propose now, in view of the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], that none of the Public Works money heretofore appropriated shall be used for erecting a new Interior Department building in the city of Washington, D.C. I hope the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from South Carolina will accept the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. I can say that so far as the Senator from South Carolina is concerned he will vote for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is very kind; we will again cooperate.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to say to the Senator if he will just stop talking I will vote for his amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. There are a few more things that I think Senators on the other side ought to know about Dr. Tugwell, and which I want to put in the RECORD before I quit.

In order that we may understand the program that is being carried out, let me refer to an interesting observation made by Dr. R. G. Tugwell before the American Economic Association in Washington, D.C., in December 1931, as published in the American Economic Review Supplement of March 1932. In this address there was set forth the very foundation—indeed, the very formation of the type of legislative program that is now being carried out. Let me read from the first paragraph:

> There can be no secure peace in the world so long as its people are engaged in industry and organized in independent units. It is difficult to discriminate between what is a racket and what is simply business. All this is the essence of laissez faire. War in industry is just as ruinous as war among nations, and equally strenuous measures are taken to prevent it. It is my belief that practically all of this represents unconsidered adherence to a slogan or perhaps a withdrawal from the hard lessons of depression years, and it remains unrelated to a vast background of revision and reorganization among our institutions which would condition its functioning.
> Some say easy this way, but they do not understand it. This amounts, in fact, to the abandonment of laissez faire. It amounts to practically the abolition of business. That is what planning calls for. Those who talk most about this sort of change are not contemplating sacrifice. They are expecting gains. Business as we know it is chiefly interested in profit, and if these are disestablished, a certain kind of enterprise will disappear.

Mr. President, in order to avoid reading further, I am going to ask that the entire quotation be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Excerpts from the address of R. G. Tugwell, before the forty-fourth annual meeting of the American Economic Association in Washington, D.C., in December 1931. It was published in the American Economic Review Supplement, March 1932:

There can be no secure peace in the world so long as its people are engaged in industry and organized in independent units. It is difficult to discriminate between what is a racket and what is simply business. All this is the essence of laissez faire. War in industry is just as ruinous as war among nations, and equally strenuous measures are taken to prevent it. It is my belief that practically all of this represents an unconsidered adherence to a slogan or perhaps a withdrawal from the hard lessons of depression years, and it remains unrelated to a vast background of revision and reorganization among our institutions which would condition its functioning. Some say easy this way, but they do not understand it. This amounts, in fact, to the abandonment of laissez faire. It amounts to practically the abolition of business. That is what planning calls for. Those who talk most about this sort of change are not contemplating sacrifice. They are expecting gains. Business as we know it is chiefly interested in profit, and if these are disestablished a certain kind of enterprise will disappear.

Most of us ought not to have been quite so free in our predictions that the institutions of Soviet Russia would break down from a failure of motive. It ought to be a source of wonder that a society could operate at all when profits are allowed to be earned and disposed of as we do it.

Every depression period wearies us with insecurity; the majority of us seem all to be whipped at once; and what we long for temporarily is safety rather than adventure. Planning seems at first to offer this safety and so gains a good deal of unconsidered support. But when it is discovered that planning for production means planning for consumption, too; that something more is involved than simple limitation to amounts which can be sold at any price producers temporarily happen to find best for themselves; that profits must be limited and their uses controlled; that what really is implied is something not unlike an integrated group of enterprises run for its consumers rather than for its owners—when all this gradually appears there is likely to be a great changing of sides.

Strange as it may seem—directly antithetical to the interests of business and unlikely to be allowed freedom of speech, to say nothing of action—it seems altogether likely that we shall set up, and soon, such a consultative body.

When the Chamber of Commerce of the United States is brought to consent, realization cannot be far off. It seems to me quite possible to argue that in spite of its innocuous nature, the day in which it comes into existence will be a dangerous one for business. There may be a long and lingering death, but it must be regarded as inevitable.

It is necessary to realize quite finally that everything will be changed if the linking of industry can finally be brought to completion in a plan.

We have traveled a long road to this threshold we now consider crossing. The setting up of an effective cntral coordinating body in Washington will form a focus about which recognition may gradually gather. For we have a century and more of development to undo.

Any new economic council will be hampered on every side; it will be pressed for favors and undermined by political jobbery. It will not dare to call its soul its own nor speak its mind in any emergency. But it will be a clear recognition—one that can never be undone—that order and reason are superior to adventurous competition. * * * Let it be as poor a thing as it may, still it will be a constant reminder that once business was sick to death and may be again. Planning will necessarily become a function of the Federal Government; either that or the planning agency will supersede that Government, which is why, of course, such a scheme will eventually be assimilated to the State rather than possess some of its powers without its responsibilities.

* * * * * * *

It has already been suggested that business will logically be required to disappear. This is not an overstatement for the sake of emphasis; it is literally meant.

* * * * * * *

We shall not—we never do—proceed to the changes suggested all at once. Little by little, however, we may be driven the whole length of this road; once the first step is taken, which we seem about to take, that road will begin to suggest itself as the way to a civilized industry. For it will become more and more clear, as thinking and discussion centers on industrial and economic rather than business problems, that not very much is to be gained until the last step is taken. What seems to be indicated now is years of gradual modification, accompanied by agonies and recriminations, without much visible gain; then, suddenly, as it was with the serialization of machines, the last link will almost imperceptibly find its place, and suddenly we shall discover that we have a new world, as, some years ago, we suddenly discovered that we had unconsciously created a new industry.

Most of those who say so easily that this is our way out do not, I am convinced, understand that fundamental changes of attitude, new disciplines, revised legal structures, unaccustomed limitations on activity, are all necessary if we are to plan. This amounts, in fact, to the abandonment, finally, of laissez faire. It amounts, practically, to the abolition of business.

But a mature and rational economy which considered its purposes and sought reasonable ways to attain them would certainly not present many of the characteristics of the present, its violent contrasts of well-being, its irrational allotments of individual liberty, its unconsidered exploitation of human and natural resources. It is better that these things be recognized early rather than late.

We shall all of us be made unhappy in one way or another, for things we love, as well as things that are only privileges, will have to go.

The first changes will have to do with statutes, with constitution, with government. We shall be changing once for all, and it will require the laying of rough, unholy hands on many a precedent.

There is no private business, if by that we mean one of no consequence to anyone but its proprietors; and so none exempt from compulsion to serve a planned public interest. Furthermore, we shall have to progress sufficiently far in elementary realism to recognize that only the Federal area, and often that, is large enough to be coextensive with modern industry; and that consequently the States are wholly ineffective instruments of control. All three of these wholesale changes are required by even a limited acceptance of the planning idea, doubtless calling on an enlarged and naturalized police power for enforcement.

Perhaps our vested interests will submit. Perhaps our statesmen will give way. It seems just as credible that we may have a revolution, yet the new kind of economy cannot function in our present economy. The situation is such that the choices are hard, yet one of them has to be made. There is no denying the contemporary situation in the United States has explosive possibilities.

The future is becoming visible in Russia. No one can pretend to know how the release of this pressure is likely to come. It may be by calling on the organized police power for enforcement. There is no private business exempt from compulsion to serve a planned public interest. The essence of business in its free venture for profits is unregulated economy. Planning implies guidance to all business. To take away from business its freedom of venture and expansion, and to limit the profits it may make, is to destroy it as business and to make it something else.

So long as it was possible we tried to delude ourselves, in one way or another, that purpose existed and that it had a definite reference to mankind; all that comfort is torn away now, and we remain poor, inconsequent creatures exposed to chance developments which are neither kind nor untried with reference to ourselves, but simply impersonal.

* * * * * * *

It is, in other words, a logical impossibility to have a planned economy and to have businesses operating its industries, just as it is also impossible to have one within our present constitutional and statutory structure.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I will not delay the Senator from Mississippi very long. There are just one or two more expressions in this book to which I wish to refer, following the address delivered in Washington in 1931. On page 541 of this famous book, which has just been published and placed in the library in February of this year, I find this statement:

As we approach the end of this book we may say that it has presented a great issue: How can we raise levels of living in the United States? * * * The objectives are clear. * * * We must act, and we cannot act without planning. To act in the public interest, we must plan on a national scale. To put national plans into effect, we set up social controls. These two processes constitute economic planning.

What we hear most about all along the line here is economic planning.

For many years the technical task of devising plans for regulating our complex economic interests was too difficult to attempt. But today we know that this is no longer true, for Russia has shown that planning is practicable. Thinkers in our own land, too, have advanced plans which do not seem Utopian dreams. * * *

The real obstacle to economic planning is the set of ideals that we have carried over from an earlier day and which developed to fit a totally different economic situation. We continue to think in terms of individualism and competitive profit seeking long after the conditions favorable to that economic philosophy have passed away. In undertaking economic planning, we need not accept any particular plan or any specific set of objectives. We need rather to set out in the scientific spirit to solve our pressing economic problems.

I omit portions of a page or so and come to the purpose of this book, which is to advocate economic planning.

Purpose of this book. This book has been planned to develop and express an experimental attitude.

We have been told that the present one is an administration of trial and error—mostly trial and all error, so far as I have been able to see.

We have never meant to be dogmatic, but only to be helpful. We have not attempted to present problems so as to close the argument, but only to open it more widely for thoughtful consideration. If this book has helped to develop an experimental attitude—

And we are just going to proceed on a long campaign of experiment.

If it has clarified the nature of our economic life, and has awakened intelligent interest in and focused attention on the key problems of American Economic Society, it has served its purpose.

So we find what is the purpose of economic planning. Now, let us find out what the author says economic planning will do. I quote from page 543, headed "Summary."

Complete economic planning is possible only when there is public ownership and control of the means of production.

No wonder one of the distinguished employees or assistants in this administration went to New York the other night and said that we made a mistake in ever parting with the land in this country, that we ought to have kept it all and collectivized farms, as has been done in Russia, to be operated, if you please, on a collectivized basis.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I have here from the same book an excerpt which the Senator has not quoted. May I read it?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I read:

Private control has failed to use wisely its control of land. For the first time the Government is thinking of the land as a whole. For the first time we are preparing to build a land program which will control the use of that greatest of all natural resources not merely for the benefit of those who happen to hold title to it, but for the greater welfare of all the citizens in the country.

I should like to have the Senator comment on that suggestion, that land is to be controlled not for the persons who happen to hold the title to it but for the welfare of all citizens. It appears that individuals should not hold title to the land, but evidently the Government should hold title to it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me suggest that, if that contention be sound, then the $2,000,000,000 appropriated by the Congress for Federal land-bank loans in order that the farmers may hold their farms and the $2,000,000,000 appropriated for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in order that the people may hold their homes, is money wasted. What we ought to do is to say that the Government should have all this property and that no individual should own any of it.

Mr. FESS. Is not that the direct conclusion, the inevitable conclusion, from the quotation I have just read?

Mr. DICKINSON. Absolutely. Let me suggest further that what made this country great was the right of a man to go out and secure a little piece of land which he could occupy as a home and maintain it for himself and family and, on the land which he owned, to raise the necessaries of life, giving him an assurance that his family was going to be fed and clothed.

Let me quote further:

In the United States the Communists seek to achieve this objective by a revolution engineered by the proletariat. The Socialists, although desiring the same type of society, are willing to work gradually for its orderly attainment. In the meantime they propose considerable labor legislation, the socialization of primary industries and of banking, high taxation of wealth, and revision of the Constitution.

Revision of the Constitution, if you please! Oh, the Constitution, the thing that has been protecting American rights all these years, is now found to be in the way of this economic planning about which we hear so much.

The second group of proposals for economic planning suggests (1) Government ownership of many industries.

We do not own the railroads. We have loaned them enough money so that we own them to all intents and purposes, except that we have not taken possession of them. I suppose it would be an easy matter to take possession of them if someone had such a motive in mind. We are lending money to the banks to the point where we now have ownership of practically one half of the bank stock of the United States. It would be an easy matter to take over the banking system of the United States. Now it is proposed to make loans to industry. In a little while, if we lend anybody enough money and they cannot pay it back, we soon own their industry. We seem to be drifting in that direction.

I continue quoting:

And (2) a Government agency with power to fix production, prices, credit, and wages so as to coordinate private economic activity in the public interest.

That is what we are doing under the N.R.A. We are not very far from this socialistic program I have been reading.

Under such planning the Government would operate through a series of voluntary boards—

What have we here? We have a board which is assistant to General Johnson. It has had on its membership most of the leading corporation magnates in the United States of whom I know—Mr. Sloan, Mr. Swope, Mr. Taylor, Mr. McInerney, and so on down the line.

I continue quoting:

Under such planning the Government would operate through a series of voluntary boards or syndicates at the head of each industrial, commercial, and agricultural group. These proposals seek to exercise a leveling effect upon incomes and to stabilize economic affairs, at the same time allowing scope for private initiative within the various groups.

The third group of proposals suggests economic planning by allowing all the businesses within an industry to plan, cooperate, and combine, with a Government agency serving in an advisory capacity and sometimes possessing veto power. This type of planning does not touch the central problem of subordinating the profit motive to social welfare.

In other words, we are going to have profits subordinated to the public welfare. When we take a profit out of business, what do we do? We take away the incentive for going into business. In Russia, what happened? When they first started on their program over there they said to the farmer, "If you will take a piece of land, you can have all the grain and all the stock you raise on that piece of land that you need in order to keep your own family, but the remainder you shall turn over to the Government for the general purpose of feeding the population." The only trouble with the whole program was that the farmer never raised any to turn over to the Government with which to feed the general public. He knew when he had raised enough to keep his own family that that was all he was going to need, and that is one of the reasons why they have been forced to collectivize all the lands of Russia.

As to the third type of planning, Mr. Tugwell says:

It is likely to result in an increasing concentration of power within a private industry which will make genuine economic planning and social control even more necessary than it is today.

Let me suggest that this increased concentration of power within a private industry has resulted in the ability of great associations, representing the major industries of the country, to get together and formulate their codes in a way whereby they have been able to increase the costs to the consumer all along the line. There is no question about the increase. The increase is absolutely being passed on to the consumer wherever possible.

What else? It is centralizing our big industries in larger units all the time, and we find that trade associations which a few years ago were struggling in their efforts to maintain their existence are now thriving. Why? Because business men realized that in order to gain their objective they had to join a trade association. It is on this account, as I said, that the hotels of Washington and the railroads of the country ought to be thorough advocates of the N.R.A., because the railroads have been bringing to Washington and the hotels of Washington have been caring for people from all over the country who are coming here in their endeavors to incorporate their own ideas in the codes.

In one respect everyone admits the code system is faulty, for after a code has been agreed upon and arranged so that all the conflicting interests think they are cared for, then we find that someone goes out and violates the code. What does big industry do now? In order to make the plan successful they say we have to have enforcement of the N.R.A. code by the Government itself. In other words, they want the Government to assume the responsibility of trying to enforce business ethics among business men. We tried for a number of years to enforce a law to control men's appetites. I am told we did not succeed very well. Now we are going much further than that to say that we are not only going to impose upon a man the laws under which he shall live but we are going to have the Government going around snooping into his business to find out whether or not he is following out the code that has been imposed upon him by Government regulation.

I do not care whether Senators read America Must Choose, or We Are On the Way, or the other new book, the name of which escapes me at the moment, or Our Economic Society and Its Problems; the facts are that the program is impracticable and impossible, and the sooner the Government gets away from attempting to enforce these regulations the better it will be for the Government.

What is the last sentence in this wonderful book?—

The chief handicap to overcome is our allegiance to ideals that belong to an earlier industrial setting. In place of adhering to blind traditionalism we should develop an open-minded experimental attitude toward social and economic institutions and problems.

We want to forget all about the past. We want to forget all of the things that tradition has taught us. We want to forget all about the Constitution. We want to forget all about the teachings of history for all of these years. We are going to have a new deal now, and we are going to apply these principles. I want to say to you it will wreck this country unless we find a method by which we can go into reverse gear.

In place of adhering to blind traditionalism we should develop an open-minded experimental attitude toward social and economic institutions and problems.

Think of that book being put into the universities and into the high schools of this country for the purpose of teaching the young people of this country that the Constitution ought to be amended, and probably done away with.

Just one word in closing: On Sunday there was published in the Washington Star an article entitled "How the United States Has Divided Relief Burdens with the Various States." According to statistics covering the first 11 months of the calendar year 1933, the latest statistics available, only two States outranked the District in this respect.

To avoid taking unnecessary time I ask to have a tabulation of those States and the benefits they received and the percentages of Federal relief furnished by the Government inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DICKINSON. I desire to make just a brief comment with reference to the article.

There are 12 States where the Federal Government has furnished more than 92.6 percent of all relief.

There are nine States where the Federal Government has furnished more than 80.1 percent of all relief.

There are six States where the Federal Government has furnished less than 20 percent. Those States are Massachusetts, Vermont, Maine, the District of Columbia, Connecticut, and Wyoming.

I think this table is most interesting, and I think it has in it some information that all of us can read with interest.

I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to have inserted in the bill at the proper place, and ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

At the proper place insert the following new section:

"SEC. —. Public Works Administration—Public buildings in District of Columbia: No funds shall be made available by the Public Works Administration or any other Government agency for beginning the construction of any public building in the District of Columbia, until the Congress shall have specifically appropriated money for that purpose."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I realize how anxious the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is to proceed with the tax bill. I am a member of the Finance Committee and desire to speed the bill, but the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] has spent a good portion of the Senate's time in trying to open the Republican campaign for Congress this fall. He is going to have a very difficult time to get it opened unless he makes a better showing than he and Dr. Wirt have made and a few of those with whom he is in conspiracy to try to thwart the efforts of this administration in its heroic effort to repair the wreckage which he, along with the Hoover administration, had a large share in bringing about.

I am sure the modesty of the Senator from Iowa would disclaim any responsibility, but we all know what a prominent part he took in the Hoover administration.

I remember that he was the great friend of the farmer from Iowa when he arrived here in the Senate. I remember how we had our ears—we did not have to listen as we do to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS]—how we had our ears deafened with the booming oratory of the Senator from Iowa about what they were going to do for the farmers out in Iowa, and we followed them because there was no other way to go. We wanted the debenture, but when that was defeated we voted for the Farm Board bill. The Republicans were in control. We had to follow them on the Farm Board, and we all voted for the Farm Board; and we all know what happened to the American farmer and what happened to the American Treasury.

Now, the Senator from Iowa, who was one of the authors of that greatest blunder that was ever made in undertaking to aid agriculture, gets up on the floor of the Senate and tells us that he is afraid the Democratic Party is going to wreck the Treasury, and that he is going to help wreck it. He said that in effect. The Senator smiles. I challenge him to read the Official Reporter's transcript, and I want the Official Reporter to bring me the transcript of the Senator's speech. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] challenged the Senator from Iowa to point out a single appropriation that he had voted to reduce, and he said he had not voted to reduce any because he wanted to see us run amuck with reference to the Treasury.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. Speak of patriotism—patriotism! Some Senators may think I am going to be rough. I am not going to be rough; but I say, Mr. President, that for a Senator to stand upon the floor of the Senate and avow that he is willing that the Treasury of the United States shall be wrecked if it will help his puny little political fortunes is unworthy of a Senator, or unworthy of one who parades as a Senator, whether he comes from Iowa or from Texas or anywhere else.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield. I never inject a Senator into my speech unless I yield to him.

Mr. DICKINSON. The Senator from Texas knows very well that here in the Senate, and always, I have stood for a conservative financial budget; and it is only when the Democratic Party has gone off on a tangent, as you have gone off, with a waste of money, that I said to the Senator from South Carolina that apparently the only thing that would bring you to your senses would be a collapse of Federal finances. I desire to suggest now that the thing you are doing right here every day is the very thing that I think will have to happen before you will reach a termination and know "where you are at." In other words, you are on your way, but you do not know where. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. I know we are on the way.

Mr. DICKINSON. To wreckage.

Mr. CONNALLY. We are on the way out of the terrible mess that the Senator from Iowa and his party left us in on the 4th day of March 1933. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON rose.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me answer the Senator before he asks me another question.

The Senator from Iowa undertakes to explain what he said about wrecking the Treasury, but he does not deny the statement that he said here on the floor of the Senate that he is willing for the financial affairs of this Government and the Treasury to be wrecked if it will help his political party and his political fortunes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Now will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield; yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. The Senator knows that I never mentioned my political party. I said that the only thing that would bring you to your senses was a collapse of Federal finances, and I say the record indicates that that is the only thing that will bring you to your senses.

Mr. CONNALLY. And did not the Senator say he wanted that to happen?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no; I did not go that far.

Mr. CONNALLY. What did the Senator say?

Mr. DICKINSON. I said, just as I have repeated, that I thought that would be the only thing that would stop you in this orgy of expenditure.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask the Official Reporter to bring me the transcript of the Senator's remarks, and we will see what the Senator said. Everybody except the Senator from Iowa understands that he meant that he was willing for the Treasury to be wrecked so that he could rise up and say, "I told you so! I told you so!"

When the Senator from Iowa was interrogated by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], he did not deny that he had never voted to cut a single appropriation. Are not you on the other side of the Chamber just as responsible as we are on this side of the Chamber? Do you owe your country any less than we do? Is it not just as much your duty to vote against extravagant appropriations as it is our duty? Can you hide yourselves behind the shield of politics and wash your hands of responsibility for the conduct of this Government?

When we went into power on the 4th day of March last, when President Roosevelt, amid the clouds and the fogs that surrounded this Government, amid the grief and the gloom that 4 years of leadership of your party left us in, took the helm, and a Democratic Senate sat here in this Chamber and a Democratic House over at the other end of the Capitol, you said you wanted to help us. You said you wanted to stand by the President wherever you could. You went before the country, some of you, with hypocritical phrases to the effect that you were going to help the President pull us out. You did that for a while. You did that for a few months; and I am not indicting all the Senators on the other side. I am indicting those who, like the Senator from Iowa, profess to be concerned with the welfare of the country, and yet are playing politics 24 hours out of the 24.

The Senator from Iowa never goes under the N.R.A. The Senator from Iowa does not work merely 6 hours a day and 5 days a week as a partisan. He works 24 hours out of every day as a political sniper at the President and the administration, and everything they are undertaking to do.

Now, let us see about it.

The Senator from Iowa has complained about the extravagance of the Farm Board. I have already answered that. Of all the colossal failures, of all the abysmal blunders, of all the superlatively asinine accomplishments in behalf of agriculture the Farm Board, bearing the brand of the Senator from Iowa all over, will stand out in history as the greatest and the most marvelous cataclysm of legislation that ever was enacted.

What else is the matter with the present system, according to the Senator from Iowa? What is he complaining about? What has this administration done that he challenges? He does not challenge any one act. He just has a grouch, like an old woman with the rheumatism. [Laughter.] She knows she has a pain, and cannot quite locate it, but she knows she has it. That is the condition of the Senator from Iowa. Is he complaining because President Roosevelt saved the banking situation of the country? Why, the Senator from Iowa a while ago read a statement from somebody to the effect that if we did not look out the Government was going to be in the banking business. If we had followed the Senator from Iowa and his late lamented President Hoover, the Government would not have been in the banking business, and, by Gatlings! there would not have been anybody else in the banking business in this country [laughter], because the banks would have all closed their doors, most of them never to open again.

I ask the Senator from Iowa, is that what he is complaining about, because we saved the banking structure of the Nation? Is that where his pain is located?

What else is the Senator complaining about? Is the Senator from Iowa complaining because, instead of 13,000,000 of men walking the streets in idleness and in hunger, clothed in rags, and begging for a job, under this administration four or five million of those men have been returned to useful occupations? Is that his complaint?

I am wondering whether the Senator from Iowa is angry because factories in the States of Rhode Island, Wisconsin, Connecticut, and Maine, and many other States are now open, employing more men than they did in the olden days. Is that his complaint? Let him challenge it. Let him deny it.

Coming from a great farming State, is the Senator from Iowa complaining because wheat was selling for about 30 cents when this administration came into power and the same wheat now is selling for from 85 to 90 cents a bushel? I do not know the latest quotation. Is that the reason why the Senator from Iowa complains, that higher prices are being received by the farmer, for whom he has shed tears as big as a goose egg on this floor, but for whom I never saw him do anything in all his legislative career? Is that the complaint of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. President, is he angry because the corn out in Iowa, where the tall corn grows and where the short politicians grow [laughter]—I am wondering whether he is complaining that under the Roosevelt administration the corn, which he tells the voters he used to raise when he was a farm boy—I wonder if he is complaining that that corn is now selling for twice as much as it was selling for when Mr. Roosevelt took charge and the Democratic Party relieved the Senator from Iowa from any responsibility. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. Corn is selling for four or five times as much as it was.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. If you want to get the truth, call upon a Democrat from Iowa, and he will tell you the truth. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] says that corn is selling for four or five times as much in the State of Iowa, where the tall corn grows, as it was before. Yet the senior Senator from Iowa, the representative of those farmers out there in Iowa, spends his time here in denouncing the administration and in denouncing the President, who has made his farmers receive four times as much for their corn as they were getting before.

Mr. President, even hogs are higher. Iowa is a great hog State—a great hog State—a great hog State. [Laughter.] They are even getting more for hogs now than when Mr. Roosevelt took the President's chair, and when the Democratic Congress went to work on its program of restoration. Yet the thanks we get consist of denunciation from the senior Senator from Iowa, representing more hogs than any man who ever sat in this Chamber. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, what else is wrong? What have we done to ruin the country? Oh, he says, "the Constitution"! He is afraid that the Constitution is going to be violated. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must admonish the occupants of the gallery that it is against the rules of the Senate to give vent to feelings or to engage in demonstrations, and the Chair hopes the galleries will observe the rule.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa is worried about the Constitution.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have read what Mr. Tugwell, who is one of the "brain trusters" of the administration, said about the Constitution. I have explained his attitude.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall refer to Mr. Tugwell. I know Mr. Tugwell only by sight. I do not know the other "brain trusters." As far as I am concerned, I shall follow the advice of the "brain trusters" when I think they are right, and I shall not follow them when I think they are wrong.

The Senator from Iowa is worried about Mr. Tugwell's views. I do not think that Mr. Tugwell's views would have any influence at all on the Senator from Iowa. I do not think argument of any kind will have any influence on the Senator from Iowa if there is a partisan political question involved. I think that if there were 3 votes in a group and the Senator from Iowa should see those 3 votes, he would not see any other question involved. The Senator from Iowa reminds me of a swamp owl. The more light you throw around his head, the blinder he gets. [Laughter.]

The Senator quotes Mr. Tugwell. Who is Tugwell? He is an officer in the Department of Agriculture. This Government does not do what Mr. Tugwell wants done unless the Congress and the President say so. Mr. Tugwell is not running this Government any more than the Senator from Iowa is running it, thank God! [Laughter.]

Let me return to the Constitution. The Senator wanted to divert me from the Constitution. Oh, he is worried about the Constitution. Let him point out where the Constitution has been violated. The Constitution of the United States was made to serve the people of the United States. It was made to guarantee personal rights. But every time some old, hard-boiled, reactionary, crusty standpatter sees one of his dollars endangered by any kind of new legislation, he begins to talk about the Constitution, as if the only function the Constitution had to perform was to keep some scoundrel from robbing all of the people in the United States. Whenever you get after the trusts, whenever you get after the monopolies or the international bankers and companies that exploit the public, whenever you get after the high-income-tax dodgers, whenever you get after the Insulls, the deposed power kings who run away to hide themselves and their riches in foreign lands, and whenever you get them up to the bar of judgment, they begin to talk about the Constitution and about violating the Constitution. The Constitution is made to serve and protect the people. If it has been violated, the power of the courts may be invoked.

I have not consciously, as I am sure other Senators have not, in voting for legislation here, violated any of the provisions of the Constitution. I love and respect the Constitution. I want to see it observed and obeyed. Congress derives its power from the Constitution; and if it transgresses the limits of its authority, the courts were established to hold it in check. Why does not the Senator point out the trouble with these things? Let the Senator from Iowa point out where the Constitution has been violated. The trouble with him is that he is not worrying about the real Constitution; he is worrying about the constitution of his little political machine, which was wrecked on the rocks in November 1932; and if he ever gets it together again, he will have to use a magnet to attract its shattered fragments into one unit. I am talking about that little political organization they have out in Iowa which pretends to be for the American farmer, and then denounces this administration, the only administration that has ever done anything substantial and concrete for the American farmer in the past 50 years.

Where was your wheat? Where was your cotton? Where was your corn? Where were your hogs?

Mr. President, they talk about the "brain trust", and the Senator from Iowa is talking about Dr. Wirt.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I did not menton Dr. Wirt at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

Mr. DICKINSON. The Senator seems to have a mental obsession that I started in to talk about a lot of things. He is putting on a grand theatrical show, but he is not sticking to the facts.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. If I received the approval of the Senator from Iowa, I should begin to doubt both my Democracy and my duty as a Senator. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Iowa says he did not mention Dr. Wirt. He had Dr. Wirt in his mind; he had Dr. Wirt spread all over his clothes. I can see him. [Laughter.] He had Dr. Wirt on his lips and in his oratory. I could see Dr. Wirt's views like a halo gathered around the silvery locks of the Senator from Iowa.

Who is Dr. Wirt—this cheap publicity seeker? Who is this man who has discovered a conspiracy to wreck the country? How did he, out in Gary, Ind., find out these dark secrets which even the eagle eye and inquisitive mind of the astute trail blazer from Iowa could not ascertain?

Here, with all the committees in Washington, the congressional committees, and the National Republican Committee, and the Senator from Iowa, with his astute mind, they could not find out about this terrible conspiracy to destroy the Government and to make President Roosevelt a Kerensky and then replace him with a Stalin.

I shall read what Dr. Wirt says. I think that Dr. Wirt is just a sensation monger. He wants to make the headlines, and he does make the headlines. He is more successful than the Senator from Iowa in that respect.

This is what he says. Here is his pamphlet:

> America must lose by a "planned economy", the stepping-stone to a regimentated state.

Here is the whole deep, dark secret. Speak only in whispers.

> The most surprising statement made to me was the following—

This is supposed to have been made by someone in the "brain trust" to this man Wirt, in whom they had confidence. One does not convey one's secret, inmost thoughts to another in whom one has no confidence. Here was this "brain truster" giving out the dark conspiracy to Dr. Wirt, when he knew that Dr. Wirt would go immediately and put it in the newspaper. Either Dr. Wirt was in on the conspiracy and betrayed the conspirator, or else he is a base betrayer of confidences extended to him. Here is what the "brain truster" is supposed to have told Dr. Wirt:

> We believe that we have Mr. Roosevelt in the middle of a swift stream and that the current is so strong that he cannot turn back or escape from it. We believe that we can keep Mr. Roosevelt there until we are ready to supplant him with a Stalin. We all think that Mr. Roosevelt is only the Kerensky of this revolution.

The rules of the Senate prohibit me from expressing my opinion of that material. Of course, it is moonshine. I do not know who in the "brain trust" is supposed to have told that to Dr. Wirt.

What is the "brain trust"? The "brain trust" is composed of some advisers in the various departments. Nothing can be done in the way of enactment of law unless the law is passed by both branches of the Congress and receives the approval of the President, unless it be that his veto should be overridden by a two-thirds vote of both Houses. The talk about a conspiracy is all bunk.

Something has been said about a revolution. Mr. President, if to lift the country from ruin and wreckage and put it back on the highway to prosperity again be revolution, then we have had a revolution. If to open the banks that were closed by misfortune and by financial collapse and strengthen them and secure the deposits of depositors be revolution, then I say to the Senator from Iowa we are in the midst of a revolution. If to find agriculture, as in the Senator's own beloved Iowa, prostrate and in ruins, prostrated through a course of years, and to lift it up and set it on its feet and to give it a staff and to give it food and to give it raiment and put it again on the road that shall lead back to rehabilitation and restoration be revolution, then the Senator from Iowa is correct.

Mr. President, nations do not "revolute" when the hungry are fed and the naked are clad. Nations do not "revolute" when prosperity is abroad in the land. Nations do not "revolute" when they are convinced that those who rule them in legislative chambers and in executive halls are exerting their powers of government in behalf of the masses rather than the classes. Revolution comes when there is inspired in the hearts of the masses a belief that wrong and oppression are coming from above; when they feel that the Government exerts its powers to exalt the mighty and the powerful and the rich, and to grind down the humble and the poor. Revolution comes when hunger drives with a tremendous physical appeal and the mind is stirred and thrilled by a sense of wrong. In such hours as these revolutions come.

We are now on the upgrade. We are now back on the road to recovery. The hungry have been fed, the naked have been clothed, the unemployed are again busy with the implements of their toil at gainful occupations. Business is reviving. Corporations' dividends are increasing. The American people are becoming happy and prosperous once again. There is no revolution except the revolution from ruin to prosperity. There is no revolution except the revolution from a sense of despair, from a sense of suffering back yonder prior to March 1933, to a sense of confidence in government, confidence in President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who is leading us, and confidence in Congress, confidence that, through their efforts, America will soon come into its own again. If that be revolution—make the most of it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Iowa, and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Texas. I was wondering if the Senator from Iowa was trying to get revenge by voting for some of our Democratic measures because we Democrats voted so solidly for the Hoover measures. I was wondering if there was an effort to do that?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I want to refer to three or four items. I shall not be personal, as the Senator from Texas has been. That is not my style of debate. I stick to the facts and I do not deal in personalities.

The Senator from Texas referred to the banking situation. In the report furnished for the week ending February 3, 1934—and these reports are printed pursuant to a resolution passed by the Senate—the total commitments to make loans, purchase preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of banks of this country was $3,069,480,418.26. The total bank stock of the United States is approximately $8,000,000,000. That shows that we are almost reaching the 50-percent mark of bank control in the United States.

With reference to the Farm Board, concerning which the Senator from Texas dealt so long, the Federal Farm Board lost $270,000,000. It never had an appropriation of over $500,000,000. Much of that which was appropriated for it has already been returned to the Treasury. What has resulted under the operations of the present program? There have been commitments by the Department of Agriculture of over $855,000,000, and there has only been a repayment of $235,000,000 to date. The present administration is trying to do in a few months what it took the former, or Hoover Farm Board, as the Senator wants to call it, over 2 years to do.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Farm Board was created after both the Democratic and Republican Parties pronounced for it in their 1928 platforms.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is correct; and it was voted for almost as unanimously by the Democrats as by the Republicans.

Mr. FESS. And the Senator from Texas voted for it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas said he voted for it. What he is complaining about is that others fooled him, hoodwinked him, deceived him, and betrayed him into voting for that measure.

Mr. DICKINSON. The Senator from Texas has talked about the hungry being fed and clothed, and so forth and so on. I have just put into the RECORD a statement with regard to 11 of the States of the Union, and I desire to say that Alabama has received out of the Federal Treasury 97.2 percent of every dollar that State has used to feed the hungry.

The State of Texas, about which the Senator from that State brags so much, has received from the Federal Treasury 94.2 cents out of every dollar with which it has fed the poor of that State. Of course, when there is a Government out of whose Treasury a State can take the money fast enough, it can feed the poor. There is no question about that.

With reference to the Iowa situation: The processing tax has been imposed upon hogs. What has happened to the price of hogs? It went down just as fast as the processing tax was put on it.

We had a good price for hogs in July of last year, when there was a threatened inflation. Of course, we were being paid with 49- and 50-cent dollars. Our dollars were all cheapened, there is no question about that, but we had more of them, and we were feeling pretty good. Then what was done? A processing tax was imposed, and there were taken from the people of Iowa and the Midwestern States 6,000,000 pigs. Nine dollars a head was paid for a pig worth 75 cents. Of course, the fellow who had a 75-cent pig that he could sell for $9 felt good about it. But he knows that the scheme will not continue to work. Why? Because the Federal taxpayers of the United States will not continue to pay in the money to provide that sort of fund.

What else has happened? The Senator from Texas says nothing about it, but it is now proposed, by new legislation, to regiment the number of pigs that one can raise on a farm, the number of bales of cotton that one can produce on a farm, the number of acres of corn that one can plant on a farm. There is proposed to be a regimentation of agriculture all along the line. By whom was that suggested? It was not suggested by Secretary Wallace. He said yesterday, according to the New York Times of today—

> I think we must look forward to more and more reliance upon voluntary cooperation among farmers and view proposals for regimentation with skepticism, at least until the experiment proves its worth.

Who put regimentation into the farm bill? It was not Secretary Wallace; it was done by the theorists; and I say to you, Mr. President, the record is plain enough if you will read the book from which I have just quoted and also read the various speeches of Mr. Tugwell, to show that Mr. Tugwell is a man who believes in regimentation; he believes in a planned economy. I do not know Dr. Wirt. I never heard of Dr. Wirt until his statement was published in the newspapers.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I never have been able to see why there should be any row between Democrats and Republicans on the farm problem. What is the difference between the Hoover proposition and what we propose? Hoover proposed that cotton be plowed under in the South, but we would not let him do it. Then we came along and plowed up the cotton because our mules could do it better than his mules. There is no difference there. I never have seen any difference in the attitude of the two parties on the farm problem. We row in Congress, and Democrats accuse Republicans of ruining everything because they voted one way, and the Republicans accuse us of ruining everything just because we did not vote with them, but they all stood for the same thing. I do not see why we should waste the time of the Senate rowing over Democratic farm policies and Republican farm policies when the only difference between them is that one of them got a lot more money to spend than the other did and spent it a little faster; that is all. It is true Hoover did not propose to kill all the fat pigs, but he proposed to plow under the cotton; and although we voted him out, he must have been right, for we just went him one better. There is no difference in the policy; there is no difference in plowing up good cotton and killing a good live pig. We just doubled up on that proposal; so I think where the Republicans are making their mistake is in not claiming that we went and adopted the Hoover policies when they might have made good with them. That seems to be the only complaint. I do not see the object of the argument.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, in reference to the farm problem, there is a great deal of difference. The only control provided in the Federal Farm Board law was market control, but now the party in power are going further than that; they are limiting acreage. There is in a bill now pending before Congress an appropriation of $724,276,400 to pay rentals on land, and, on top of that, they are limiting production; they are regimenting agriculture. No one in the Republican administration ever suggested such a thing.

As a matter of fact, the banks that were closed on March 4 caused a deflation in this country, as is stated by Walter Lippmann, which has prevented a recovery under the N.R.A. and the A.A.A. We have two theories here, one counterchecking the other. One is for deflation and the other is for expansion. Walter Lippmann is right when he says that, following out the monetary policy of today, you are not going to be able to have expansion in industry, while, on the other hand, you are putting forth all your efforts to try to expand industry and to expand agriculture. I make that suggestion, regardless of the merriment the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] may create on the floor of the Senate. I have listened to him in debate for many years; he is always entertaining, but he pays little attention to facts, pays no attention to the history of legislation, and misstates a good many arguments when he advances them. We all like him; but we pay no attention to him. I do not want to reply personally to him, but I wanted to put these facts in the RECORD.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the first amendment passed over.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 15——

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the clerk finishes reading the amendment, the Senator will be recognized.

Mr. FESS. After the clerk has finished?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I am addressing the Presiding Officer before the clerk begins.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio now want to address the Senate?

Mr. FESS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the present Presiding Officer has had a long period of discipline in both branches of Congress and recognizes that the Senator who is addressing the Senate does not violate the rules of the Senate. That is why I am asking the Chair now to recognize me.

Mr. President, the temptation to enter into an elaborate discussion of the subject that has been projected into the debate is very great, but I am not going to embrace that opportunity. I am not going to do so because I want to give freedom to the committee that has in charge the pending tax bill.

I only want to take time enough at the present moment to say, after listening to the eloquent address of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], in which he referred to recovery, that it would appear to me he would feel considerably embarrassed in giving the assurance that recovery is here, in the light of all the facts which have been reported to us. Secretary Ickes announces that there have been a million people employed on public works, Director Hopkins announces there have been 4,000,000 employed under the C.W.A., and General Johnson announces that there have been 3,000,000 employed under the activities of the N.R.A., making an aggregate of 8,000,000 people reemployed by the sharing of work, the spreading of labor, the shortening of hours, and by the Government's stimulus to industry; but when the head of the Federation of Labor makes the statement that today there are 11,670,000 unemployed in industry, it is a very embarrassing statement, if it be true, because that would indicate that the reemployment, in spite of the tremendous expenditures by the Government in trying to take up unemployment, has not been substantially a success. So I should think that those facts would be somewhat embarrassing to the Senator, who in his eloquent address indicates that prosperity is here. I regret to say that all business is being put to the severest test. While we all hope that there may be substantial recovery, it is not here as yet, and the prospect is not very promising, as it appears to me.

That, however, was not what I arose to say. I desire to refer to the statement of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], reinforced by the reading of many letters, upon the basis of which the Senator expressed the hope that the Secretary of Agriculture would withdraw the processing tax. I was wondering if the processing tax should be withdrawn, whether there would be any method under the A.A.A. to bring about agriculture recovery. The processing tax was announced by the promoters of the legislation as a basis for the assurance of an increase in the price of commodities. Wherever the processing tax could be assessed on the consumer, we would have an increase in prices, but if the processing tax were assessed on the producer, it would not only take up all the advantage of the increase in price but would probably be a direct injury beyond what had been suffered before the law was passed. If there is any way for the Secretary of Agriculture to withdraw the processing tax, I should like to see it done; but what would become of the administration of the law if it were done?

I was impressed greatly with the observations made by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. I was impressed by the statement that there was no complaint to be offered against the Secretary of Agriculture. I agree with him as to that. The Secretary of Agriculture was given the authority to lay and collect taxes; and if he has the authority and exercises it, there is not any basis for us to complain of his action. I simply rose to state that there were 20 Members of this body who refused to give to the Secretary of Agriculture such power over taxation. I wanted to state this much while we were discussing the question of taxation, because in the writing of any taxing bill there should be uppermost the idea of clarity, definiteness, the avoidance of ambiguity, so as to relieve any necessity of judicial construction or interpretation of what a law is. I think that has been observed in a large way in the pending bill as reported by the Committee on Finance.

It is in direct, sharp contrast with the law we call the Agricultural Adjustment Act. That law is replete with uncertainty. There is no element of clarity in it. There is no one who can tell what the tax will be. The authority to lay the tax, usually regarded under the Constitution as the Congress, is delegated to an individual, and the individual himself does not know what the tax will be. The authority under which he is acting is as follows:

> The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury shall jointly estimate from time to time the amounts currently required for such payments and expenses, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall advance, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Secretary of Agriculture the amount so estimated.

That involves a mere guess. No one knows what the tax will be. Not only that, but, as I see it, that is a clear contravention of the authority under the Constitution which requires that all moneys that come out of the Treasury must come by virtue of an act of Congress; while this law ab initio appears to authorize a drawing from the Treasury of funds that are not yet in the Treasury, and even funds to be made up by assessments that are not yet made. It seems to me it is a far stretch of authority. Usually all moneys collected are collected under certain regulations. All moneys collected go into the Treasury. Here are moneys which are to be expended before they get to the Treasury. That was authorized by the act of April 1933. On that occasion this statement was made:

> The tax is not yet fixed. The tax is not yet collected. The tax is supposed to go to the Treasury; but the tax is taken out of the Treasury, in violation of the Constitution, by the act that authorizes it to be placed in the Treasury, the appropriation being made even before the tax is collected.

Nothing like this has ever been suggested in either legislative body of our country since its beginning. The law reads:

> To obtain the revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of the existing national economic emergency, including expenditures for rental and benefit payments and administrative expenses under this title, there shall be levied processing taxes as hereinafter provided.

That tax is uncertain. We do not know what it is.

Then the law continues:

> The rate of tax shall conform to the requirements of subsection (b). Such rate shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture.

They are not determined by Congress but by an appointive officer. I read further:

> Such rate shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture as of the date the tax first takes effect, and the rate so determined shall, at such intervals as the Secretary finds necessary to effectuate the declared policy, be adjusted by him to conform to such requirements.

That provision not only authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to fix the tax, but at any time he may change it or modify it. The attribute of clarity which is elemental in taxation is entirely eliminated by express provision of the law.

I continue to read from the law:

The processing tax shall terminate at the end of the marketing year current at the time the Secretary proclaims that rental or benefit payments are to be discontinued with respect to such commodity.

On the occasion of the debate on that measure, a statement was made on the floor of the Senate, which I am about to read. Asked the reason why such authority was given, this statement was made, and I think it was a correct statement:

I think I need not say that so far as I know the present Secretary of Agriculture is a man of very capable mind. It is not that to which I object, but we are giving over to one person the power to fix something when nobody knows what it will be, and then give it the force of law.

Then I quote the requirements of the law:

The processing tax shall be at such rate as equals the difference between the current average farm price for the commodity and the fair exchange value of the commodity, except that if the Secretary has reason to believe that the tax at such rate will cause such reduction in the quantity of the commodity or products thereof domestically consumed as to result in the accumulation of surplus stocks of the commodity or products thereof or in the depression of the farm price of the commodity, then he shall cause an appropriate investigation to be made and afford due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties.

That was in order that there might be a further reduction of taxes. We are complaining today, 10 months after the law went into effect, of the precise effect against which the country was warned at the time. Of course, we cannot find fault with the Secretary of Agriculture, but we should find fault with the foolishness of the original legislation.

Now we have gone to the point where we cannot repeal the legislation. We are in the process of distributing a large amount of money to the individual farmers. While that is being done to the satisfaction of some of the farmers, it is producing a very unfortunate attitude of mind throughout the country. For example, the largest wheat grower in my section of the country does not need any subsidy; yet under the administration of the reduction plan on a great estate he reduced the acreage for which he was paid an enormous amount of money from the Treasury of the United States. He immediately said, "This is fine for me. It is more money than I ever received from the farm at any one time, but I am wondering why I should have obtained it."

Then the neighbors, the small wheat growers, who know that the man does not need that subsidy, feel that the Government has done the wrong thing in paying out of the Treasury, to one who does not need it, a large sum in pursuance of the law. That very farmer is put under suspicion by his neighbors, who think he is being specially favored. It is not a special favor. It is simply the administration of the law. The whole thing seems to me to be artificial, and the law really ought to be modified; yet we have gone so far and made our obligations so fixed that everybody is now saying, What would be the effect if we should repeal the law? It seems to be the general opinion that we cannot repeal it or that we ought not to repeal it.

Mr. President and Senators, I say that legislation of this sort, which we launched with much trepidation, with Senators voting for it without their own approval, but merely because there was an emergency, feeling it was probably the only thing they could do, is not the right kind of legislation for us to enact. The difficulty is that under the force of an emergency we do things that we cannot later undo. I am of the opinion that with the operation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, with all of the complaints about inequality, as well as the admitted failures as in the case of voluntary reduction of cotton acreage—with all those things being cumulative, the effect will be that we will have to modify it even if we do not have to repeal it.

I have mentioned this matter only because we are discussing the question of taxation today, and the question of clarity of taxes seems to me quite important. I am of the opinion that the proposal now before us, while it may contain some elements of confusion, rather tends to clarify the law.

Mr. President, I had intended to ask for a reprinting of some of the statements made on April 14, 1933, pointing out what we would face if we should launch upon legislation of this sort; but I shall not take the time to do it.

Before I take my seat I desire to say that recently an article appeared in the magazine known as "Aviation," in which the general payments under the air mail law were discussed; also the bull market in which stocks went so high; also the conditions essential to a successful aviation industry, as well as the almost certainly assured profits to the Government if the industry shall be continued, with suggestions of some modifications that should be made in the law. I had intended to comment upon this article, but out of deference to the wishes of the chairman of the committee I shall not take the time to do so. Instead I ask unanimous consent to have the article by the editor of Aviation, Edward P. Warner, printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

AIR MAIL—THE RECORD IN THE CASE

By Edward P. Warner, editor of Aviation

The composition of this story is undertaken almost at the very moment when the first Army airplane is taking off with the first load of mail. About the most dramatic week in the history of aviation has attained its climax.

One's first impulse when the news of the cancelation came through on the evening of February 9 was to give way to impotent despair at a situation that seemed so destructive and so incomprehensible. For a good 4 days the aeronautical world spent its time in trying to fit the evidence together in some coherent fashion and to get some idea of what it all meant. It seemed inconceivable then, and it seems inconceivable still, that anyone really intended that the existing air-transport system should be leveled to the ground and rebuilt by a painstaking reassembly of its various elements into wholly new patterns.

Rational comment is badly needed. This is no time for emotion. The American people have so far had only a fragmentary presentation of the case. It ought to be laid before them in full, and it ought to be laid before them in terms of definite evidence. In discussing the cancelation and its consequences we must stick as closely as possible to the record of actual facts and to the provable lessons of experience at home and abroad.

We shall try to do just that, but before taking up the charges that have been made against the American air-mail lines and attempting to examine and to interpret them, there are a couple of things that must be said in more general terms. The first is that we explicitly and without qualification dissociate ourselves from any criticism of the administration's motives. We are absolutely certain that the President intends that America shall have a first-class air-transport system, and that he will take any action that he considers necessary to that end. We do feel that the action so far taken has been very unhappy and that there has as yet been no showing of any necessity for sudden general cancelation while the investigation was still going on, but we take for granted the essential soundness of the President's ultimate aims. We are only anxious that the progress towards those aims should be a sure one, with a minimum of injustice and waste and with full advantage taken of the record of past experience to guard against costly and time-consuming missteps along the way.

The second point on which we wish to make ourselves clear is that we have not the slightest sympathy with or tolerance for individual wrong-doing. Wherever criminal practices have existed, they should be dealt with severely. We have not the slightest desire in the world to protect any guilty party, if a guilty party can be found. We do wish to protect the innocent.

It seems to us, to put it very mildly and conservatively, that the American public has been getting an extraordinarily one-sided view of air transport during these past few weeks. Even the people who are in the business have very commonly received the same distorted impressions, for naturally the daily press is concerned mainly with the sensational aspects of an investigation and very little or not at all with the tremendous amount of technical detail that necessarily underlies it. Probably not 2 percent of the readers of Aviation, and certainly not one hundredth of 1 percent of the interested general public, have had the opportunity of reading even a major part of the specific record of fact relating to the air-mail contracts and their administration, and of working out for themselves all of the figures of mileage flown and extensions granted and compensation paid under various contracts and the like that are pertinent to the administration's action and to its probable consequences.

CONFERENCES FOR ALL

The full explanation of the cancelation of the contracts is still very far from clear, but some things have become apparent. It has become apparent, for example, that the meetings of air-transport operators in the spring of 1930 are now considered as having been collusive and conspiratorial, notwithstanding the fact that their existence and purpose was more or less fully described in the daily press and much more fully described in the pages of Aviation at the time. It is worth recalling after a lapse of 4 years that this magazine made repeated report of just what was being done to build up an effective national air-transport system and to maintain competitive lines so far as possible. It is worth recalling that not by any means all of the groups represented at the Postmaster General's conference were air-mail contractors, either then or thereafter, and that on the other hand well over 90 percent of all the transport mileage then being flown was fully represented at the conference, with no operator of any importance missing.

It has not been sufficiently recognized that a major part of the essential structure of the air-mail system had already been laid down prior to the 1930 conference and has been unchanged since that date. Substantially 60 percent of the total domestic air-mail operations at the end of 1933 were being carried on routes that existed at the time of the Post Office conferences of 1930 and that were still, at the end of 1933, in the hands of the original contractors or their direct successors by purchase. To have transferred or (as was the case with most of the routes concerned) to have newly created only 40 percent of the total of air-mail operations within the course of 3½ years seems by no means remarkable or excessive in a field so new, and one that has been developing and expanding so rapidly, as has been the case with air transport.

There has been too little attention paid also to the fact that Congress very wisely decided in 1928, even before the beginning of Mr. Brown's term in the Post Office, to get away from the periodic reopening of air-mail contracts and their reaward by competitive bidding. It was recognized that to build up and maintain a proper organization some assurance of long-term operation was absolutely indispensable, and the air mail law was accordingly amended to provide reasonable assurance of a 10-year period of operation for any holder of a contract.

In order to harmonize the system that had grown by bits, Congress further provided in 1930 for certain extensions of routes. There was nothing covert or ambiguous about the provisions for the extensions, and out of the total of operations at the time of the cancelations only 20 percent was over routes that had been covered by extensions granted by the Postmaster General. A substantial majority of all operations on February 10, 1934, was covered by contracts that had been let as the result of competitive bidding, with two or more competitors.

PAYMENTS EXCESSIVE

The allegations of improper practices in the making of contracts are supplemented by allegations of waste and of excessive payments under certain contracts or route certificates. The fact is, of course, that the air-mail appropriation has always been recognized by all parties, including presumably all Members of Congress, as a device for building up and maintaining an air transport system. It has always been recognized as something more than a mere payment for the carriage of certain letters at the payment of so much per letter. In the earliest stages of air transport it was necessary that payments be on a rather generous scale to cover the risk of entering in an entirely new field and providing the necessary material and organization. As the transport business began to progress the rates of payment by the Post Office Department were rapidly reduced. They have never been on a large enough scale to permit of the making of any very substantial operating profit by even the most fortunate operators (according to the very careful study made of the income and expenditures of air-mail contractors for the House Post Office Committee by a special investigator a year ago), and for a very large part of the air-mail system there has actually been a net loss over a considerable part of its history.

The Post Office Department has made frequent and drastic reductions in the amount paid for carrying the mails, as is shown forth statistically in the pages in this issue that are devoted to reviewing the general record of air transport. When it is suggested now that less than half as much money need have been spent if payment had been made only for service actually rendered, the point is overlooked that upon those terms it would have been impossible to induce anyone to start proper air transport lines or to operate them on a proper basis. The actual saving under any such heroic policy as that would have been not a mere 50 to 60 percent, but almost 100 percent, for most of the air transport lines would have gone out of business and would have ceased either to receive any pay from the Government or to render any service to anyone. That observation applies to the general suggestion that substantial savings could have been made on the system as a whole under some imagined set of conditions, and it applies also to the collateral suggestions that excessive payments have been made on certain individual routes. In one case the scale of payment suggested by the Postmaster General would have been equivalent to requiring an operator to carry the mail over a route where very little passenger traffic was available at a gross payment of 4½ cents a mile.

AVIATION AND THE BULL MARKET

May it finally be suggested, before turning to more general observations upon the relations between governments and air lines and the teachings of experience concerning the development of air transport systems, that public opinion has fallen into a sad fog of confusion concerning the relationship between operating profits of a transport company and profits that were or theoretically might have been made in speculative transactions by certain fortunate or far-sighted individuals. It is no news that there was a bull market in 1929, and that the whole stock market rushed up to heights that can now be seen to have been ridiculously inflated. The aircraft stocks were about as bad as the rest, but no worse than a good many others. Public enthusiasm for the prospects of aviation had arisen, almost without need for promotion or encouragement, to heights that the soundest heads in the industry themselves recognized as ridiculous.

As a matter of fact, a great many of the insiders, even among those who were speculatively inclined, were unable to make any substantial amount of money on the stock market in that period because they saw only too clearly the absurdity of the heights to which prices were being pushed and sold whatever securities they themselves held at a very early stage in the rise. Many of them, including officials of the companies that have been most bitterly attacked in recent months, went further and made public statements warning against the boom psychology then rampant and by implication against the absurd levels to which the prices of aeronautical securities were being driven. It was during the climactic stages of the boom that an old hand in Wall Street with a special interest in aviation and an expert knowledge of the field remarked to the editor of Aviation that "the present prices of aircraft stock bear no possible relationship either to the present earnings or the future prospects of most of the companies concerned. They signify simply an apparently insatiable public demand for certain pieces of paper, of which there is only a limited supply and which represent a part ownership in an industry of peculiar romantic appeal." All that had little or nothing to do with the aviation industry, and the industry should not be indicted for prices made by the folly of speculators who in most cases were utterly ignorant of everything connected with aviation and had no inclination to make the effort necessary to learn anything.

IF WE ARE TO HAVE AIR TRANSPORT

But now we must turn again from the specific to the general and dig deep into the fundamentals of the problem. There are certain facts that must be borne in mind if America is to have any air transport system at all, and particularly if it is to be under any form of private ownership.

The first of the essential facts is that air transport requires, as most other forms of transportation have required in the early stages of their development, and as some of them still do, Government assistance. There is every reason to suppose that in the course of a few years we shall evolve out of dependence on anything even remotely resembling a subsidy, and some lines exceptionally favored by passenger traffic have already been carrying the mails at a gross cost to the Government no greater than the income from postage, so far as that income can be determined—or, in other words, at no net cost to the Government whatever or even at a small profit. Such lines are still, and are likely for the next few years to remain, the exceptions. The general rule is that there must be Government support.

NEW CONTRACTS FOR EACH ADMINISTRATION?

That being the case, it is indispensable that some means of allocating support be found. One point on which we can be immediately clear is the undesirability of periodic reassignment of contracts, or route certificates, or subsidies, or whatever particular documents may embody the Government aid. European countries have had an immense amount of experience with the assignment of air-transport subsidies on a hand-to-mouth basis, and all the experience has been bad. Without exception, the major countries have finally been forced as a result of their trial with other systems to adopt the principle of long-term contracts, running 10 years at the very least and in some instances for more than 20. When the suggestion is made that the thing to do is to let contracts for carrying the mail for a 4-year period, and then to readvertise and reaward them as a result of new bidding, and then presumably after 4 years more to do the same thing again, it is equivalent to a suggestion that America should have no real air-transport system at all. No one who has the slightest understanding of the dependence of transport flying on ground organization and of the amount of money that has to be spent on perfecting that organization will suppose for a moment that it would be possible to persuade any sensible man to assume the expense of providing the necessary ground facilities and of getting an organization together in the face of the prospect that it would all have to be sold for junk at the end of a 4-year period as the result of the reaward of the contract in other quarters. To adopt any such policy as that would be just exactly as foolish as for a city government to offer 4-year franchises for street-railway operation with no presumptive right for the recipient of the franchise to continue running after the 4-year period has expired, and with a consequent necessity of amortizing the entire cost of laying the track and purchasing equipment over that brief span of time.

A BUYER'S MARKET

No doubt it will be said that if these costs are so high, the group that has once assumed them and that has been running for 4 years will be assured of being able to underbid any outside competitor when after a very few years the contract is reopened for reawarding. It is by no means possible to be sure of it. There is always the chance that some entirely new group interested primarily in securing a contract for promotion purposes and as a foundation for the rearing of a financial edifice will offer a bid so ridiculously low that the operator who has to make his operations clear expenses cannot hope to compete with it. The possibility always exists, also, that an outside bidder may feel that he can go to a very low figure precisely because of his confidence that if he receives the award of the contract, he will be able to cut his operating costs by securing both his ground and flying equipment at junk prices from the previous operator, who, after the destruction of the basis upon which his only chance of running profitably reposes, will naturally offer his equipment for sale for whatever it will bring in the only market available. No less distinguished a commentator upon American affairs than Arthur Brisbane has actually suggested the availability of such distress merchandise as a means of reducing costs. Proposing in his column that the Army might undertake the carrying of passengers as well as mail, Mr. Brisbane observed: "And he (the President) might get great bargains in almost new planes for mail and passenger traffic. Companies, unable to operate without post office income, might sell cheap." Any such policy of distress merchandising, whether it concerns sales from private operators to the Government or forced sales from one private operator to his successor in possession of the contract, seems to us utterly alien to any spirit of fairness, and particularly alien to the spirit of N.R.A.

We can imagine nothing that would be more distasteful to the present administration than the creation of a situation likely to result in such injustices, and we are quite certain that the administration has no desire to employ a method of letting air-mail contracts which would operate to keep the lines running on a shoestring basis and to prevent their risking necessary expenditures for the installation of facilities that would promote the safety and the reliability and the efficiency of their services.

Before we turn to detailed examination of the precise ways in which the beneficiaries of Government aid should be selected, the question of the form that the aid should take deserves at least a passing glance.

Most of the countries of Europe, and, in fact, practically all the countries in the world except the United States and Canada, have proceeded by giving direct subsidies to aviation. In Canada and in the United States the Government has operated rather through awarding contracts for carrying the mails by air. Either system is perfectly feasible if properly handled. Either one is capable of giving terribly bad results if misapplied. Most of the European countries have had more or less extended periods of very unhappy experience with subsidies, as many of the subsidy laws have been so drawn that they gave very little encouragement for the development of a genuine commercial traffic, and, in fact, in some instances they have positively discouraged it. Some of them by elaborate regulations concerning the bonuses to be paid for various types of equipment have resulted in the development and adoption in transport service of aircraft of characteristics extremely uneconomical or unsafe, or both.

PROFITS AHEAD FOR THE GOVERNMENT

A subsidy law can be drawn which will be immune from those drawbacks, and some of the European subsidies are working out in a reasonably satisfactory fashion. On the whole, however, the air-mail contract has seemed a more satisfactory device for aiding aviation in the Western Hemisphere, as it has carried within itself the mechanism of the extinction of the subsidy feature.

As the mail traffic has increased and as periodic reductions have been made in the payments for carrying the mail, the goal of complete self-support has been steadily approached and in fact has actually been reached on certain routes. It appears that at least two of the routes upon which route certificates are now outstanding as extensions of contracts originally entered into some years ago are actually returning to the Government in revenue received from the sale of air-mail postage more money than is paid to the operator of the air lines for carrying the mail. The subsidy in those cases, in other words, has dropped to zero or even been converted into a profit. In a couple of other instances the border line has been reached and the air mail is at least very close to being on a basis profitable to the Government and very soon would have reached such a basis as the normal result of a normal continuance of the process that has been going on for the past 4 years.

POUND-MILE PAYMENTS AGAIN

The suggestion is now being made that the payment to the contractors for handling the air mail should be put on a wholly new footing and that it should be proportioned to the amount of mail traffic calculated in pound-miles rather than simply to the number of miles flown by the company's mail-carrying planes. A number of bills to accomplish such a change of basic type of compensation has been introduced in Congress, and they have the very strong support of Representative MEAD, Chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Unfortunately some of the talk about the development of new air-mail legislation has perhaps led the lay public to suppose that the order canceling the contracts was a necessary or desirable preliminary to the revision of the basis of payment and to putting the Air Mail Service upon a sounder and more consistent economic footing. So far from that being the case, practically all of the air-mail operators have been quite ready to welcome a change from mileage to pound-mileage payments at any time during the last 2 or 3 years. Some of them have been enthusiastic advocates of such a change.

The bills now being discussed with the object of revising the air-mail postage downward, of creating new classes of air-mail matter such as the airgram or airbrief, and establishing a flat pound-mileage rate, are very closely similar to the Kelly bill introduced in Congress in 1933 and regarded with considerable favor, either exactly as it stood or in slightly modified form, by most of the air transport companies. Even if there had never been a Black committee nor an investigation nor an air-mail contract cancelation, the adoption of the pound-mileage system of payment would have been a natural development of the very near future, and indeed it has for some time been generally believed by those interested in air transport that that system was the natural one and that it would in due course be adopted with the cheerful acquiescence of all parties concerned.

In this same connection it is worthy of note that whereas the air-mail contractors, and especially the largest of the contract-holding companies, have been subject to much denunciation in the last few weeks because of their "greed" and of their exaction of excessive sums from the Government, the largest of all those systems would actually receive substantially more money either under the fixed rates proposed in the Kelly bill of 1933 or those suggested in the Mead bill now under discussion than has been paid to that operator during the last 8 months under the old system. Another of the very largest operating companies would receive practically the same amount of money under the Kelly bill as under the mileage payment that has been fixed by the Postmaster General in recent months, and only a little less under the rules promulgated in the Mead bill than under that which has actually been prevailing.

If it be accepted as proven that there must be Government assistance of some kind and that it must be extended on a long-term basis if a proper system is to be maintained, it remains only to be considered how that assistance should be allocated. It is obviously impossible to hold out the offer of Government aid to all comers. There must be some discrimination. Under any administration or under any method of awarding contracts that may be used there will be some people or some corporations that will get the contracts and others that would like very much to have them but will fail of an award.

Under any conceivable system involving any degree of private ownership, after the awards have been made and the tumult has died away, it will be found that there are still insiders and outsiders, with the latter able in some cases to operate (usually on a very restricted scale) without government assistance because of exceptionally favorable conditions or as a result of paying exceptionally low wages to personnel or of omitting safeguards generally thought to be desirable.

ONE BIG COMPANY

In this respect also the experience of all the major European countries coincides with our own. In each of the principal states of Europe, in fact, concentration of the benefits of government assistance has been carried to such a length that there is a single subsidized company, while a number of other small groups run scattered and more or less seasonal services without government help. In Great Britain, for example, in 1922 there were three separate British companies carrying passengers by air between London and Paris and other continental points, and all of them were subsidized by the Government. It became apparent in due course that that was nonsensical, and the Government forced all the various interests to get together and to form Imperial Airways. Imperial Airways is a privately owned company, its stock listed upon the London Stock Exchange. Its routes and schedules have been revised and extended from time to time by direction of or in agreement with the Government, and the company now receives and has for almost 10 years received the entire British transport subsidy. In short, the British Government has made, and a succession of governments of various parties has confirmed, a selection of a particular group of private individuals to operate British air transport. An initial consolidation and subsequent extension of routes have been arranged by governmental direction. In short, the British have done, with apparently general approval, essentially what the Postmaster General here was engaged in doing in 1930, except that he tried as far as possible to retain the competitive system, with the several transcontinental routes independent of each other, and that Congress never gave him powers as extensive as those which the British Government felt free to exercise in dealing with Imperial Airways and its various predecessor companies. The story of air transport in Germany and in France, though differing from that in Great Britain in detail and in respect of the time at which various things have happened, has been essentially the same in its general course.

To return once more to the question of method of allocation, of course, the first possibility that occurs to everyone is the use of competitive bidding. We have already mentioned that repeatedly as though it were to be taken more or less for granted. It is, as a matter of fact, the system that has been used throughout, for approximately 80 percent of the volume of air-mail operation at the time of the cancelation order was on routes that had been awarded in open competition. In the letting of the 34 domestic air-mail contracts that have at various times been outstanding there were two or more competitors for 24 of the routes, and most of the 10 contracts for which there was only a single bidder were short and relatively unimportant. Three of those 10, as a matter of fact, were very shortly canceled and service suspended.

Perhaps competitive bidding is the best method to use whenever new contracts have to be awarded, but certainly it must be used with some care. It must at all times be remembered that the fundamental object of Government assistance is to build a strong and well-run air transport system, and not merely a cheap one. It must be realized that that goal is only likely to be attained by strictly limiting service to responsible and experienced groups controlled by people who give every evidence of their intention of staying in the business, of rendering a constantly improving service, and of taking the fullest possible advantage, at the earliest possible moment, of every new scientific development. It must be borne in mind that competitive bidding for an airline is unlike almost every other form of competitive bidding, in that the figures on the bid submitted are likely to have very little to do with the actual cost to the Government of running the service. In this rapidly developing art it would be incomparable folly for the Government to tie itself down for any considerable length of time to pay air-transport companies at a flat and invariable rate. Some of the European countries have tried to get around that difficulty by letting subsidy contracts on the basis of a specified rate of diminution in the subsidy payable, but that also fails to work out very well because of the virtual impossibility of foreseeing the situation of 5 or 6 years hence or the amount or type of assistance that may then be needed in so new and so swiftly changing a field.

HIGH BID OR LOW?

It is absolutely necessary that there should be administrative discretion somewhere for the periodic revision of the terms of contracts and of the compensation payable under them. It is necessary, in other words, that some agency of the Government should be free, within a comparatively short time after a contract has been entered into, to reduce the compensation payable under that contract to below the level of the original bid. Under those circumstances it may well be that, whether the contract is originally awarded to the lowest bidder or to the highest one, the rate of payment after a couple of years will be exactly the same. That as a matter of fact is what has been happening over the last 3 years. At the time of the cancelation there was not a single air-mail contractor who was being paid an amount even closely resembling that which would have been due under the terms of his original bid, and in practically every instance the rate of payment had been sharply and repeatedly reduced to far below the amount fixed at the time the contract was first awarded. Even from the point of view of simple economy for the Government, the major concern in awarding a contract must be with the responsibility and character and apparent ability of the would-be contractors rather than with the figures that they put into their tenders—figures which will within a comparatively short time become meaningless in any event as the result of the development of the art and of the periodic revisions that become necessary in consequence.

Another point to be borne in mind in connection with competitive bidding is that the passage of any kind of a law fixing a uniform scale of payment would appear to make the competitive system in its ordinary form unworkable. If every carrier of the mail is to get 2 mills per pound-mile, in what form are bids for a new service to be submitted? Or upon what basis is competition to be held? When suitable legislation reorganizing and perfecting the basis of payment has been enacted, it will be more than ever clearly logical that awards shall be made upon the apparent relative responsibility and experience of the competitors and upon the presumed or anticipated qualities of the services that they could severally offer.

COMMISSION CONTROL

There are various ways in which contracts may be awarded, at least as to the first step in the classification of candidates. The first move may be to ask for bids or it may be to shake dice, but in any event before an award is actually made it is absolutely indispensable that some administrative agency have the fullest possible measure of discretion in deciding which of the proposals is most advantageous, taking everything into consideration, and which is likely to give the best results through all the modifications and revisions and new developments that will be necessary over a long term of years. In the past that administrative agency has been wholly in the Post Office Department. That seems to us a somewhat unsatisfactory state of affairs, and the editor of Aviation has repeatedly argued, both in the pages of this magazine and elsewhere, that the award of Government aid to air transport through air-mail contracts or otherwise and the fixing of the financial relations between the air-transport operators and the Government should be put in the hands of a commission of an absolutely nonpolitical nature, its members appointed for long terms. The events of the past month confirm and in fact multiply a thousandfold our conviction that that would have been in the past, would be now, and certainly will be in the future, the wisest course and indeed the only sound one. Certainly it is earnestly to be hoped that a flinging of the whole system into the maelstrom of competitive bidding, with its concomitants of fresh antagonisms and a feverish rush of new air-line promotions, can be avoided, and that the administration's basic purposes can be attained without too violent a rearrangement of the present map—or too vigorous a disruption of the existing organizations.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator from Mississippi. I have said all I desire to say at this time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 552. An act for the relief of Manuel Merritt; and

S. 1484. An act for the relief of Miles Thomas Barrett.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 881) for the relief of Primo Tiburzio.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2639) for the relief of Charles J. Eisenhauer.

The message returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 2686) to provide a penalty for the presentation of a false written instrument relating to any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the Federal Government.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to turn to the first amendment contained in the bill—not a Senate committee amendment, but the provision appearing on page 6, which does not appear as an amendment in the bill but is an amendment to the law, and it is one in which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is interested. I shall be glad if we can take up that matter at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought to pass upon the question of the rates before we decide upon changing from the fiscal-year to the calendar-year basis. That is the procedure which we followed in the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. It is immaterial to me whether or not we settle the matter at this time. Of course, it would change the whole bill if this amendment should not be adopted, so I thought perhaps the Senator from Michigan would prefer to take it up first.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I am inherently against the provision because it changes the old law in that heretofore taxpayers on a fiscal-year basis have been required to pay the tax in relation to the number of months of the fiscal year during which they operated under the specific tax law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. COUZENS. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If we are going to take up the bill at this time, it seems to me we ought to have a quorum, because many Senators have left the Chamber and perhaps are not aware that we have returned to the tax bill. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to me for the purpose of permitting me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Kean	Reed
Ashurst	Davis	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Dickinson	King	Russell
Bachman	Dieterich	La Follette	Schall
Bankhead	Dill	Lewis	Sheppard
Barbour	Duffy	Logan	Shipstead
Barkley	Erickson	Lonergan	Smith
Black	Fess	Long	Steiwer
Bone	Fletcher	McAdoo	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Brown	George	McKellar	Thompson
Bulow	Gibson	McNary	Townsend
Byrd	Glass	Metcalf	Tydings
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Murphy	Vandenberg
Capper	Gore	Neely	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hale	Norris	Wagner
Carey	Harrison	Nye	Walcott
Clark	Hastings	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Connally	Hatch	Overton	White
Coolidge	Hayden	Patterson
Copeland	Hebert	Pittman
Costigan	Johnson	Pope

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, it is rather difficult to understand the changes in the law that are proposed in this bill.

The print we have before us on page 6, title I, changes the existing law. The old law, which I have here in the form of a committee print, provided that any taxpayer on a fiscal-year basis should pay, for the proportion of the year represented by his taxable year, on the basis of the rates in existence at that time. The House bill as approved by the Senate committee provides that the changes in the law shall take effect on January 1, 1934, so that it is necessary for me to give an example of what would occur in case we should approve the change in the law; and the statement is rather difficult, because this is not a committee amendment.

In other words, title I, on page 6, affects several dozen provisions in the bill. It is not confined to any one provision. Therefore it should be laid over until every other paragraph in the bill has been acted upon; and in view of the fact that this provision affects nearly every other paragraph in the bill, I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi if we would not make time by passing it over for further consideration?

Mr. HARRISON. If it is the desire of the Senator from Michigan that it be passed over, it is perfectly agreeable to me. I merely wish to make some progress with the bill. Of course, written throughout the bill are the effects of this amendment of existing law.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. If this amendment of existing law should be changed, we should have to change the bill in many particulars; but if it is the desire of the Senator not to take up this provision at this time, we will proceed to something else.

Mr. COUZENS. I wish to make it plain to the Senator from Mississippi that it is not particularly my desire. I want the Senate to understand it, because it is a matter to which we must refer later on in any event, it seems to me, because it does change the existing law, and if the rates are changed materially, later on they will be materially affected by the adoption of this particular section.

Mr. HARRISON. I will ask that this matter be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that there is no amendment pending before the Senate with reference to this portion of the bill. The language shows it to be an amendment to the present law put in by the House, and it has not been changed by the Senate committee.

Mr. COUZENS. May I explain to the Chair that the general practice of handling bills is not being followed in this case, because there was no unanimous-consent agreement entered into that the bill be considered for committee amendments only. I had a distinct understanding with the Chairman of the Committee on Finance that that would not be asked during the consideration of this bill, because the fundamental law is changed in many paragraphs of the bill, and not by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan is correct in that respect. May we now turn to page 23 and take up the amendment touching annuities? I suppose we had better pass over the rate structure at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I want to accommodate myself to the procedure the Senator from Mississippi desires, but I understood the Senator preferred that we take up some of the less controversial items and make some progress, and then come back to the controversial items, as we did in the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to clear up all these propositions, then take up the rate structure, and then the excise taxes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I stated to the Senator in conference with him yesterday, that is agreeable to me, if he prefers that procedure. That is the one we followed in the committee, and perhaps it would be the best one to follow on the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to take up the amendment passed over on page 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment on page 15.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 15, line 14, after the word "income" and the period, it is proposed to strike out:

Amounts received as annuities under annuity or endowment contracts shall be included in gross income; except that there shall be excluded from gross income the excess of the amount received in the taxable year over an amount equal to 3 percent of the aggregate premiums or consideration paid (whether or not paid during such year), until the aggregate amount excluded from gross income under this title or prior income-tax laws equals the aggregate premiums or consideration paid.

And insert:

Amounts received as an annuity under an annuity or endowment contract shall be included in gross income; except that there shall be excluded from gross income (until the aggregate amount excluded from gross income under this title or prior income-tax laws in respect of such annuity equals the aggregate premiums or consideration paid for such annuity): (A) the excess of the amount received in the taxable year over an amount equal to 3 percent of the aggregate premiums or consideration paid for such annuity (whether or not paid during such year), or (B) the entire amount of the annuity if the sum thereof and amounts of other annuities received in the same taxable year is not more than $500.

So as to read:

(2) Annuities, etc.: Amounts received (other than amounts paid by reason of the death of the insured and interest payments on such amounts and other than amounts received as annuities) under a life-insurance or endowment contract, but if such amounts (when added to amounts received before the taxable year under such contract) exceed the aggregate premiums or consideration paid (whether or not paid during the taxable year) then the excess shall be included in gross income. Amounts received as an annuity under an annuity or endowment contract shall be included in gross income; except that there shall be excluded from gross income (until the aggregate amount excluded from gross income under this title or prior income-tax laws in respect of such annuity equals the aggregate premiums or consideration paid for such annuity): (A) the excess of the amount received in the taxable year over an amount equal to 3 percent of the aggregate premiums or consideration paid for such annuity (whether or not paid during such), or (B) the entire amount of the annuity if the sum thereof and amounts of other annuities received in the same taxable year is not more than $500. In the case of a transfer for a valuable consideration, by assignment or otherwise, of a life-insurance, endowment, or annuity contract, or any interest therein, only the actual value of such consideration and the amount of the premiums and other sums subsequently paid by the transferee shall be exempt from taxation under paragraph (1) or this paragraph.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, this tax on annuities is something new, it is new law, and this presents one of the difficulties in handling the bill, because the matter does not arise in the form of a committee amendment. As I recall, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was particularly active in the committee with respect to annuities, and I think the Senator from Mississippi or the Senator from Pennsylvania should explain fully that this is a new tax, and the purpose of it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I had understood that an amendment would be offered by the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] to this amendment, and then I expected to explain it.

What is done in this provision is this: For the first time we have attempted to tax annuities and we have imposed what we conceive to be a very small tax on them. We propose to include in income subject to tax only 3 percent of the amount paid for the annuity.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, is the Senator quite correct in saying that we impose a small tax on annuities?

Mr. HARRISON. It is 3 percent.

Mr. COUZENS. No; we add 3 percent of the annuities to the gross taxable income. It is not a 3-percent tax.

Mr. HARRISON. That is quite true, as I am going to try now to illustrate. Suppose I go to an insurance company and purchase a 10-year annuity and pay in a hundred thousand dollars. They pay me back in the first year, say, $10,000. Three percent of the hundred thousand dollars is included in net income. That would be $3,000. That $3,000 is added to the taxable income of the particular person, and then the rates of tax are applied to this taxable income. The other $7,000 is considered return of capital and is not taxed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. REED. When insurance companies figure the amount that can be paid annually on annuity contracts, they calculate, first, the rental value of the principal during each year. Then, according to the expectancy of life of the individual, they compute how much of the principal can be returned to the annuitant, based on that expectancy. Their calculations involve, first, the interest on the money; second, return of principal during the balance of the probable life of the individual.

In Great Britain the whole amount of such annuities is taxed as income. It did not seem fair to the Treasury—and this suggestion comes from the Treasury—to tax that part of the annuity which represents the return of principal, but it did seem fair, and it seemed to the committee that it would stop a most important loophole, to tax that part of the annuity which represents interest on the capital. That factor is generally computed by the insurance companies at 4 percent, but obviously, since the principal is diminishing a little each year, it would be unfair to tax every year 4 perecent of the original principal, because that would be more than the remaining principal after the expiration of 2 years.

Consequently the Treasury, in the effort to reach a fair mean, has fixed on the figure of 3 percent. That is less than the interest return on the money in the early years, and it is probably more than the interest return toward the later years of the annuity. That is the way the arbitrary 3 percent was arrived at.

Mr. President, this is the view the Finance Committee took by a considerable majority——

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator might state that in order to let the little fellow out we provided that an annuity of $500 or less should not be taxed.

Mr. REED. Yes. The effect of this, then, is to take the aggregate of the premiums paid by the annuitant, or the lump sum which he pays, as many of them do, and figure 3 percent on that as being interest, and therefore income, and that 3 percent of the original principal is included in the gross income of the taxpayer, and is subjected to the ordinary normal and surtax rate.

This has been objected to very strongly by insurance companies, insurance agents, and by people who have bought annuities, and it is quite natural that they should object, because such annuities have been sold for years on the representation of the agents that they were totally tax free until the whole amount of the principal had been returned to the investor. It does seem harsh in the case of those annuitants to have the rule changed in the middle of their annuity period, but, on the other hand, I think it is equally true that this represents probably the biggest loophole in the present income tax law. I concede that we would be highly unfair if we should go as far as Great Britain goes, and should tax the whole annuity, but it seems to me that we strike a rather respectable average in the plan we have incorporated in the bill.

I think the Finance Committee's amendment is to be preferred over the House provision, because it does exempt the very small annuities, those under $500 a year. I do not mean that every annuity under $500 is exempt. We must take the aggregate of all the annuities received by the taxpayer, and he cannot beat the law by simply getting 10 annuities of $500 each, instead of one at $5,000.

There is another factor in this proposal which I think ought to be considered. It is that the average annuity is a comparatively small sum. Even if the individual invests $100,000 in an annuity, assuming him to be a married man having a $2,500 exemption, only $500 of his annuity would be taxable at all. Therefore, if he had no other taxable income, as retired people are unlikely to have, he would be taxed on $500 at the rate of 4 percent; and although he were a capitalist, who had invested $100,000, his tax for the year would be only $20.

The Senator from Michigan suggests that I illustrate how annuities have been used for tax avoidance, and that is quite easy to do. I know of cases where as high as $1,000,000 has been paid in a single lump-sum premium for an annuity for the balance of the taxpayer's life. He does not have to pay one penny of tax on the yield from that annuity, on the yield from his $1,000,000, until the payments to him have amounted to a complete return of the principal which he has invested; in other words, until he has lived long enough for his annuities to amount to $1,000,000. It is totally tax free in the interim; and many rich men, with their fortunes in cash form, or easily convertible into cash, have resorted to that device, because, obviously, not until 10, 15, or perhaps 20 years after the transaction was entered into would they begin to pay income tax; and when they did, it would be treated as a capital gain, I take it, and they would be taxed at a reduced rate on the theory that they had made this capital investment years before and were now realizing a capital gain from the subsequent payments.

The position of the annuitant under the present law is extremely favorable; more so than that of any other capitalist of whom I know, except the one who has bought totally tax-free bonds. Those bonds cannot be reached.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I had heretofore submitted and had printed an amendment. I ask whether it would be in order for me to offer it at this time for the purpose of discussing it?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I think it would be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] offers an amendment, which the clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 15, to strike out all of lines 5 to 25, both inclusive, and on page 16, to strike out through the period in line 11, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(2) Annuities, etc.: Amounts received (other than amounts paid by reason of the death of the insured and interest payments on such amounts) under a life insurance, endowment, or annuity contract, but if such amounts (when added to amounts received before the taxable year under such contract) exceed the aggregate premiums or consideration paid (whether or not paid during the taxable year) then the excess shall be included in gross income.

Mr. HARRISON. If I understand the Senator from Rhode Island, his amendment contemplates a return to the present law?

Mr. HEBERT. That is true. First, let me explain, Mr. President, what the present law does. My amendment proposes to restore the present law. When an annuitant has paid a premium as a consideration for a return to him of annual sums during the remainder of his life, the present law absolves him from taxation upon the payments which he receives from year to year, until the aggregate of the amounts paid back to him by the company equals the sum which he has paid as a premium for the annuity.

Perhaps I can make that more clear by using some figures. Under existing law when an annuitant pays a premium, say, of $10,000, he is free from taxation until the annual payments to him have aggregated $10,000. Of course, the reason for that is obvious, because those payments to the annuitant by the company selling the annuity are contingent upon his continuing to live. If after having received one annual payment, say, of $1,000, the annuitant dies, then he loses the remaining $9,000. Nothing is due him after he dies.

On the other hand, if the annuitant lives beyond his expectancy, or if he lives beyond the time when he has received back the total he paid—in this illustration $10,000—then all sums in excess of that $10,000 received by him must be reported as income and as subject to taxation.

Under the proposed amendment the change would operate to tax the premium which the annuitant pays at the rate of 3 percent, and require the annuitant to report that 3 percent of his premium as income in his annual tax returns. So that if an annuitant has paid a premium of $10,000, he must report as income each year the sum of $300. If the annuity paid to him is $1,000 per annum, then he has to account for 30 percent of the annuity which he receives each year as income, for the purpose of taxation.

Let us assume that a man pays a premium of $10,000 for an annuity. Surely until he receives back from the company the sum of $10,000, there has been no income to him, and it is just as if he took the $10,000 and put it underneath the mattress and took away from it $1,000 each year for 10 years. That is precisely the return he gets from his premium until he has received back the total amount he has paid.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. REED. It seems to me there is this difference between putting it under the mattress and paying it to the insurance company, that the money under the mattress yields no return annually; it is not working money; but the money paid to the insurance company earns interest in the hands of the insurance company, and the amount that is paid to the annuitant is increased by the amount of the interest which is earned.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I propose to show the fallacy of that reasoning, and I maintain what I have just said, that so far as the individual annuitant is concerned, it makes no difference to him whether half of the amount that is paid him is interest and half principal, or whether one third of it is interest and the two thirds principal; the fact remains that until he has received back his principal, he has received no income from that which he has paid in. There cannot be any two ways of thinking about that.

If I pay $10,000 as a premium for an annuity, I get no interest on that annuity until I have received back the $10,000. There is this added contingency—that if I die after receiving $5,000, I not only get no income from my investment but I lose $5,000.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. BONE. The last statement of the Senator leads to make this inquiry: Of course, in the event of the death of the annuitant, he would get no return, and whether any further payment were made by the insurance company would depend on the character of the policy written, but I assume for the purpose of my inquiry that the policy would be so written that there would be a payment to the estate or the family of the annuitant. My purpose in asking the question is to ascertain whether or not there would be a further payment under most types of annuity policies which are written.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the fact is that, by and large, there is no further payment upon annuities, but whenever there is a further payment after the death of the annuitant, then to the extent that it is income it must be accounted for by the recipient of the payment, and under existing law that is true.

Mr. BONE. I fully realize the correctness of what the Senator has stated; but my question merely sought to develop whether the insurance company would be absolved from further payments. I realize that such a type of policy is probably written. I am not familiar with all the different types of policies.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, for the purpose of this discussion I am making use of the ordinary annuity, as we understand an annuity, which is a payment during the life of the annuitant in consideration of a premium paid. Of course, an annuity is just the opposite of a life-insurance policy. In order to win, if you are an annuitant, you must live; whereas in the case of a life-insurance policy, in order to win, it is commonly said that you must die.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. HEBERT. Yes.

Mr. REED. I have heard them described in this way: That in the case of an insurance policy the company bets you that you will live; in the case of an annuity contract the company bets that you will die.

Mr. HEBERT. That is precisely the difference between the two contracts. In an annuity the annuitant sets up a sum at the outset, out of which he is to receive payments annually or quarterly or semiannually, as the case may be, and for a period—usually for life. Gradually the principal of the annuity is decreased by reason of the payments which are made during the life of the annuitant.

In the case of a life-insurance policy nothing is set up at the outset, except there is an annual premium out of which is created what is known as a "reserve", which put at interest at a given rate, accumulates from year to year, and which is expected at the time of the death of the policyholder, under the tables of mortality, to amount to the face of his policy. So it is seen that an annuity is just the reverse of a life-insurance contract.

Let us take, for example, in order to show the inequity of provision as pending before the Senate and recommended by the committee, an annuity premium of $100,000 paid in by a man aged 50, in consideration of which the annuitant is to receive annually the sum of $10,000.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, does the Senator mean that that amount is paid in in a lump sum?

Mr. HEBERT. Exactly; that is the annuity premium.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. HEBERT. One hundred thousand dollars are paid in as a premium at the age of 50. The annuitant, we will assume, is to receive annually for life the sum of $10,000. Under the pending provision in the revenue bill as reported by the committee, that annuitant would be required to report as income in his tax return the sum of $3,000, or 3 percent of the premium which he paid for the annuity, namely, $100,000.

Then, let us take another case of a like premium of $100,000 on an annuity policy taken out at the age of 65. Bear in mind there are two annuitants each paying a premium of $100,000. In consideration of that premium of $100,000 paid by the man at the age of 50 he will receive annually $10,000; but the annuitant who takes out the annuity policy at the age of 65 will receive for the same consideration $20,000. I repeat, each annuitant has paid the same consideration. They are not of the same age, and therefore they do not receive the same amount each month. Therefore, too, in the first case the annuitant taking out his policy at the age of 50 under this supposititious case pays a tax upon 30 percent of his income, whereas in the second case the annuitant pays a tax on 15 percent of his income, the consideration being precisely the same in both cases.

It is not my purpose to attempt to deny to the Government a revenue from this character of income; I think there is some justification for taxing such annuities; but I myself have reached the conclusion not only that it is more equitable to tax them on the present basis, on the basis of the existing law, but that, by and large, the existing law will bring more revenue to the Government than would the amendment which is proposed.

Perhaps I can illustrate that by using some figures. We will assume, for example, that 100 men buy annuities each for a premium of $10,000, each one being aged 63 at the time he purchases the annuity. That would represent a total investment, say, of $1,000,000, but this proposed amendment for taxable purposes would require to be reported an income of $30,000 a year; in other words, 3 percent of the $1,000,000; and that $30,000 a year, here and there, by all the annuitants must be reported in their income-tax returns, representing an average of $300 each.

At the end of 10 years each of the annuitants receiving a payment of $1,000 a year would have received back all his capital; but according to the tables of mortality 35 of them would have died. Under existing law none of them would have paid any tax up to that time; but at the end of the tenth year, 65 being still living, each receiving $1,000, would receive in the aggregate $65,000; and that $65,000 would be required to be reported as income on which a tax would be paid. That is, there would be $65,000 of taxable income as against $30,000 taxable income as provided by the pending amendment to the bill. So it would take but a little over 3 years for the tax in that case to equal what is going to be received under the pending amendment.

There is the added advantage, however, that in the second case, that of the 65 who are each receiving $1,000 a year and have to report $65,000 income, instead of the reporting for income-tax purposes of $300 each, which might more easily be absorbed in the income of any annuitant, there would be reported $1,000 per annuitant, which could not be so easily absorbed; and in the case of an unmarried person would use up all the deductible amount on his income-tax return. If he had any other income, then he would have to pay a tax, whereas in the case of the annuitant under the bill as reported by the committee, he would have to absorb only $300 of the amount derived from his annuity.

So I believe that, by and large, the existing law requiring annuitants to report for income-tax purposes all money paid to them in excess of the amount paid by them as premiums for annuities would yield a greater revenue than would the provision recommended by the committee.

Then, there is another objection to the recommendation of the committee, as I see it. The bill provides that the total premium shall be assumed to yield an income of 3 percent, and that such income shall be reported each year for tax purposes, and there is no provision for the reduction which takes place in that income from year to year, but the annuitant must report 3 percent of his entire premium throughout his life. Assuming that an annuitant had paid a premium of $10,000 and received back a payment of $1,000 per year, at the end of 10 years he has received back his $10,000, and his entire principal is used up. Notwithstanding that, under the provision recommended by the committee, it is still assumed that the entire amount of the principal, $10,000, is in existence, and he is required to report income of 3 percent of that $10,000.

Even accepting the argument of those who advocate this change, it would only be about 12 years before the principal is used up if the interest element be applied to the payments, but, notwithstanding that, the annuitant is required to report as income 3 percent of the entire premium that he has paid for his annuity, regardless of the fact that the time comes, sooner or later, when the entire principal is used up, and there is no provision made for taxing that which remains, but the annuitant must pay a tax on the total amount. It seems to me that it is manifestly unfair. It is unfair to tax one man who receives an income of $10,000 the same amount as is taxed the man who receives an income of $20,000 a year; and, after all, this is an income tax.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. REED. It seems to me that the illustration the Senator gives shows the fairness and not the unfairness of this proposal, because the man aged 65 whose annuity is $20,000 a year has put in the same amount as the man of 50 whose income is only $10,000 a year. The reason for the difference is that $3,000 is being earned as rental for the money that each of them paid. They both put in the same amount of money. The larger amount paid to the older man is a quicker return of principal to him. I repeat, I think it illustrates the fairness and not the unfairness of the provision.

Mr. HEBERT. I know the argument that is advanced to sustain that contention; I know, in the aggregate, taking all the annuitants together, the element of expectancy of life and the interest element, all things combined, enter into the calculation of the premium; but I am led to repeat what I have often heard about annuitants, that no man lives the average; he is either alive or he is dead; so long as he lives he receives the annuity payments; the minute he dies, he has kissed good-bye to his principal, and there is no interest element that can enter into it, so far as he is concerned or so far as any annuitant is concerned, until he has received back the total amount he has paid in. But the insurance company, yes, most assuredly, the insurance company, or any company that issues an annuity policy, expects that the funds placed in its custody will earn interest; it may be 3 percent; it may be 3½ percent or 4 percent; but that does not benefit the annuitant until such time as he has received back the total of his principal. To an insurance company or a company selling the annuity the interest element does enter into it. When they make this supposititious payment of a thousand dollars a year, there is the interest element, so far as the insurance company is concerned; but there is not so far as the annuitant is concerned, and he gets no interest. It seems to me to be so clear that it does not need to be argued that if I pay $10,000 as a premium for an annuity, I get no interest on my payment until after I have received back my $10,000.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Where the annuitant lives out his expectancy, he does receive a profit or interest on the transaction, does he not?

Mr. HEBERT. If an annuitant lives beyond his expectancy——

Mr. GEORGE. If he lives his expectancy.

Mr. HEBERT. If he lives his expectancy, he will get a profit; and to the extent that he gets a profit, under the amendment which I have proposed that profit goes in as income and must be subject to taxation.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that, but I wanted to be clear as to the Senator's position. I thought his argument was that in no event would the annuitant get back any more than he put in as premium.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator misunderstood me, I am sure. I said the annuitant receives no profit, no income, no interest from his investment until after there has been a return to him of the entire amount of his principal or his premium.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true so far as receipt is concerned, but if he lives out his expectancy there is an income to him.

Mr. HEBERT. What I understand the Senator to mean is that the man buying an annuity at the age of 50 has an expectancy of 20 years. He pays in a premium of $10,000. He is to be paid $1,000 a year during the remainder of his life, we will say. At the end of 10 years he has received back his principal. Then if he lives the remainder of his expectancy, or 10 years more, to that extent what he receives is profit, and under existing law he has to account for that in his income-tax return.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand what the existing law is, but there is an earning upon the money, actual or expected; and if he lives out his expectancy, there is, of course, an actual earning.

Mr. HEBERT. There is an earning. Necessarily there must be an earning, because otherwise there would not be enough money to take care of all the annuitants. But up to the time when the total premium he has paid has been returned to him, so far as the individual annuitant is concerned, there is no interest return to him and no profit to him.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true; but is there anything essentially unfair in the Government's saying to him, "We will treat 3 percent of the gross premium paid as taxable income each year. We will not allow you to defer the payment of all taxes until you have received a return of the total premium paid." In the event he should die before he received the total premium paid, of course, he would never become liable to the Government for any income.

Mr. HEBERT. But let me remind the Senator that under the proposed amendment in the bill, he would be liable.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that, but I am speaking of the present law. Under the present law, if he has an annuity of $10,000 a year, he has bought and paid for it. He gave for it $100,000. He has an income of $10,000, as a mere illustration. If he should live 9 years and receive $10,000 a year, he would not of course be liable for any income tax on that transaction.

Mr. HEBERT. Because he had received no income.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand, but it was a profit-making enterprise which he bought. If he should live out his expectancy, he would in fact make a profit upon it. Is there anything essentially unfair if the Government should say to him, "Each year we will count 3 percent of the total premium paid as taxable income to go into your tax return? We will not permit you to receive these annuities until you have gotten back all your money and thereby defer any claim the Government has for its taxes as against this particular transaction."

Mr. HEBERT. To my mind it is manifestly unfair, because in the first place the annuitant derives no income until after he has received back his principal, and by no stretch of the imagination may it be said that the annuitant paying $100,000 for his principal——

Mr. GEORGE. Let us suppose he invested it in some kind of property.

Mr. HEBERT. Then, a different element enters into the transaction.

Mr. GEORGE. I know there is a difference, but can it be accurately said that he received no income from the transaction?

Mr. HEBERT. Absolutely.

Mr. GEORGE. It is true he has never gotten back his original investment, but can it be accurately said he has received no income from the transaction?

Mr. HEBERT. It can absolutely be said without fear of contradiction that he has received no income until he derives a profit from the transaction. Of course, we cannot make a comparison with one making an investment——

Mr. GEORGE. I understand.

Mr. HEBERT. Because the purchase of an annuity is not an investment.

Mr. GEORGE. It is an investment, if the Senator pleases, because otherwise nobody would buy it. It may be a speculative investment. It does not carry any tangible property along with it to leave after the man dies, but it is an investment after all.

Mr. HEBERT. I may say to the Senator that in no sense is an annuity considered as an investment. The purpose of those who purchase annuities is to guarantee, out of the sum which they have on hand, a fixed income during the remainder of their lives. It is in no sense an investment, because there is always the possibility that they may lose as much as 90 percent of the total of their capital. As the Senator well knows, if after receiving one annuity payment the annuitant dies, the remainder of his principal is absorbed and the company that sold the annuity takes it with all the earnings on it, whatever they may be.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is entirely correct; but, after all, it partakes of the character of an investment. It does not seem to me that it is essentially unfair for the taxing authority to say the Government has the right to maintain that a portion of this annual return, a small portion, 3 percent of the original out-of-pocket payment as premium, shall be regarded as taxable income for the purpose at least of meeting the tax obligations of the Government.

Mr. HEBERT. May I say to the Senator that, so far as the annuitant is concerned, he never sees that yield on the money he has paid into the company until he has had back in payments the total of his premium. If the Senator asks me whether or not the company derives an income out of the investment of that premium, I say most assuredly it does. It must of necessity do so. It is based on the law of averages; the tables of mortality figure in it; the expectation of life enters into it. There are annuitants who live away beyond their expectation. The profit that is made from the early death of A is used to pay on the later death of B; but that is not a benefit to A, who dies before the end of his expectancy.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator is an expert in insurance, I know. I was wondering what is the expectancy in the two illustrations he gave of the man who put up $100,000 at age 50 and the man who put up $100,000 at age 65. What is the expectancy in those two cases?

Mr. HEBERT. The man at age 50 would have an expectancy of about 20 years, I should say, while the man at age 65 would have an expectancy of perhaps 10 or 15 years.

Mr. COUZENS. So, when those who issue the annuity take $100,000 from the man at age 50, they really expect to pay back $200,000 on the expectancy the Senator has mentioned. Is that correct?

Mr. HEBERT. Oh, no.

Mr. COUZENS. If they should pay back $10,000 a year for 10 years that would be the case, would it not?

Mr. HEBERT. That is the illustration I gave, but I am not giving the Senator the exact figures.

Mr. COUZENS. That is what I am trying to get. I should like to have the exact figures if the Senator can give them.

Mr. HEBERT. I do not have them in mind. I could not give the Senator the exact figures. I am using the figures only for the purposes of illustration.

Mr. COUZENS. But the Senator said a man at age 50 would get $10,000 a year.

Mr. HEBERT. That again was only an illustration.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the illustrations ought to be analyzed. I can see the point the Senator makes. In other words, if I pay in $100,000 at the age of 50 and take out $10,000 a year and do not get any interest, of course, I do not pay any income tax.

Mr. HEBERT. That is precisely the point I am trying to make. If the Senator deposits $100,000 in bank without interest, and draws out $10,000 of it each year, at the end of 10 years he will have used up his capital, and there will be no profit to tax.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator please, that is precisely why I asked if, in the case of the ordinary annuity, it was not figured that where the expectancy was lived out there would be a profit in excess of the money actually paid in. Of course, the Senator very properly and correctly said that there was such a profit. There would have to be, of course, or else annuities ordinarily could not be sold.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator speaks of profit now in what respect—profit to the company selling the annuity?

Mr. GEORGE. In the sense that the total return where the annuitant lives out his full expectancy will, of course, exceed the amount paid in.

Mr. HEBERT. Naturally it will exceed the amount paid in.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly; but in the case of the deposit of money in bank without interest, precisely the opposite is true. The depositor would get back only what he put in the bank.

Mr. HEBERT. Oh, no, Mr. President! For a given length of time he gets no more in one instance than he does in the other.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand; but, of course, he would continue to get the money in bank until it was all exhausted, whether he lived or died.

Mr. HEBERT. Yes; of course, there is that difference.

Mr. GEORGE. But there is no element of possible profit in a transaction of that kind.

Mr. HEBERT. Neither is there an element of possible loss.

Mr. GEORGE. That is very true.

Mr. HEBERT. The depositor in a bank ordinarily is sure that he is going to get his principal back; but when a man puts his money into an annuity company he never is sure that he is going to get even his principal back, to say nothing of any income.

Mr. GEORGE. That is quite true.

Mr. HEBERT. And the annuitant must live out his expectancy before he can get any income from his money. If he does not live out his expectancy, he loses; and yet it is proposed to tax that man who loses for something he loses, something he never gets. That is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. That is quite true. Otherwise, if we admit the full theoretical justice of the Senator's position, we have the easy case of a very wealthy man simply buying an annuity and escaping all possible liability to taxes upon that investment, or whatever we may decide to call it, until he has gotten back his entire capital.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, let us analyze the statement of the Senator that the man who has a million dollars with which to purchase an annuity escapes taxation. Let us assume that he purchases that annuity for a million dollars, and deposits the money with the company that sells him the annuity upon condition that he is to get a certain fixed sum out of it each year. What he gets each year, until he has gotten back his million dollars, is his. It is not anybody else's. It is taken right out of the corpus of his estate. It is not until he goes beyond the time when he has had back the sum he paid over that he has a profit.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly; but the Government has the right, and I think it has a moral right, to say, with respect to a transaction of that kind, that it will treat at least a certain small percentage of the annual return as a profit for the purpose of taxation, because it might be perfectly consistent with sound public policy not to offer this avenue of possible escape from any liability to taxation.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator and I disagree about the legality of it. In fact, the cases I have examined lead me to the conclusion that we cannot assume as income that which is not income.

Let me illustrate that.

Suppose the Senator purchases for $100,000 a home which he occupies himself. That $100,000 will not yield him any income, but the Government has essayed to claim that a fair rental value of that house should be reported as income. The courts said, "No; that is not income. There has been no income. It is true that because the owner occupies his own home and does not have to pay rent elsewhere he saves that charge; but it is not income, and it is not income for tax purposes." So in the case of the annuity the man deposits $100,000 for a specific purpose. It is not income for him to have paid back to him the sum which he deposits.

Suppose the payment shall stop, as it might well stop, after he had received his principal. Could there be said to have been any income there? Yet, in many, many cases that is true. Not only is that true, but many times the payment stops before he has received back his principal, to say nothing about income.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will permit me, I think it can be said that there is income there, because had the contract gone on to its maturity, as contemplated by the parties, there would have been an income in each annual repayment to the annuitant.

Mr. HEBERT. Then, Mr. President, if that is the contention of the Senator, what is going to be done with the annuitant who pays $100,000 and receives back $10,000, and then gets nothing else? Are we going to give him credit for the loss of the $90,000?

Mr. GEORGE. That subject is not dealt with in this particular bill, but it is just like any other fortuitous investment or enterprise. We often make them. We make them with reference to real property. We make them with reference to all other forms of contract.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, in view of the Senator's argument that this tax is an invasion of the corpus of the property, diminishing it year by year, I gather that the Senator's idea is that this is, in effect and by indirection, a capital levy rather than a tax on income.

Mr. HEBERT. To the extent that we tax something that is not there, of course, it is a capital levy.

Mr. BONE. Of course, it is beside the question to argue the matter as a question of law when the Senator referred to the home; but under our property tax systems we do tax the home, of course. We tax it to support the Government.

Mr. HEBERT. But not as income.

Mr. BONE. Not as income; but we do tax the corpus of the property in other ways.

Mr. COUZENS. Not for the Federal Government.

Mr. BONE. No; that is true. The Federal Government does not do it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to have one point cleared up.

In figuring the expectancy of life it has been suggested, I think by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], that the company that sells me the annuity figures in 3 or 4 percent annually as the possible earning of the money; therefore shortening the term within which the amount I put in may be returned to me. Therefore, if I should live out the term of expectancy which would be shortened by virtue of adding to the principal the interest earned, I would be receiving each year a part of the interest earned by the money put in the hands of the company.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, if, as the Senator believes, the application of the interest element shortens the term, the amendment I have proposed is all the more favorable to the Government, because the sooner the return of the principal is made to the annuitant, the sooner the Government will get a higher tax on income.

Mr. SMITH. I am perfectly in sympathy with the proposition of the Senator, for the reason that until the annuitant has received back—whether the time be short or long—the amount he paid for his annuity, he has earned nothing.

Mr. HEBERT. Of course not, Mr. President. The question cannot be argued in any other way. It may be said that the company has received interest on the sum the annuitant has paid, but that is not his money. He has nothing to do with that.

Mr. SMITH. That does not enter into the equation; and, as the Senator has very clearly put the matter, if the interest is added so as to increase the amount payable per year and shorten the term of expectancy, just that much sooner does the annuitant get interest on his money, because the minute he gets back the amount that he paid all that he receives subsequently is subject to taxation, since it is really income.

Mr. HEBERT. And generally it is about three times as much as the amount of the income based upon a tax of 3 percent.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I see.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there are two other factors that I think are worth bearing in mind in this connection.

One of them is that we are now entering a period of very high tax rates. It is probable that it will be 3 years yet before the administration will be changed and we shall be able to make reductions in taxes. The people who invest their money in annuities, with the knowledge that they are not going to be taxed for 10 or 15 or 20 years in the future are going to escape completely the high income-tax rates carried by this bill; and the chances are very strong that 20 years from now, when they do begin to pay income taxes, the rates will be very much less than they now are.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President——

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. If the owner of the money did not invest it, of course, he would not have any income; would he?

Mr. REED. No; that is true.

Mr. COUZENS. I am quite in sympathy with what the Senator is seeking, and the purpose of the amendment; but I cannot see how the Government, during the time these high rates are in force, will get any money out of these rich men if they do not invest it; and certainly such a man is not investing his money by merely putting it away in a vault or into an annuity, is he?

Mr. REED. Yes; he is investing it when he buys an annuity.

Mr. COUZENS. He does not get any return on it.

Mr. REED. He is putting the money right into the investment field.

The second point I wish to make is that when this money is paid over to an insurance company, it becomes a part of the great mass of its reserves; and the Senate should understand that these insurance companies are totally tax-exempt on the first 3¾ percent that they get each year on their reserves. Three and three fourths percent is totally tax-exempt, and that is about the amount of the interest that would be received on a first-grade bond. By the present law we immunize the annuitant from taxation, and there is a mass of wealth—a million dollars, let us assume—paid by an individual who is not going to be taxed on it to an insurance company which is not going to be taxed on it, and that whole mass of wealth is taken away from the taxing power of the Government. It seems to me we should bear that in mind when we are considering the reasonableness of this proposal.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, it should be observed that under existing conditions, even if there were no tax upon annuities, there could be no tax upon a million dollars that is not invested and does not earn something. The tax is not upon the million dollars; the tax is upon an income from a million dollars. We must bear that distinction in mind. It does not make any difference whether a man is possessed of a million or ten million or a hundred million; it is not the capital tax he pays; he pays a tax on the income.

Mr. REED. Of course, that is true, and that is what I meant when I said that this money was placed beyond the reach of the taxing power. We tax the income only; we do not tax the capital. Everybody knows that. But I say that the earning power of that mass of wealth is exempt from taxation against the real beneficiary, and it is exempt from taxation in the hands of the insurance company. The income from that money is totally tax-exempt.

Mr. HEBERT. I do not know whether or not the insurance companies derive any income from their annuities. I do know that only recently they raised their rates for annuities. The sale of annuities is something new in this country, but it is far from being new in certain European countries, and it has come to be a common saying in insurance circles that annuitants never die. Once a person has an assured income for his life he stops worrying, and it is assumed that that is conducive to longevity; but under no stretch of the imagination is that income, because it is a return of his own money.

If I am asked whether the insurance company gets any income from that fund, I say it must derive some income from it, because in the application of the tables of mortality and the expectation of life, the element of interest enters in; but if the income goes to anyone, it goes to the insurance company, and if we are going to tax it anywhere, that is the place to tax it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] and to oppose the amendment as it appears in the report of the committee.

It seems to me, at the outset, that the bill as it is reported would inaugurate a novel theory of taxation. This is the first time in my study of tax laws, particularly income-tax laws, where there has been an attempt to tax a profit not yet realized, a purely prospective profit, so far as the taxpayer is concerned. Of course, if we take the whole class of annuitants, a great number of them, say several thousand of them, one realizes that under the present law those who actually obtain their profits are actually being taxed, according to the entire spirit and theory of the law as applied to any other type of profits or of income.

The pending bill undertakes to tax a return of the capital and nothing more, up to the time when the annuitant has received the whole of the amount of the consideration paid by him, the entire title of which passed out of his control and into the possession and control and exclusive ownership of the insurance company, or such other company as may have undertaken the contract.

At this point may I inquire of the chairman of the committee whether it is his understanding that this measure would apply to hospitals and universities, which obtain a large amount of their endowments by selling annuity contracts? Is that the interpretation which would be placed upon the measure?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it does not apply to them at all. It applies only to persons receiving income. It does not apply to them.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not think the Senator has understood my question.

Mr. HARRISON. I know of no hospital that has gone out and put up $100,000, or $10,000, or $50,000, in order to buy an annuity.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is what I apprehended was the trouble, that my question was not clear.

Assume that a hospital has received from a philanthropist $100,000 for immediate use by the hospital in erecting buildings, in consideration of which the hospital promises to pay to the donor as an annuity a sum corresponding to 5 percent annually of the amount of the gift. Would the receiver of that income be a taxpayer, under this provision of the measure?

Mr. HARRISON. It does not apply to him.

Mr. AUSTIN. It does not apply to a person who makes such a donation to a university or college?

Mr. HARRISON. It might apply to the person who took out one of these policies, and to the income coming back to him, if he was giving it over to the hospital.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is all there is to my question. Would the donor to a university who received an annuity payment during his lifetime have to pay a tax, under the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. I have stated to the Senator that it all depends on the circumstances. In my opinion, if an individual should take out one of these annuities and collect a certain amount each year and turn it over to a hospital, of course he would have to pay on the income.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is very much simpler than that. Many of our universities throughout the United States receive gifts or payments of large sums of money for specific uses, and in consideration of those gifts they issue to the donor an annuity contract, promising to pay the donor a sum annually which is equivalent, in many cases, to only 5 percent of the amount of the gift. Of course, if this measure is intended to reach such people, it is an extraordinarily cruel bill, an extraordinarily unfair bill, and of course I regard it as unfair, where the contract is one of insurance or one where an insurance company issues an annuity contract for a consideration. It seems to me we can test the fairness of the bill by this one illustration: Suppose I have made a payment for an annuity today and receive but one annuity and then die; there is no provision in the bill whatever for a deduction on account of the large loss.

If we take the example given by the Senator from Rhode Island, of the payment of $100,000 in the puchase of an annuity contract and a return of only $10,000 and thereupon the death of the annuitant, we can readily see that there has been an absolute total loss of $90,000, which is not recognized in any way whatever by this measure, although the entire theory of all our income-tax laws has been to recognize and to allow a deduction for actual realized losses.

Mr. President, for these two reasons, first, that this bill undertakes to tax a profit which is not yet realized, and for the reason that it does not allow a deduction for a loss which is realized, the measure is unjust and unfair, and ought not to be passed.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island would preserve the status quo, as I interpret it, and would admit of taxation by the Government of all it is entitled to tax under any theory we have yet adopted in an income tax law, that is, taxation of actual income. As soon as there is anybody in this whole class of annuitants who is receiving income, he pays a tax, not on a part of his income, but on the whole of the income.

If it be true that the issuing of annuities is a modern plan, and has not yet arrived at that stage of maturity where the class of those who have received again all they paid for their annuity is large, nevertheless the principle is sound and true that those who have exceeded the expectancy, or have received again all the return of capital to which they are entitled under their contract—and that is what the contract is, we must understand—would pay a tax under the bill as it is, and they would pay a tax under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, and that would be a correct principle. That would be consistent with the law as we have always known it to be.

I have a letter here which I know went into the record of the committee, but which has not been available to the Senate because the hearings have not been printed, and with the permission of the Senate I should like to read it. It is from Hon. Fred A. Howland, president of the National Life Insurance Co., of Montpelier, Vt., addressed to me, in which he says:

The revenue bill of 1934 (H.R. 7835) proposes a change in the method of taxing annuities which seems so objectionable as to warrant its elimination from the measure.

The present law does not tax the annuitant until he has received an aggregate amount of payments equal to the consideration paid for the annuity (whereupon the whole amount of payments to the annuitant thereafter made are treated as income), while the method in the pending bill would require the annuitant to include in his gross income immediately a portion of the annual payments in the amount of 3 percent of the consideration paid for the purchase of the annuity.

The reason given in the committee report, page 21, for making the change is that the taxes on annuities are postponed indefinitely.

It is true that the payments are postponed, but it is equally true that they ought to be deferred until the annuitant gets back the principal sum which he paid to buy the annuity, as it is not till then that he begins to profit by his investment.

Considering the entire body of annuitants as a unit, the new plan might work equitably; but, taking the individual cases, the hardship imposed and the inequality of the burden imposed are clearly apparent.

For example, take the case of two people, both of age 63, who each put $5,000 into an annuity. Annuitant A dies at the end of the seventh year, while annuitant B dies at 85, the end of the twenty-second year. Under the proposed amendment annuitant A, who never got back the purchase price of his annuity but has actually suffered loss in both principal and income, has been taxed on assumed income; while under the present law annuitant A would pay no tax, but annuitant B would be taxed on the whole of the annuity income after the payments theretofore received by him had equaled the principal invested.

I venture to say that there is no provision in the present income tax law and no other proposed amendment which taxes as income an investment which shows loss in both principal and income. If the suggested amendment is to be seriously considered, the estate of the annuitant who dies before the sums paid back to him in annual payments equal the purchase price should be allowed credit as an actual loss for the difference between the consideration paid for the annuity and the annual payments received.

The enclosed copy of letter from Dr. Huebner, professor of insurance and commerce at the University of Pennsylvania, and also a copy of the brief of Roger B. Hull, managing director of, and representing, the National Association of Life Underwriters, contain objections to the measure.

These underwriting agents represent a large and intelligent group of salesmen the country over, and their annuity clients are largely people of moderate means and of advanced years, to whom a tax burden on property not yet yielding actual profit would be a most objectionable burden.

There are further remarks in the letter which are personal in nature and I will not read them.

I have a letter from the Vermont Association of Life Underwriters which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

VERMONT ASSOCIATION OF LIFE UNDERWRITERS,
St. Johnsbury, Vt., March 15, 1934.

Hon. WARREN R. AUSTIN,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: As president of the Vermont Life Underwriters Association and as the official representative of the Life Underwriters of Vermont, I want to state that our association is very interested in that section of the report of the Hill subcommittee which recommends adoption of an arbitrary method of determining income under annuity contracts. Namely, that a portion of each annual payment equal to 3 percent of the purchase price be assumed to be interest income. Where an annuity is paid for with a principal sum, the annuitant gives up all title to the capital thus invested, in contrast to the situation which prevails when money is deposited in a bank or other depository institution. The annuitant is promised a definite income regardless of whether the insurance company loses or profits from the transaction. Moreover, should he die early, the entire capital sum is considered liquidated. In no case can the annuitant derive a profit unless he or she lives long enough to have first received back in annuities an amount equal to the principal sum paid for the annuity. Therefore, profit begins to accrue to the annuitant only when this particular point has been reached.

It also follows, that to impose an income tax upon annuity payments prior to the time that the annuitant has received back his principal is an altogether uneconomical proposition. After annuities represent a profit, they should, of course, be taxed, and according to our understanding that is the ruling under the present income tax.

In all probability, the Hill report is based upon the actuarial explanation that annuity payments using averages represent a return annually of part of the principal, together with a certain amount of interest. This is true when the annuity account is averaged for a larger number of annuitants, but it is not at all a case with the individual annuitant. Ten thousand annuitants would receive annually part of the principal and some interest, but the individual does not profit until he has received payments for a sufficient term of years to make them equal the principal paid for the annuity. Should he die prior to that time, the individual will have actually suffered a loss.

You can, therefore, understand why we as life underwriters are not in sympathy with this report and trust that you will do everything in your power to see that this does not become a law.

Sincerely yours,

E. WESLEY ENMAN, President.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I desire to say from some personal knowledge, by virtue of a connection of many years with the issuing of annuity contracts by a university, that I know that a large percentage, probably 80 percent of those who hold the annuity contracts of that university with which I was connected are people of very moderate means, many of them elderly people who have bought this very meager income, and in many cases just barely enough to support them in their old age, on the understanding which was set forth in the certificate of the internal revenue department, that that was a return of capital to them under their contract, which was not taxable in theory and under the law, and, therefore, that the investment which they had made would probably shield and protect them for the short remainder of their years.

If we apply the proposed tax—and it is a very high one—we thereby reduce that meager income of individuals who have parted with their principal and turned it over to a university in order that it might perform two functions, one to aid in the cause of education by the immediate use by the university of the principal in the erection of buildings, or in the establishment of instruments and means of education, the other purpose being to obtain a moderate income, which would be certain in amount, and not subject to fluctuation by taxation. If we pass the bill without the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island we rewrite those contracts on a basis that will cause tremendous hardship, and I know that what is true of my own little university is true of many others, for I made investigations covering that situation some years ago.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator has referred to sums that have been deposited with universities on condition that the universities shall pay an annuity to the depositors. Can the Senator state what becomes of those funds? Whether for the most part they are invested to yield an income, or whether they are put into brick and mortar and yield no income whatsoever?

Mr. AUSTIN. The funds of this character with which I am familiar went into brick and mortar; into the erection of useful structures on the campus.

Mr. HEBERT. So that the amendment proposed by the committee assumes that there is income when, in fact, there is absolutely no income from those sources?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is true, and that is a very cogent reason for not passing the bill without the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island. The funds are not interest bearing; they are not income producing. No one anywhere earns a profit by virtue of the payment, by virtue of the parting of title by some elderly woman of moderate means to a university or hospital which she desires to help and at the same time reserve a life support for herself.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator has referred to the high rate of tax on such incomes. As I compute it, the tax is equivalent to 12 percent of the payments made to the annuitants.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I will conclude very shortly.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. It has been pointed out in the debate that the annuities in question represent a return of money placed, we will say, with an insurance company. The insurance company takes the money and invests it and makes, or expects to make, a profit. If the insurance company could not invest that money—say it had it deposited in the vault—would the annuity it paid to the annuitant be as large as it now pays, in view of the fact that it has the opportunity to use the investor's money and make a profit out of it?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's question I would say "no." But the point is that the Government taxes the profit, all the profit, at the right time so far as the individual annuitant is concerned, and that is when he receives the profit, and not before, not when he has not received it and is receiving nothing but capital.

Mr. OVERTON. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him again, I will say to the Senator that I think he does not catch the point I am making. The point I am undertaking to make is that the insurance company distributes the profits annually among the annuitants by paying them a larger annuity by reason of the fact that the company has the annuitant's money and invests that money, makes an income on it, and, therefore, is in a position to pay the annuitant a larger annuity than it would otherwise pay. If I am correct in that premise, then it seems to me the philosophy of the bill is that the Government is taxing annual income as it is being made and as it is being distributed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, so far as I know, no insurance company undertakes to divide its funds so as to earmark what is money earned in the revolution of these funds in its hands, and what is principal added to the fund by some new annuitant paying in another sum of money. No attempt is made to do that, but the company makes a contract based and calculated upon a great number of experiences, the average of which results in close accuracy, and on that basis is able to provide a contract which is held out in terms of years, and which is understood by both parties to the contract to represent a return of principal up to a certain length of time, whereupon there begins the payment of realized profits. All there is in the theory of an income tax law that is justly laid upon the people is that it shall be upon realized profits. Unrealized profits may never be realized.

It is true that when a person dies before the profits are realized his estate has suffered a loss. I made that statement previously, and I want to put into the RECORD something which represents the opinion of the United States Board of Tax Appeals of very recent date.

I refer to the case of Cora K. Louis, petitioner, against Commissioner of Internal Revenue, respondent. Docket No. 49179. Promulgated February 23, 1934. I will not weary the Senators by reading the whole case. I will read merely the dictum and put into the RECORD the whole case. The dictum is:

> Petitioner acquired an annuity in consideration of a surrender of a part of her interest in her father's estate. Such annuity was terminated in the taxable year by the death of her mother, upon whose life expectancy it was based. Held, that the unrecovered cost of the annuity at date of termination was a loss in the year the contract was terminated.

It was further held that there was, on that account, a legal deduction made, and the amount of tax paid by the estate was reduced thereby.

I ask that the entire opinion may be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in conclusion, let me say that I trust Senators will consider carefully this question. It has a very serious effect upon many individuals who have no other way of having their rights protected than to have Senators consider them carefully, even though the proposal is in the form of an amendment to a bill which comes out of a committee which has expended a great deal of earnest study upon the subject. I doubt, however, if the committee has considered this aspect of the case. I wonder if Senators have considered the possible harm that will be done by this measure to the annuitants whom I have mentioned; and they constitute a large class? Certainly no harm can come to the Government by allowing the law to remain as it is, because under the present law, and as it would be preserved by the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], the United States could levy a tax upon all it is entitled to tax under the true theory of any income tax law, and that is realized profits, income.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island will be adopted.

[The decision of the Board of Tax Appeals referred to by Mr. AUSTIN is as follows:]

DECISION UNITED STATES BOARD OF TAX APPEALS

CORA K. LOUIS, PETITIONER v. COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE, RESPONDENT

Docket No. 49179. Promulgated February 23, 1934

Petitioner acquired an annuity in consideration of a surrender of a part of her interest in her father's estate. Such annuity was terminated in the taxable year by the death of her mother, upon whose life expectancy it was based. Held, that the unrecovered cost of the annuity at date of termination was a loss in the year the contract was terminated.

Theodore B. Benson, Esq., for the petitioner.
James H. Yeatman, Esq., for the respondent.

OPINION

LANSDON: The respondent has determined a deficiency in income tax for the year 1925 in the amount of $1,107.09, from which the petitioner appeals on the allegation that a loss sustained in that year has been erroneously disallowed as a deduction from gross income. The parties have filed a stipulation, which is accepted and incorporated herein by reference. The following is a summary of the material facts:

"Petitioner is an individual who resides at Los Angeles, Calif. Her father died testate on December 28, 1912, and in his will, probated in Cook County, Ill., on January 2, 1913, disposed of an estate of the net value of $2,868,442.39. The estate was left in varying proportions to the widow, two sons and three daughters of the decedent. Among other things, each of the daughters was to receive $75,000. The petitioner and her sisters were not satisfied with their shares of their father's estate under the will and, on April 19, 1913, entered into an agreement with their brothers whereby each was to receive one third of certain personal properties included in the estate inventory, and, in addition thereto, an annuity of $5,000 during the life of their mother, Rosalinda Klein, in lieu of all their interests under the will. Under this agreement the annuity to the sisters was expressly specified as the joint and several obligations of the brothers. At the date of such agreement the life expectancy of the mother was 15 years, 1 month, and 9 days. The present worth of an annuity of $5,000 per year, payable semiannually over that period, is $57,753.50. Rosalinda Klein died in 1925, at which date the petitioner had received annuity payments under the agreement in the amount of $60,000. Such total payments discounted back to April 1913 had a then value of $48,568.94. If Rosalinda Klein had lived out her expectancy, petitioner could have received six additional payments of $2,500 each, or a total of $15,000. That amount had a capital value as on April 1913, of $9,184.56, which is claimed by the petitioner as a deductible loss in the taxable year.

The only question here is whether the petitioner sustained a loss in the year in which the death of her mother terminated the annuity payments provided for by contract with her brothers on April 19, 1913. The answer to this question involves (1) whether an annuity contract is property; (2) the amount of petitioner's capital investment as the cost of the annuity; (3) the amount of such investment recovered by her prior to the taxable year; (4) whether the annuity contract was a transaction entered into for profit; and (5) whether the termination of such contract by the death of petitioner's mother was a disposition thereof within the meaning of section 204 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1926.

The amount of $75,000 was devised to the petitioner in her father's will, but the record is not clear that the annuity was based thereon or in lieu thereof. After the will was probated, the three sisters and two brothers agreed among themselves to a distribution of that portion of their father's estate left to them which was materially different from the terms thereof. As part of the compromise settlement with her brothers and sisters, petitioner acquired the right to receive $5,000 a year during the life of her mother, whose life expectancy on April 19, 1913, was something over 15 years. What she surrendered was an interest in her father's estate sufficient to purchase the annuity in question and if that interest was the capital basis of such annuity it was equal to the present worth thereof computed on the mother's life expectancy of 15 years, 1 month and 9 days, which the parties agree was $57,753.50. In Florence L. Klein (6 B.T.A. 617), in a proceeding involving the taxability of the income received under this same annuity contract, we said: "The significant fact now before us is that the value of what petitioner acquired by contract on April 19, 1913, became the capital basis for measuring any subsequent gain or loss in respect thereof." We are of the opinion that such amount was the cost of the petitioner's annuity at April 19, 1913.

The contention of the petitioner is that the annuity contract was property which cost her at least $57,753.50 and that, when her interest therein was terminated by the death of her mother, she sustained a loss under the provisions of section 202(a) of the Revenue Act of 1924,[1] measured by the difference between her capital investment and the amounts thereof recovered in the annual payments. That an annuity contract is property is too well established to require any discussion or citation of authorities. Here the annuity is not payable out of either the corpus or income of the estate of petitioner's father, but is created by contract between petitioner and her brothers, and there is therefore no question as to whether she received the annual payments as a beneficiary of the estate.

If the termination of the contract by the death of the petitioner's mother was a disposition of such property within the meaning of the taxing statute, it follows that the whole amount of the difference between the basis at acquisition and the recoveries of capital prior to such disposition is a deductible loss in the taxable year.

In William P. Blodgett et al., Executors (13 B.T.A. 1243) we held that the right of an estate to receive its decedent's share of the profits of a partnership for 1 year was a chose in action transmitted to the estate by such decedent and its capital cost was the present worth of such interest at the date the right to receive vested in the estate. The Commissioner determined that the entire amount of the partnership profits received by the estate during such first year was taxable income. We held that the chose in action was a capital asset of the estate and that realization therefrom was income only to the extent of the excess thereof over capital value at date of acquisition.

In Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, Executor (15 B.T.A. 20), the petitioner in the year 1919 exchanged certain leaseholds for an annuity of $100,000 per year and the next 2 years received the respective amounts of $100,000 and $99,999.96 in conformity with the contract under which the exchange was made. The Commissioner undertook to tax the total of each payment as income in the year in which it was received. In that proceeding we held that the present worth of the contract computed on the annuitant's life expectancy should be regarded as the fair market value of the annuity and as the starting point from which to determine the taxability of amounts received under the contract and that the owner is entitled to recover such value free from tax. On the authority of Florence L. Klein, supra, we also held that each annual payment constituted in part a recovery of capital and in part a gain.

In Florence L. Klein, supra, involving the identical contract now under consideration, we said that "when actually received in each year the annual payment consists of the principal of such payment, plus the discount, the latter being the gain taxable as income." This is the rule that was later applied in the cases above cited and discussed. None of the proceedings cited has been overruled by the Board or reversed on appeal, and as to the question therein decided they are controlling on similar issues.

In conformity with the decisions above cited and upon the stipulated facts, it follows that petitioner sustained a loss of $9,184.56 in the taxable year if the termination of her annuity contract by the death of her mother in 1925 can be regarded as the closing of a transaction entered into for profit as provided in section 214 (a) (5) of the Revenue Act of 1924. In George M. Cohan (11 B.T.A. 743) a very similar question was involved. In that proceeding the facts disclose that prior to the taxable year the petitioner had purchased an annuity contract and had made several substantial payments thereon. In the taxable year he decided that he had made a poor investment and forfeited the contract by nonpayment of installments then due. In his petition he claimed the right to deduct the sum of all payments theretofore made from his gross income as a loss sustained in the taxable year in a transaction entered into for profit. In our decision we held that an annuity contract is a transaction entered into for profit, that payments thereon are investments in property, and that the sum of such payments is a deductible loss in the year in which the contract is voluntarily forfeited for nonpayment of installments then due.

In Pioneer Cooperage Co. (17 B.T.A. 119) the petitioner claimed a deductible loss in the taxable year resulting from the destruction of timber by storm and the ravages of insects. In our decision we held that the facts brought the petitioner's contention within the loss provisions of the statutes. Upon appeal by the petitioner for increase in the amount of loss allowed by the Board, our decision was affirmed on all points in Pioneer Cooperage Co. v. Commissioner (53 Fed. 43; certiorari denied, 284 U.S. 687). In its opinion in that case the circuit court, in discussing the precedents relied on by the parties, said:

"These decisions refer to sale of property. The act includes not only sales but other disposition of property. A loss of property, such as occurred in this case, is a disposition within the meaning of the act, although it is involuntary. The property is disposed of so far as the owner is concerned, and there is no reason, in the absence of a positive statute, in determining a loss why a different rule should be adopted than in the case of a voluntary sale. The purpose of the act is to allow the owner to deduct what he has actually lost in the transaction. The depletion and exhaustion statutes were not intended to cover losses such as are involved here."

On brief the respondent relies on Warner v. Walsh (15 Fed. (2d) 367); United States v. Bolster (26 Fed. (2d) 760); Allen v. Brandeis (29 Fed. (2d) 363); Logan v. Commissioner (42 Fed. (2d) 193); affirmed: Logan v. Burnet (283 U.S. 444); and Mary W. B. Curtis, (26 B.T.A. 1103).

In our opinion these cases are all distinguishable from the present proceeding. In each the income in question was payable from an estate and the issue was whether, in accepting the terms of a will providing for annual payments from a testamentary trust, a widow bought an annuity at the cost of her relinquished interest in the estate to which she was entitled under the law. There is no such question here. This annuity is based on a contract between the petitioner and her brothers. The payments were not made from the estate but from the personal resources of the brothers, who, after April 19, 1919, were obligated to pay, entirely regardless of the amounts received by them from the estate. In the cases cited the payments were made either by the estate or by a testamentary trust and apparently involve no rule applicable to the present proceedings. In any event they have been so greatly modified by the Supreme Court in Helvering v. Butterworth (— U.S. —, Dec. 11, 1933) that they are no longer controlling as to the principal question therein involved.

In our opinion, the weight of authority supports the contention of the petitioner. There is no controversy of the present worth of the annuity at date of the contract or that of the payments received thereunder. Accordingly, we hold that petitioner sustained a loss in the taxable year in the amount of $9,184.56. The determination of the respondent is reversed.

Decision will be entered for the petitioner.

Marquette and Leech dissent.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not rise to argue the question, but I do desire to say that the committee concluded at least that through the purchase of annuities by very wealthy people there is an opportunity to escape the payment of income tax upon the money used for that purpose. We were advised that there had been abuses, and that the opportunity existed for considerable abuse.

I felt at the time, and now feel, that I should not like to broaden the shelter under which wealthy people may go along with those holding tax-exempt securities to escape liability for possible taxation by the Federal Government. It seems to me that a question of policy is involved. It may be, as said by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] who is an expert on this question, that the Government may not get any more money. Indeed, it is conceivable that it may not get quite so much money. I am not prepared to argue the point. It is unquestionably true however, that through investments in annuities it is quite possible for a man of large means to put himself in a position where, for a long period of years, possibly for all time, he will escape even the prospect of possible liability for taxes upon the money so invested.

I do not desire to discourage the purchase of annuities. I do not know a great deal about the subject, but I assume that it is a form of investment which perhaps ought to be encouraged rather than discouraged. At least, discouragement is not the purpose of the committee. The purpose of the committee was to prevent a widening of the shelter under which our citizens could go and escape all liability for Federal income tax by virtue of this peculiar form of investment. I call it "investment" for lack of a better term.

It may be that the limit on annuities which are exempted should be raised from $500, as fixed in the bill, so as to take care of the relatively small annuitants for whom investments had been made for the purpose of taking care of them in their advanced age, and so forth, as Senators have so forcefully pointed out.

Of course, I can very well see how the Supreme Court would properly hold that money invested in a home, which in fact pays no dividend or income to the owner of the home, cannot be considered for the purpose of assessing and collecting an income tax. That, however, is not this case. Beyond all doubt, when an insurance company sells its annuity and when the purchaser buys it, both of them contemplate a situation in which there will be an income in excess of the amount of money actually paid. There may not be. There may be a speculative element in the transaction, and it may be quite proper to say that until the full amount of the premium paid has been returned there is only a prospective profit, and no actual profit upon which the Government may legally or rightfully levy an income tax. Yet the nature of the transaction is such that it is entirely fair to say, in the case of the normal contract, which would run for its normal expectancy, the parties contemplate that there will be an accretion or income in excess of the actual sum of money paid.

[1] SEC. 202. (a) Except as hereinafter provided in this section, the gain from the sale or other disposition of property shall be the excess of the amount realized therefrom over the basis provided in subdivision (a) or (b) of section 204, and the loss shall be the excess of such basis over the amount realized.

That being true, it seems to me the tax that is here sought to be levied is legal; and it does not seem to me that the requirement that 3 percent of the premium be considered as gross income, and go into the taxpayer's gross income, from which he may make all kinds of deductions if he is entitled to them, is unfair or particularly harsh to the ordinary annuitant. If there are cases in which the tax runs into a very high percentage, then, as I have suggested, it might well be that the aggregate annuity received should exceed $500 per year. The amendment, of ccurse, does exempt from all taxation all annuities that do not aggregate more than $500 per annum.

It seems to me, however, that a sound principle of public policy is involved; and that principle is that whatever we may say about it, and however we may argue about it, we will not widen the shelter under which it is possible, at least, for a great many people to go and escape the possibility of tax upon a transaction which unquestionably contemplates, in the average and ordinary case, an element of profit or income.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield the floor. I merely wish to say that I am making this statement because it is necessary for me to leave the Chamber, and I desired to express myself on this particular question.

Mr. HEBERT. I was about to cite an illustration which is not unlike that which the Senator appears to have in mind.

Let us assume that a citizen subject to tax desires to invest $10,000, and he loans it to someone, payable back to him in 10 years, interest to be paid at the end of the 10 years. Can interest on that loan be anticipated for purposes of income tax?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly not; but I wish to make my position very plain. That is not what is done by an insurance company which writes an annuity policy. It figures that over the whole period of years there will be a slight increase or earning upon the premium paid; and while it may in its own mind, or as a matter of bookkeeping, defer the payment of any possible increase to the end of the period, it cannot actually do so.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator constantly reverts to the company that sells the annuity. I have repeatedly conceded that it has an income from those funds; but those funds are no longer the property of the annuitant, once they have been paid over to the company. They are the property of the company.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose we should tax those funds; does not the Senator believe that in every annuity thereafter written the company would see to it that the annuitant bore the tax?

Mr. HEBERT. Oh, that is something else!

Mr. GEORGE. No. I am getting back to the transaction. It is a transaction that contemplates a profit; and the profit is not deferred to the end of the contract, or until there has been a return of the amount of money paid, because if that were true the payments would not be divided into equal annual installments.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator overlooks the fact that if those funds were taxed in the hands of the insurance company, the tax on the insurance company would amount to about one eighth of 1 percent under existing law taxing the income of corporations—a wholly different proposal than the one we have under consideration.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that; but I am trying to illustrate to the Senator the element of investment involved in a contract of this kind by asking him a simple question. If the company selling the annuity were required to pay a tax, would it not in turn pass on that obligation to the annuitant?

Mr. HEBERT. But the insurance companies pay taxes.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, I understand; but the Senator knows that the insurance companies have been very liberally dealt with in the income-tax acts.

Mr. HEBERT. The insurance companies pay the taxes imposed upon them by the Congress, and they pay taxes on the excess interest earnings over the amounts required to maintain their reserves.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; and let me remind the Senator that the moral plea they always make is that the earnings upon their investments really accrue to the policyholders.

Mr. HEBERT. That is true.

Mr. GEORGE. It is true also of annuitants.

Mr. HEBERT. It is not always true. I was about to say that it is true of mutual companies.

Mr. GEORGE. It is true on their average transactions, and that is exactly why they have been dealt with most liberally by the Congress.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to say to the Senator that it is not true on the average. It is true only in case of a company operating on the mutual plan. It is not true in the case of a company operating for profit; so the Senator should make that distinction.

Mr. GEORGE. There is, of course, a distinction between the two classes of companies. Congress has dealt liberally with insurance companies, however, and it has done so upon the moral ground, upon the basis of the plea repeatedly advanced, that in the case of a mutual company it is operating for the benefit of its stockholders, of its beneficiaries, of those who are to receive the benefit of the contracts. It seems to me altogether outside the bounds of reason to claim that an annuity contract stands upon any different footing morally than an ordinary life-insurance contract. I understand the difference in the contracts, but both of them contemplate the normal transaction where there is an increase that will flow finally to the beneficiary of the contract in excess of the money actually paid; and if the Senator be correct this bill will not impose, in the long run, any greater hardship than is imposed by the present law. It will get no more money for the Government.

Mr. HEBERT. No, Mr. President; I said I thought the existing law would yield more revenue to the Government than the proposed amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly.

Mr. HEBERT. But the existing law will not impose a burden upon annuitants where it should not be placed, whereas the proposed change in the law will impose such a burden, because it assumes as income that which is not income, and taxes it as such.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there is no need to argue the point. I know, and I have the utmost confidence that the courts will be able to say that when an insurance company writes an annuity contract and when citizen A or B or C buys that contract, both of them, contemplating the contract that is about to be purchased, figure on an increase over and above the actual money outlay for that contract, and, therefore, that the Government may properly say it will consider a small percentage—3 percent, in this case—on the actual money spent for the contract as gross annual income, to be added to the income of the taxpayer for the purpose of taxation, if the particular taxpayer is liable to pay an income tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the clerk read an amendment which I intend to offer and which I ask to have printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 105, after line 11, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. Net losses of taxpayers engaged in agriculture: If for any taxable year or years beginning after December 31, 1931, and not after December 31, 1933, it appears upon the production of evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner that any taxpayer engaged in agriculture sustained a net loss as defined in section 117 of the Revenue Act of 1932, the amount or amounts thereof shall (except to the extent allowed as a deduction under the Revenue Act of 1932) be allowed as a deduction in computing net income for the first taxable year of such taxpayer beginning after December 31, 1933; the deduction in such cases to be made under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. As used in this section, the term "taxpayer engaged in agriculture" means only a taxpayer 75 percent or more of whose gross income for the taxable years involved was derived from agricultural operations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HEBERT. Did the Chair state that the question is on the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. HEBERT. May I ask what becomes of my amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Regardless of the result of the vote on the committee amendment, the Senator's amendment will be in order after that vote; but his amendment, being in the nature of a substitute for certain language on pages 15 and 16, will have to be considered last.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will state it.

Mr. FESS. I am confused as to the question. Is not the Hebert amendment an amendment to the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; it is a substitute proposing to strike out certain language on pages 15 and 16 and insert new matter.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is there any objection to perfecting the paragraph by adopting the committee amendment?

Mr. FESS. I do not think so.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if we are to proceed in this manner, apparently the only way of preserving some of the rights of annuitants who have turned over their property to the universities and hospitals is to assert them now. That is to say, if we are to follow the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] of proposing a change in the amount of the exemption, it would have to be proposed now, would it not? I ask that as a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Any amendment to the committee amendment would have to be offered now.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, Mr. President, I move to strike out "$500", in line 11, page 16, and to substitute therefor "$10,000."

Mr. HARRISON. Let us have a vote on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. HARRISON. I am about to suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President; but I will withhold that suggestion for a moment. Can we not have a unanimous-consent agreement that we will vote on this question without debate the first thing tomorrow?

Mr. HEBERT. So far as I am concerned, I have said all I expect to say about the subject. I cannot speak for other Members of the Senate who may desire to be heard tomorrow; but, so far as I am concerned, I shall have nothing further to say about it.

Mr. HARRISON. Before asking for such a unanimous-consent agreement, I may say that we have tried to show every degree of patience, and we have not gotten anywhere at all today. I know this is a rather important amendment, but the committees of both House and Senate gave it every consideration and are in agreement about it. If we can have a unanimous-consent agreement to vote without further debate the first thing upon convening tomorrow on this amendment, or any amendments that may be pending or that may be offered to it, I am perfectly willing not to have a quorum call tonight.

Mr. COUZENS. We could not agree to that, because we would have to have a quorum called anyway.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am still in confusion about the parliamentary situation. I see no particular reason for adopting the amendment offered by the Senator, provided the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island is to be voted on as a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that the committee amendment is an amendment to the language of the House text, by striking out a part of that language. The amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island is a substitute for the entire section, both the House text and the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. What the Senator from Rhode Island proposes to do is to go back to the present law.

Mr. HEBERT. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. What the committee expects to do is to put on a 3-percent tax.

Mr. FESS. If that be the case, I see no objection to adopting the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, and then adopting the substitute.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand, there is no objection to adopting the committee amendment, but we had reached a point where we were about to take a vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, which is a substitute.

Mr. FESS. I have no objection to fixing a time for a vote tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was putting the question on the committee amendment when the interruption occurred.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I feel perfectly certain that the Senators who side with the Senator from Rhode Island in this matter did not understand the effect of the question they were voting on. What the committee has done has been to introduce an exemption of $500, which the House did not have in its text. The committee has been more generous to annuitants than was the other House. Everyone, it seems to me, whatever may be his views about the contention of the Senator from Rhode Island, ought to be glad to see the committee amendment adopted. Then the real division will come over to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island to substitute the present law for the tax of 3 percent on annuities.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I so understand the parliamentary situation, and I have no objection to the vote being taken on the committee amendment. I did object to the vote being taken on the amendment which I had submitted until after a quorum call.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator object to the unanimous-consent request that at the convening of the Senate tomorrow the Senate shall, without further debate, vote on the amendment?

Mr. HEBERT. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. And any other amendment which may be offered to this provision, without further debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that on the convening of the Senate tomorrow there be a vote on the committee amendment——

Mr. HARRISON. No; the committee amendment has been agreed to.

Th PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment has not been agreed to. The Chair was putting the question on the committee amendment when the interruption came.

Mr. HARRISON. I heard the responses on the other side of the aisle, and I thought the amendment had been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A rising vote was being taken. If the Senator wants the vote completed, the Chair will put the question again.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that on the convening of the Senate tomorrow the Senate vote, without further debate, on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] and on any other amendment which may be offered to this section. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 4, 1934, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 3, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, with Mr. SABATH, Speaker pro tempore, in the chair.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, from whom cometh all goodness, wisdom, and mercy, as we realize our dependence on Thee, write in our hearts, more lasting than on the tables of stone, that which is above the value of wealth, ambition, or personal glory, namely, virtue, honesty, and integrity. O may we know that there is nothing in all the world warmer than love, purer than virtue, and stronger than faith. We pray, our Heavenly Father, that these graces may live and grow in all our daily conduct until they shall shed a telling influence along our pathway. Blessed Lord, Thou who art the sum of all things conceivable in gentleness and in sweetness, in purity and in truth, be a living power in our souls through faith and love, and unto Thee be praises in a world without end. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S.Con.Res. 12. Concurrent resolution to rescind the action of the Vice President and the Speaker in signing S. 2729, "An act to repeal an act of Congress entitled 'An act to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes', approved February 14, 1917, and for other purposes", and to enroll it with a correction.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. WALSH and Mr. BORAH members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments", for the disposition of useless papers in the Labor Department.

THE PROPOSED DESTRUCTION OF AMERICAN MARKETS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including the remarks of my colleague, Mr. KNUTSON, of Minnesota, who has left the city.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following remarks of Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON, of Minnesota:

In the pending legislation we are asked to repeal section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, which vests in Congress the power to lay import taxes. Under the bill now before the House Congress would surrender that power to the Executive, who, in his message to this body on March 2, announced that it was his purpose to negotiate trade treaties under this legislation that would stimulate foreign commerce. That is an objective we all are in sympathy with, but, in common with millions of my countrymen, I fear that any stimulation along that line would be enjoyed exclusively by the other fellow, and that we, as usual, would be left holding the sack.

If we enact this measure into law, we should make the job complete by also conferring the power to raise internal revenue and make appropriations. Then there will not even be an excuse for this rubber-stamp Congress remaining on the job and drawing pay for work that should be ours but is now being done by others to whom we have surrendered our responsibilities. Shades of Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt! All that now remains is to rewrite the National Anthem to have it conform to what is and not what was.
